Richard Caldwell, 26, of Charlotte, admitted to the hospital in September, 1965. He was charged with storebreaking, larceny and forgery. Hospital records show he was diagnosed as schiophrenic reactive.

George Moore, 18, of Fairfield, sentenced to four years in prison in March, 1964, from Buncombe County. He was charged with storebreaking, larceny and receiving. He was sent to Dorothea Dix in April, 1064, and diagnosed as schiophrenic reactive.

Lyndon Says U.S. Will Push NATO

WASHINGTON (AP) — Clashing with President Charles de Gaulle, President Johnson declared yesterday that America will push for a strong, unified Atlantic defense system with or without France.

"The United States is determined," Johnson said, "to join with 13 of her other allies to preserve and to strengthen the deterrent strength of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization."

Calling on De Gaulle for "consultaion, not isolation," Johnson held the way open for the 15th ally, France, "to return to the common task."

Johnson outlined the U. S. position in a major speech on the growing NATO crisis, delivered to senior foreign service officers at the State Department.

While the President did not once mention De Gaulle by name and used the word "France" only sparingly, the 15 - minute nationally broadcast and televised speech was clearly designed as a public presentation of the American position in the face of Paris' move to pull out of an integrated NATO.

De Gaulle says the North Atlantic Alliance formed in the shadow of the Soviet threat to Europe in 1949 is still acceptable but the need for an integrated NATO military structure under the alliance is past.

A strong advocate of national sovereignty, De Gaulle served notice this month that France will pull her forces out of NATO and that he wants NATO bases and headquarters off French soil unless put under French control.

Noting that "some say that new circumtances in the world today call for the dismantling of NATO," Johnson contended that:

—The experience of two world wars has shown that advance collective planning and organization by allies is needed for successful deterrence of an aggressor.

—Fragmenting the alliance now would dim the long-range prospects for arriving at a peaceful solution with the Communists for a general European settlement — "The reconciliation of Western Europe with the people of Eastern Europe."

Demons Select McCloskey As Head Basketball Coach

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Jack McCloskey, whose University of Pennsylvania basketball team won the Ivy League championship this year, was hired Wednesday to lead Wake Forest College out of the depths of the Atlantic Cost Conference.

McCloskey's selection was announced at a news conference by Wake Forest President Dr. Harold W. Tribble. Earlier Wednesday, the school's athletic council had met with McCloskey and then recommended to Tribble that he be hired.

McCloskey succeeds Jack Murdock, who took over the job late last Setpember when veteran coach Bones McKinney resigned unexpectedly because of poor health.

Murdock, who had been an assistant coach at Wake Forest since 1960, had an 8-18 overall record and was 4-10 in the conference, tying South Carolina and Virginia for sixth place. A victory over ACC champion Duke was one of the few high spots for the Deacons.

McCloskey, 40, had a 19-6 record at Penn this year, bringing his 10-year mark there to 146 - 105. The Quakers' Ivy Title this year was their first in 13 seasons.

He also has been coaching baseball at Penn, from where he received his bachelor's degree in 1948.

McCloskey, a native of Mahanoy City, Pa., began his college career at Pitt, but it was interrupted by service in the Navy officier training program during World War II. He went to Penn in 1943, playing football, basketball and baseball.

After the war he signed with the Philadelphia Athletics and played in the A's farm system and also in the Eastern professional basketball league.

Barragan led the way with 16 KA points while Billy Travis added 10, Cliff Butler 8 and Craig Allison 6. Bill Harrison had 10 for the Zetes. KA led by only 20-14 at the half, but poured it on in the second period to win easily.

SAE Blue I got home runs from Pope, Ancarrow and Anderson in their 8-6 victory over DU Blue I.

The Beta Bombers beat DKE White, 5-3. Thorn homered for DKE.

The ZBT Zooboys capitalized on a host of walks and errors to beat TEP, 10-6.

Brown In Old Style Leads Alumni Win

By GENE WHISNANT
DTH Sports Writer

As the Carolina lead began to diminish, number 11, the smallest player on the basketball court began to eat up the time to preserve the Tar Heel victory.

He dribbled around and through the Duke Blue Devils. With less than ten seconds left in the game and a safe 95-86 lead he moves toward the center jump circle and unleased a hook shot that did not touch anything but the bottom of the net as it switched through to give the Tar Heels a 97 to 86 lead and climax a game that would have been almost dull without his play-making.

The game was the second annual Alumni Basketball Game between past Carolina and Duke stars held Tuesday night at the Duke Indoor Stadium for the benefit of Durham Academy.

The player wearing number 11 was Larry Brown, star of the championship United States 1965 Olympic team. Larry who led the Carolina teams of 1962 and 1963 has just completed his first year in the coaching ranks with the Carolina freshman team who had a 14-1 record.

The fans seemed to enjoy the game even though it was not a very close one. They seemed to enjoy it in that each player brought back memories of past great seasons.

Carolina's Dick Kepley, the 6-9 center who was a tri-captain of the 1961 team, provided most of the offense for the Tar Heels scoring 26 points. Dick got several points on his big hook shot which looked as perfect as ever. Kepley has probably been practicing it at Mt. Airy High School where he is now head basketball coach.

Kepley got scoring help from Larry Brown with 14 points, Charlie Shaffer with 14, and Yogi Poteet with 12.

Jay Buckley, the 6-10 1963 Duke graduate, and Phi Allen, a senior on this years Blue Devil squad, led the Duke scoring attack with 24 and 18 points respectively.

Art Heyman, collegiate Player of the Year in 1963, coached the Blue Devil Alumni and unannounced to the public played most of the game but was defiinitely off his 1963 pace with only 5 points.

Howard Hurt, the 1960 Duke captain, hit the first bucket of the game after Burl Ives screen star and folk finger tossed up the first ball.

After Larry Brown hit two free throws at 16:50 to give Carolina the lead at 10-8, the Tar Heels held the lead the rest of the way.

The first half ended with the Tar Heels ahead 53-36. They held 19 point leads several times in the half.

In the second half, Carolina built up a 21 point lead at times but Duke cut it to nine at 2:30 when Brown began eating up time with his ball handling.

Lee Shaffer, 1960 All-American and 1961 NBA Rookie of the year, coached the Carolina alumni.

Shaffer started Brown and Kepley along with Doctor Danny Lotz of the 1957 NCAA championship team, Bob Bennett of this year's squad who hit 8 points, and Charlie Shaffer.

Also seeing action for the Tar Heels were Poteet who was Brown's back-court mate, Jim Huddock who is a Carolina dental student and 1962 star, Jim Smithwick and Johnny Yokley from this year's squad, and Art Katz.

Duke started Buckley along with Buzzy Harrison who scored 15, Ron Herbster, Doug Kistler who hit 10, and Howard Hurt.

Besides Allen, Jay Beale, Scott Williamson, Bill Zimmer, and Heyman saw action for the Blue Devils.

The action was fast and the offense better than expected, since a lack of practice can take the sharpness off shooting.

Brown was the main reason the action was so fast. He led the Tar Heels attack—fast breaking on a almost ever occasion.

Once he came down court carried the ball around his back and hit Charlie Shaffer for the lay-up.

Several times he led the break and hit Kepley or Bennett with behind-the-back passes.

Footballer Jim Vota Dies

"He was a fine young man and he didn't give up until the last moment," said a sad Bob Thalman, North Carolina assistant football coach. "All of us will miss Jimmy Vota."

Vota, a 195-pound fullback from Dillonvale, Ohio, was a standout for the 1964 freshman team at UNC. Last summer he complained of feeling weak and was hospitalized. The diagnosis: leukemia. Jimmy died at a Columbus hospital last Sunday.

Vota wasn't in uniform but he played an emotional role in Carolina's biggest victory last fall — the 14-3 conquest of Ohio State. Jimmy sat on the bench and Tar Heel players heard his cheers. In the dressing room, they presented him the game ball.

Not too long ago, the 19-year-old Vota learned of his condition. He was disturbed but he was determined to fight. He told his mother recently, "Keep that trunk of mine packed. I'm going to get well and I'm returning to Carolina.' '

Funeral services will be held this morning. Head Coach Jim Hickey and Thalman plan to attend.

CHEROKEE NOTION

North Carolina's Cherokee Indians once believed that stroke and heart attack were caused by the raccoon spirit.

BUTCH WATTS, UNC's second baseman, rounds first base on his way to a two-run home run in the third inning of yesterday's game with Springfield. The homer did little good, however, as the Tar Heels lost their second of the year 8-6

Robinson 'A-head' In AL

By MIKE RATHET

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Baltimore's Frank Robinson, an American Leaguer after 10 seasons in the majors, admits the pitchers will have the advantage over him at the start of the season.

But he's counting on having one big advantage — his head.

It'll be out there, right over the plate.

"That's got to be a new experience for them," said Robinson. "With the exception of, maybe, Minnie Minoso, most of the pitchers in this league have never pitched against a guy who leans out over the plate as much as I do."

Robinson, who led the National League in various categories as a lifetime .303 hitter with the Cincinnati Reds, almost invariably led the league in the number of times he was hit by a pitched ball because of his unusual stance.

Last year he was hit 18 times — leading the league for the sixth time — and brought his major league total to 118. Oddly, Robinson first adopted his lean-over-the-plate stance as a defensive weapon when he came up to the majors in 1956.

"I knew I would be inexperienced compared to the pitchers I would be facing," Robinson explained. "I felt by moving closer to the plate I would them the inside and I could protect the outside. And it worked, so I've never really changed."

Despite the advantage of worrying the pitcher, Robinson feels the pitcher has the advantage when a new hitter comes into the league, at least until the regular season gets underway.

Hanburger Aids Football Drills

Chris Hanburger, a 210 - pound linebacker for the Washington Redskins of the NFL, will assist in coaching the University of North Carolina football team in spring drills now underway.

"Hanburger is taking some special courses at the University," said Coach Jim Hickey of the Tar Heels, "and we feel real fortunate in having him as a special adviser. He was a tremendous player here and all the kids have the greatest respect for him."

Hanburger will concentrate on handling the linebackers with the permanent varsity staff. He made All - Atlantic Coast Conference here two years (1963-64) and served as co-captain his senior season. He will return to the Redskins next fall.

Planning for the future?

Let us offer a suggestion.

The book business is short of men—good men—in almost all areas. Right now, there are good openings all over, in publishing, editorial work, sales, promotion, and retail sales.

Interested? Good! The chances for getting rich are not what they might be in other areas. They compare with teaching, say. But there's something new every day. Something interesting. And the feeling that perhaps this is better than selling nylons all day.

Still interested? Okay, now, how do you get these jobs? With experience, education and ambition. And assuming you have the desire and the education, where do you get the experience?

That's where we come in.

The Intimate, over the years, has trained many young men and women for positions in the book game. It's surprising what two or three years' experience can do for your job opportunities when you finish school. And you earn a bit while you're learning and while you're finishing your schooling.

After your graduation, we help you find a good job—and if you're really good, we keep you ourselves, if you like.

It's a good racket, we think. It takes a particular sort of person, of course. A certain attitude that's hard to define. And it takes training.

Right now, we have openings for two staffers. We prefer people who will be here for two years or so, at least, including summers. We prefer people who just might be interested in finding out if they'd like to come into the book business after college.

Think it over. If you like the idea, come in and talk to our Mr. Kuralt.

It could be the chance to get in on a profitable and enjoyable career.

Pan Hel Votes For Deferred Rush For Fall

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

Pan Hellenic Council voted unanimously yesterday afternoon to abolish freshman rush. A program of deferred rush for sophomores will be instituted next year.

The choice presented before council last week was that of keeping rush as it is, abandoning freshman rush, or instigating a promisee rush.

Promisee rush is a program found to be successful at Vanderbilt in which freshmen are allowed to go through rush and would be affiliated with a sorority, but are not trained as pledges nor are required to take part in sorority activites.

The Faculty Review Board, sponsoring the sororities to the adminsitration, found the promisee rush unacceptable.

Dorsy McDevitt, assistant to the dean of women, told the council, "The board thinks freshman are not settled enough their first year in college to make a decision on sororities."

A motion was also before the council to rush before orientation, but it, too, was not okayed by the administration.

Kelly Roberts, newly installed president of Pan Hel presented two proposals to instigate freshman interest in sororities. Two teas to be given in the sorority houses each semester and a Pan Hel program were both passed by the council for next year.

The newly installed members of the Pan Hel Council are Merry Swanso and Nita Wilkinson, Delta Delta Delta; Carol Cantwell and Kahty Matthews, Alpha Delta Pi; Jean Miller and Karen Viall, Pi Phi; Gusty Russel and Louise Clark, Chi Omega; Carolyn Harrell and Linda Jenkins, Phi Mu; Charlotte Beavers, Kappa Kappa Gamma; and Jan Wuehreman and Janie Lowery, Kappa Delta.

Vacation In Sun Under New Plan

By SOPHIE PARKER
Special to the DTH

If you've been dreaming about Spring Vacation under Florida sun but "haven't got the funds," you may be in for a pleasant surprise.

Now anyone from ages 12 to 21 can fly at half-fare by taking advantage of the reduced rate plan on scheduled flights of all major airlines except Piedmont Airlines.

This means that you can fly to Miami Beach, Fla., tourist class round trip for $45.50 plus tax instead of the $91.00 regular fare. The reduced price of the flight costs only one dollar more than round trip bus fare to Miami.

Applications for Youth Fare identification cards may be obtained at the Continental Travel Agency in Chapel Hill, at any ticket office or by writing to the specific airlines office.

To be eligible for the reduced rate, students must pay the three dollar fee for the card and give proof of age by means of a birth certificate, driver's license, draft card or any other legal proof of age.

The only hitch in the plan is that passengers with half-fare tickets can board the plane only if space is available on the flight after reserved seats are filled and military stand-bys are seated.

However, "students have a good chance to get seats . . . there are always two or three last-minute cancellations of reservations," according to Circle Tours, Inc. of Durham.

The half-fare policy is applicable throughout the year except on April 7 and certain days later to be announced during Thanksgiving and Christmas vacations.

Eastern Airlines who announced their new policy on Feb. 4, says that their company is making this offer to encourage students to fly, thereby increasing their market.

European Student Jobs

Grand Duchy of Luxembourg —Every student in America can get a summer job in Europe and a travel grant by applying directly to the European headquarters of the American Student Information Service in Luxembourg. Jobs are much the same as student summer work in the U. S. with employers offering work periods ranging from three weeks to permanent employment.

Lifeguarding, office work, resort - hotel jobs, factory, construction, camp counseling and farm work are only a few categories to be found among the 15,000 jobs ASIS still has on file. An interesting summer pastime not found in America is tutoring. Numerous well-to-do European families are inviting American college students to spend the summer with them and teach their children English.

Wages range to $400 a month, and in most cases neither previous experience nor knowledge of a foreign language is required.

Students interested in working in Europe next summer may write directly to Dept. VII, ASIS, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, enclosing $2 for the ASIS 36-page booklet.

IFC Court, Att'y General Still Investigating German's Trouble

The investigation being conducted by the IFC Court and the Attorney General of the activities of German's weekend is expected to be completed by the end of this week.

John Ingram, Attorney General of the Student Government, said the investigation is still being made and no charges have been made yet.

The incidents of German's weekend under investigation include the breakage of car windows from flying bottles and the extensive damage done to the Pi Lam house.

Ingram is now gathering statements made by persons who were in some way connected with the activities being investigated.

Any charges brought against individuals will be tried by the Men's Council.

If any fraternity house is charged as a whole with committing the actions being investigated, it will be tried by the IFC Court.

Duke Prof Says Sex Laws Vague

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Present laws dealing with sexual deviation are inadequate, according to the views presented at a panel discussion in the Law School yesterday afternoon.

Panelist Robinson Everette, a Duke law professor, discussed the problems of enforcing the present laws. He cited the vagueness of the present law along with the extent to which it serves as a deterent of homosexuality or other deviance.

"There is a wide spectrum of laws dealing with this problem," he said. "Punishment ranges from the death sentence to no sentence at all in places where it is not a violation."

Norman Pomrenke, assistant director of the Institute of Government, said the problem of punishment depends on this "area policing."

"Each community develops a level of enforcement which it wants. It also develops a level of tolerance."

Superior Court Judge Allen Gwyn said enforcement of laws dealing with sexual deviation cause frustration in two ways.

"First, there is frustration for those who are to be tried. Second, there is frustration for those of us who try them," he said.

"This is caused by the divergence of laws dealing with sexual deviation."

Gwyn cited the evolution of North Carolina law as an example. He said the punishment beginning in 1837 was death. The law was changed in 1869 to provide for a prison term ranging from five to 60 years.

In 1965, the law was amended again to provide for either a prison term or a fine to be determined at the discretion of the judge.

Gwyn said laws in neighboring states which differ widely with the North Carolina law. He said the maximum prison term in Virginia until the 1950's was 3 years. In Georgia, one may receive life imprisonment.

"Courts have to follow the legislative mandate," Gwyn said.

Lee Bounds, director of the N. C. Prisons Dept. and chairman of a legislative commission to study N. C. laws, discussed the problem of dealing with deviants after they receive a sentence.

"Guards cannot see everything which goes on in a prison. We can't assure a man a night's sleep."

He said one of the problems in N. C. prisons is the construction plan. He said today's prisons were designed for the days when prisoners were chained in their bed each night.

"We are attempting to break up dormitories," Bounds said.

Dr. Myron Liptzin, UNC instructor of psychiatry, said sexual deviants are not anti-social or violent as the public feels they are.

"They are timid, non - violent and sick," he said. "Our knowledge in the field is limited. We see only a minute sample and have a problem in identifying them."

Rev. Harry Smith, Presbyterian campus pastor, said the law fails to distinguish between deviance involving two consenting adults and an adult which forces himself on a minor.

The panel discussion was moderated by Daniel Pollit, UNC law professor.

'Powell Is Best Man'

Pepper Gives Votes To SP In Run-Off

By GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

Sonny Pepper, independent candidate for president of the Student Body, yesterday publicly endorsed Bob Powell for Student Body President in Tuesday's run-off election.

In a statement to The Daily Tar Heel he said, "I first want to express publicly my sincere thanks and appreciation to everyone who supported me last Tuesday. I can't emphasize enough, however, the importance of the run - off election, particulary since so much is at stake in choosing the leader of student government for next year.

"A number of people have urged me to remain aloof from the run - off campaign and not take a position on the candidates running, and normally I wouldn't feel compelled to actively involve myself in an election in which I was not a candidate.

"I have worked in student government for four years, however, and have contributed a great deal of time and energy, to improve that institution. As a result I have more than just an average interest and concern for the success of next year's student government.

"Both parties in the campaign have proposed a number of excellent ideas and programs for next year which will form the basis of a good administration. But my major concern is with the man who is going to be elected, not the party, and after considering both candidates carefully, I feel strongly that Bob Powell is the best man to lead student government next year.

"Both candidates are personal friends of mine, and I have worked with them for the past several years in a number of different areas. I favor not only Bob's experience and leadership abilities, but also his overall understanding of what student government is and should be.

"I do want to make it clear that this is not, an endorsement for the Student Party or against the University Party, but rather, an endorsement based solely on the comparative merits of the two individuals involved, as I feel it should be."

Pepper polled over 900 votes in Tuesday's election. Powell received over 2,100 votes and O'Toole got over 1,800.

A protest has been filed with the elections board concerning Tuesday's election for legislator in Men's District Five.

The protest was filed by Joe Chandler, an incumbent UP legislator in the district.

Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hayes said the protest was filed because Chandler was listed as an SP candidate instead of a UP candidate.

Purdy Endorses O'Toole For Presidential Run-Off

By GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

Bill Purdy, vice - president elect of the student body, yesterday publicly endorsed Teddy O'Toole for Student Body President in Tuesday's run-off election.

In a statement to The Daily Tar Heel Purdy said, "I want to thank all the people who supported me and express my appreciation for the help they gave me. I hope I am able to vindicate their trust in me. I am whole - heartedly supporting Teddy O'Toole for student body president.

"During the campaign it became apparent to me that Teddy is not only the most capable candidate but the sincerest person I know in wanting to work for the good of the student body. I urge all those who supported me to put their full support behind Teddy O'Toole. I hope those who favored the amendment to put president and vice president on the slate system will uphold the principle involved here.

To those who were against the amendment I hope they will consider the best efficiency and well being of student government which as we have seen this year required the closest cooperation between the president and vice president."

Purdy, UP, won the vice presidency by an overwhelming majority over Don Wilson in Tuesday's election.

Miller Wins Award

The Rev. E. Thomas Miller, associate campus pastor at the Presbyterian Church, has been selected as a Tower Room Scholar at Union Theological Seminary in Virginia in Richmond. He will be in residence from Monday to April 8.

The Tower Room program gets pastors away from the schedules which make systematic study difficult to achieve. Each of the group of seven to ten scholars engages in his own intensive study in the "Tower Room" of the Seminary library.

Each day they meet with a faculty member to discuss recent developments in theology and the world, particularly as those changes affect the pastor and his effective ministry.

'66 Orientation Staff

The campus orientation commission announced yesterday the following people have been appointed to serve on the 1966 orientation staff. The new members are Elder Witt, Bill Bell, Bob Coleman, Ann Jamieson, Bob Shepherd, Taylor Branch, Mike Menius, Julia Knott, Nancy Gayle Young and Priscilla Hager.

Also Hugh Saxon, Patty Delaney, Bill Findlay, Bill Bowman, Alice Graham, Sue Nottingham, Billy Jarmon, Jed Dietz, Penny Cromartie, Charlie Evans, Birch Lipford, Gene Matthews and Faith Fogle.

The first staff meeting will be held tonight at 7 in Graham Memorial. All new members of the commission must be present.

Bob Wilson, chairman of the commission announced interviews for orientation counselors for next fall will begin Monday and run through Friday. Interested students should sign up in Graham Memorial.

Miller's Parents So Poor He Was 'Made In Japan'

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Roger Miller's wife has coined a word for her husband — realness. Not only is this performer "real" but successful. He received so many Grammies (the highest award a singer can receive) from the National Academy for Recording Arts and Science that he needed help carrying them off the stage last year.

Miller will be at Carolina next Tuesday for an 8 p.m. concert in Carmichael Auditorium singing the songs that have made him famous including "Chug a Lug," "Dang Me," "Doo-Wack-A-Doo," and "King of the Road."

This performer has the kind of background story that press agents go wild over. As Miller puts it, "My parents were so poor I was made in Japan."

After his parents' death he lived with an uncle in Oklahoma. He wrote his first song at six and started doing odd jobs to save money for a guitar.

Miller says he was educated in the "Crash of 1952." After driving a jeep in the Korean War he turned to driving a firetruck in Amarillo, Texas. Then he headed to Nashville where he became a success—as a bellhop.

He joined a traveling musical show and then wrote his first hit, "Invitation to the Blues."

Then this versatile entertainer began playing drums for Faron Young, and by this time people like Andy Williams and Patti Page and Burl Ives were all singing his songs and making them hits.

Local Singing Sensations Will Hold Free Concert

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Two UNC students and a UNC graduate who have been signed to a five-year recording contract with Mercury Records will appear in a free concert in Graham Memorial Lounge tonight at 8.

It will be the first local appearance of "The Virginians", made up of juniors Bill Swofford and Bob Hinkle and Danny Shepherd, a UNC graduate.

The first 45 rpm record of the pop vocal group, "Carnival", will be released in early April.

The Virginians will appear on the Bob Hope Show to be held in Raleigh April 1.

Swofford is a Morehead Scholar from North Wilkesboro majoring in RTVMP. Hinkle is from Asheville and is also an RTVMP major. Both are members of Chi Phi fraternity.

Shepherd was a member of ATO while at Caolina. He is now working toward his graduate math degree at Wake Forest College.

The group was formed on campus last school year to sing folk music. During Easter vacation last year the group went to New York City and appeared at the Bitter End and at Gerde's Folk City.

After an audition for the International Talent Association they were signed to a seven week tour of Canada for last summer.

By the end of last summer, the group had changed its musical material so that their performances featured pop music, Broadway hits and folk songs.

Many of their musical numbers are their own compositions.

UNC's Keith McClelland and Vic Lipscomb will accompany The Virginians on the drum and bass in tonight's concert.

Tonight's one and a half hour program will consist of 20 songs including "Daydream," "Homeward Bound" and "Soon It's Going to Rain."

Rev. Richardson Talks On Myth

The Very Reverand Alan Richardson, Dean of York, will tackle the perennial problem of Myth and its relation to religion when he speaks April 18 in the Carolina Symposium.

Few would question Dean Richardson's qualifications to speak on the topic, Myth and the Supernatural, "Man's attempt to 'explain' the Absolute.

"Professor Alan Richardson is a theologian whose praise is (or deserves to be) in all churches on account of both the books he has written and those he has edited," the editor of Theology once wrote.

As one of the foremost scholars of the modern church, he has written several books on the conflict between faith and reason in Chrstian Theology. After receiving his M. A. from the University of Liverpool, he became Intercollegiate Secretary for the Student Christian Movement, serving at the same time as curate at St. Savior and their as an assistant chaplain in Liverpool Cathedral.

Richardson received his Doctor of Divinity from Oxfordshire and as chaplain at Ripon Hall in Oxford from 1931-1933.

In 1934 he was a tutor in Jesus College of Oxford. After serving as Vicar of Cambridge in Northumberland from 1934 to 1938 and as Study Secretary to the Student Chrstian Movement from 1938 to 1943, he accepted the position of Sixth Canon of Durham Cathedral.

While Canon of Durham Cathedral, he wrote Preface to Bible Study, Christian Apologetics, The Biblical Doctrine of Work, and Genesis I-IX.

In 1953 he accepted a Professorship to the University of Mottingham. There he wrote The Gospel According to St. John, An Introduction to the Theology of the New Testament, The Bible in an Age of Science, and History Sacred and Profane (1964).

While at the University of Nottingham, he also served as an Honorary Canon at Derby Cathedral.

Chug-A-Lug Your Way To Roger Miller

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Steve Kropelnicke downed five big mugs of cider yesterday in a last ditch effort to come from behind and capture the Roger Miller "Chug-A-Lug" contest.

Kropelnicke, who consumed a total of two-and-a-half quarts of apple cider, opened his throat and let slide the fifth 16-ounce cup of cider in a run-off between the three 3.8 second chuggers.

"Uuuurrrrrp," Kropelnicke said after his victory.

The two other 3.8ers were Larry Modlin, whose first attempt took five seconds, and Richard Irving, whose two earlier tries took six and 4.5 seconds.

In the girls' division Jan Wuehrmann drank a cup of cider in 14 seconds flat to win two free tickets to the Roger Miller concert Tuesday in Carmichael Auditorium.

Second and third in the girls' contest were Sherry O'Donnell at 22.5 seconds and Miriam Dorsey at 28 seconds.

A winners got two tickets to the show, and Kropelnicke and Miss Weuhermann each got a Roger Miller album, compliments of the Record Bar. The contest was sponsored by Graham Memorial.

Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont and Student Government Finance Secretary Mrs. Frances Sparrow were the official judges. The contest took place on the sidewalk outside Graham Memorial.

Kropelnicke, a sophomore from Lake Texaway, started late in the contest. His first time at the table he dribbled and was disqualified.

Not content to see his near-miss drowned by faster chuggers who weren't so sloppy, he came back and guzzled the cider in four seconds.

Still not satisfied, Kropelnicke tried again and dribbled again. The contest was winding to a close, the girls had already finished, and Kropelnicke still wasn't ready to quit.

There was a lull in the crowd. Someone took the needle off the scratchy Roger Miller record of "Chug-A-Lug." Kropelnicke stepped up, said a prayer for his intestines, and swallowed his fourth mug in 3.8 seconds — tying for first place.

The crowd cheered. A few seconds later, during the run-off, Kropelnicke downed his fifth mug in a triple playoff to win the grand prize.

The contest had more than 50 entrants. Chief Beaumont got things started by drinking the first mug of cider. His time was 14.5 seconds.

Vance Furr, a persistent contestant, tried three times. The first time he couldn't do better than seven seconds. The next time he complained about a hair in his cider, and the third time he stole the cider without even trying.

GALLANT ATTEMPT—DTH Secretary Carol Gallant takes a turn in Thursday's GM sponsored "chug-a-lug" contest. She took 40 seconds to down the cider — 36 off the best time.—DTH Photos by Jock Lauterer.

'Shape Up Or Ship Out'

CINCINNATI (AP) —Youngsters at a grade school in suburban Wyoming didn't do any picketing today of the school lunchroom in their protest of the quality of food being served.

That was the word from the school but there was no definite explanation as to the reason.

There seemed to be an idea, however, that parents of the youngsters didn't care much for it and the accompanying publicity. And, of course, the weather may have had something to do with it. The temperatures was in the low 30s with some snow flurries.

Yesterday, the youngsters, led by six-year-old Steven Rodgers paraded with signs saying such things as "Shape It Up, Or Ship It Out"—meaning the food.

Steven's mother, Mrs. J. C. Rodgers, said, "I think most of the parents wish their children weren't involved."

She added, "I still can't believe Steven is the ringleader."

Mrs. Rodgers said she hadn't heard much about the quality of the food because her children go home for lunch most of the time and she said she hadn't heard of the plans until the picketing had started.

Superintendent Harold Bush was reluctant to talk at all today about the affair, saying, "I don't want to be quoted about anything."

Yesterday, however, he said, "The food isn't really that bad. We expect this all to die down when a few cases of spring fever subside."

The weather today was not conductive to spring fever.

Proposed Judicial Changes

FOURTH IN A SERIES

Concern with judicial reform has had its ups and downs this year, but enough interest has been generated to get some proposals for constitutional changes on paper at last.

Lengthy suggestions for changes in the powers of Student Legislature, especially in the area of reorganizing the student court system, were introduced at last week's SL meeting. The bill is now in Committee and is not expected to be acted on before the just-elected legislators take office.

New regulations concerning the judicial system are included in the proposals.

Before these constitutional amendments are approved by SL and the student body (in a referendum), the proposals must be openly and thoroughly discussed. As the groundwork for such discussion, the proposed amendment concerning the judiciary is reprinted below.

JUDICIARY

Section 1. Student Responsibility. It shall be the responsibility of every student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill while within the university community or while present at an organized student function:

a. To obey the Honor Code prohibiting lying, stealing, and cheating, and to report any possible violation of the Honor Code of which he has knowledge;
b. To obey the Campus Code by conducting himself or herself as a gentleman or lady, and, insofar as it may be appropriate, to see that his fellow students do likewise, and
c. To obey such other duly enacted codes and rules as may be established by the constitutionally established legislative bodies.

Section 2. Judicial Power. The judicial power of the student body shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Student Legislature may establish from time to time.

Section 3. Supreme Court.

a. The Supreme Court shall be composed of a Chief Justice and four associate justices appointed by the President of the Student Body and confirmed by the Student Legislature. No person shall be a member of the Supreme Court while an officer, or while a member of an agency or organization, whose actions might be subject to review by the court. The member of the Supreme Court shall serve during good behavior for the duration of their enrollment at the University.
b. The Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction in controversies concerning executive and legislative action raising questions of law arising under this Constitution or laws enacted under its authority.
c. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts in cases where error of law, under this Constitution or laws enacted under its authority, is alleged to have occurred.

Section 4. Rights Guaranteed Defendant. A defendant before an inferior court exercising original jurisdiction shall be guaranteed:

a. The right to seventy-two hours notice, prior to the trial, of the charges against him, the composition of the court, and his rights under this Constitution and the laws enacted in pursuance thereof;
b. The right to summon material student witnesses and evidence in the possession of students;
c. The right to summon a reasonable number of character witnesses;
d. The right to disqualify members of the court on the showing of possible prejudice;
e. The right to a closed trial upon request;
f. The right to a public trial upon request, under such exceptions and regulations as may be established by law;
g. The right to a separate trial upon request;
h. The right to an active defense;
i. The right to the assistance of defense counsel selected from the student body under such exceptions as may be established by law;
j. The right to be present during the presentation of material evidence and witnesses and to question and impeach said evidence and witnesses;
k. The right to be presumed innocent and to be acquitted unless proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt;
l. The right to be convicted only upon a two-thirds vote of the court;
m. The right to be suspended only upon a two-thirds vote of the court; and
n. The right, upon acquital, to be free from retrial by a student court for the same offense."

Section 2. Directions to Elections Board. The Elections Board shall present to the student body for its ratification, on March 22, 1966, the aforesaid constitution amendment as proposed by Section I of this resolution, and said amendment shall be ratified or rejected in its entirety.

Section 3. Legislative Intent. The student Legislature takes legislative notice of Article VII, Section 2 of the Student Constitution in proposing this amendment. All courts now operative shall continue in existence and shall operate under existing law until the Student Legislature enacts such laws as it shall deem necessary and proper for the execution and institution of the aforesaid constitutional amendment.

Remember The Newspapers

Anyone connected with a newspaper, even a college newspaper, had to stop and think for a little while when the news came this week of the planned merger of three New York newspapers. The announcement spotlighted the continuing contraction of daily papers, especially in the major cities.

The three newspapers involved have all been around for a long time. The New York Herald Tribune was created by a merger in 1924. The World - Telegram was the product of a merger in 1931. The Sun was picked up in 1950. The Journal - American came from a merger of two Hearst papers in 19.

The names that the papers carry, of course, go back much further. Men like Greeley, Hearst and Pulitzer are bound up in their history. In fact, the great irony of the merger is that it will bring together the papers of William Randolph Hearst and Joseph Pulitzer, the archenemies of the yellow journalism days of the 1890's.

It was Horace Greeley's Tribune that issued the cry, "On To Richmond!" in the early days of the Civil War. Charles A. Dana's Sun published the still - reprinted editorial, "Yes, Virginia, There Is a Santa Claus." Pulitzer, and, especially, Hearst have been given much of the credit or blame for triggering the Spanish - American War.

These reveries may not mean much to the average person. Nevertheless, the merger has significance for him, too. The newspaper indstry, like, say, the automobile industry, is a part of the American scene. What happens to any part of this scene affects the whole. Like the automotive industry, the newspaper industry is contracting. Like the Kaiser, the Packard and the Edsel, many newspapers have vanished. Now one more New York paper is gone.

The contraction is far from complete. The trend is unmistakably toward single - ownership cities or, at best, one morning and one afternoon paper under separate ownerships. The day of direct competition, except in a few instances, is over. New York, which had 12 papers in 1930, now has five; and it remains to be seen whether the merger can save the Herald Tribune, caught in a losing fight between the Times and the Daily News.

The reduction in the number of papers puts added resonsibility on both the readers and the publishers who remain. The readers now have fewer versions of the news and fewer editorial viewpoints to choose from. They must be more critical of what they have. If there is only one editorial stand to read, the reader must examine that stand closely. He will no longer have opposing opinions to compare with it. He will have to rely more on radio, television and magazines to supplement his newspapers.

The newspaper publishers gain added wealth and power from the elimination of competition. In return, they must strive harder to be fair. They cannot slant their news coverage; there will be no competitor to slant it in the other direction. They should continue to present a strong editorial policy, but they should allow opposing viewpoints a forum through columns and letters.

A monopoly newspaper can be pretty much what its publisher wants it to be. Starting a new paper in competition to an established one is such an expensive proposition that it is generally not feasible. A monopoly publisher should accept this responsibility and make his paper a good one. If he is too lazy to keep up his paper's standards, the readers should voice their displeasure. Perhaps prolonged criticism can force a change. If not, the reader will have to rely on other sources for information. The other newspapers are almost all gone.

Maupin Presents Misleading Picture Of Faculty Members

By THOMAS ROBBINS

Armistead Maupin's "Reddi - righteous resignation form" is clever and funny, however, it embodies a misleading stereotype of the radical faculty member. The stereotype goes something like this: These faculty members do little for the University (they're assistant graders), yet they demand that the administration cater to their every leftist whim.

The resignation talk is a big bluff. (The only alternative to U.N.C. being a job at Joan Baez's School of Non - Violence), and is significant merely as a way of expectorating on the hand that feeds them.

Possibly Mr. Maupin's article arose partially in connection with a letter published in the Tar Heel by a certain faculty member, wherein he stated that he might resign if the administration censored another Speaker. Taking this particular faculty member (whom I'm not naming) as an example, let's check the accuracy of the stereotype.

Professor X is not an assistant grader, he teaches four courses a year (six counting the summer terms). He does not research Medicare among the M'Bwatzes, but the effects of a college education on occupational mobility. (The job market for college grads and similar trivial, irrelevant and esoteric subjects.)

I do not know what Mr. Maupin has against "commentators" but Professor X does not deliver himself of a periodic bombast in the Tar Heel or any other paper, nor, to my knowledge, has he ever been involved in picketing or any other demonstrative trouble - making. He does, however, have offers from institutions as excellent if not more so than this one.

One does not have to have a yen for martyrdom to figure that, all other things being nearly equal, a free atmosphere is pleasanter than a less - than free one.

It is my theseis that the real message of Mr. Maupin's satire is not only that the faculty cease being pseudo-martyrs for free speech, but that they should become real martyrs to fundamentalist education. Academics tend to like freedom because they don't get very much money. If a potential academic goes into business or advertising he will receive a higher salary, but he will not be able to choose his own research topics and in general to call his own shots.

Moreover, his freedom of expression may be considerably more circumscribed and his life - style and socializing prescribed by company mores. On the other hand, as an academic he gets paid less but enjoys more personal, professional and intellectual freedom. This freedom becomes a sort of substitute for a big salary, attracting to academic life persons willing to sacrifice money for diminished restraints.

Those who criticize the concept of academic freedom on the grounds that it denotes some sort of special privielge granted exclusively for academics are missing the point. Academic freedom is only for academics and operates as a sort of implicit supplement to their meagre salaries.

Consequently if we continue on our present road to becoming the last outpost of educational bigotry we will be allowing other places to outbid us in all - important salary supplements. The best minds will then go elsewhere, and we'll be left with an "also - ran" faculty. All of which gets to the big point, if an equally prestigous institution offers one an equal salary, why stay in Redneckville?

"Redneckville?" Mr. Maupin may have felt that he was ridiculing paranoid exaggeration when he had his reddi - resigner denounce "vile, ignorant, race - baiting Southerners." In point of fact, there are too many vile, ignorant rednecks around.

When, at the Aptheker outing, Paul Dickson announced that the authoritarian atmosphere has hastened the departure of the Chairman of the Slavic Department, the announcement was greeted with hoots and comments such as "HAH, HAH, TOO BAD FOR THE SLAVS," and "SLAVIC? ?" AIN'T THAT ONE O THEM FURRIN LANGUAGES?"

What kind of intellectual atmosphere is this? Mr. Maupin is asking the faculty to stay here and martyr themselves in behalf of the authoritarian "educators" who banned Aptheker and Wilkinson and the Maupinesque "students," most of whom lie under a tree all day swigging white lighting and spitting tobacco and occasionally bestirring themselves to lynch an atheist.

With the possible exception of an anthropologist, why would any faculty member oot to stay in Redneckville if he can teach at a real university?

Contribute To Wawer Effort

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States.

Mah fellow Americans.

The time has come for every able-bodied person in this cawntry to contribute his share to our wawer effort.

We must all be prepared to engage in a—er—la—awng period of dedication. General Westmoreland, in whom I have great confidence, has informed me that the wawer in Viet Nam will never end, and that our wisest policy is to fight forever and keep casualties as low as possible.

It is for us at hawm, mah fellow Americans, to support our military effort in ways I shall enyumerate.

First, let me make clear that the very thing we must not do is to deprive ourselves of commawdities. Sacrifices had their place in previous wawers, such as Woreld Wawer Two. But intoday's world we cannot afford to ration our national product.

Glut yourselves, mah fellow Americans.

A second way in which you can spur on our eternal fight for freedom is by buying United States Savings Bonds. This will prevent inflation, and will give you back five for four after six years.

How's that for a bargain?

You can help by writing sawngs about our special forces and making a million in lawng green.

You can help by drawping out of school and going about tnis great nation of ours singing sawngs of your own choice and awthersip.

You can help in little ways and in big 'uns too.

An' as you lay your heads down on your pillows tonight, mah fellow Americans, let one noble fact be foremost in your minds. Let it sustain you in the days ahead, and let it see you through travails and temptations.

That fact is simply this, mah fellow Americans.

Odds are you'll come out ahead, if you play it smart and avawid the draft.

Letters

Respect Candidates

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

This letter is being written in reference to the comments in Tuesday's Tar Heel concerning the "rather dark subject" of campus elections. Being a freshman, I cannot judge the present election to any previous one. However, in your evaluation of the candidates seeking the more important positions on campus, the editorial presented, on the whole, a pessimistic attitude wholly unwarranted.

Perhaps the candidates this year are not as glamorous or exciting as in previous elections, but nevertheless their qualifications are valid. After the energy, expense, and time required for campaigning, the candidates deserve the respect, not the degradation, of the present Tar Heel editor.

This writer does not question the validity or truthfulness of your statements, but the tactfuless with which you have presented them to the student body of Carolina.

Be Wary, Skeptical

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Those who attended the patriotic revival in Carmichael Monday night glimpsed a glaring contradiction. "Sing - Out's" parody on the beatnik freedom singers revealed more than a trace of the prejudice and bigotry they sing so enthusiastically against.

My inference was that MRA thinks it knows the one true way to save society, and feels a moral obligation to discredit anyone who sings in another key. Let us be wary of this kind of self assurance and skeptical of this brand of morality.

Her Hair Keeps Changing Color

Will The Real Patti Stand Up?

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

Those who know Patti Fields have been having a hard time recognizing her lately. Miss Fields, better known as Miss Orange County, has been a brunette, a blonde, a red-head and now a brunette again.

What gives?

Patti, a junior from Chapel Hill, has been working as a model for Georgia Rogers of the Aesthetic Beauty Salon in downtown Chapel Hill.

Last week she and Miss Rogers entered the International Cosmotologist Convention's hair styling competition at the New York Hilton in New York City.

"The whole event was held in the ballroom of the hotel," Patti said. "Dressed in a full-length evening gown, I came on stage with my hair washed, set, dried, and covered with a wig.

Then Georgia had 30 minutes to comb my hair into a prize - winning style. Meanwhile the audience of about 700 sat around and watched the whole process or got up and took a closer look at the entries."

The entries in this unusual contest come from all over the world. Each state was represented, along with delegates from Italy, France, Austria and Australia.

Patti replied, when asked how she felt as a model, "It's just like racing cars or any other kind of competition; it gets into your blood, and you're gone."

The Fields and Rogers duo were second runner-up for the Bronze Venus award for style and cut. This prize included a trophy and $150 which was split by them.

What was the winning style?

Patti stated, "Two different styles won. For day, a short upsweep that is asymmetrical; for evening, wiglets and false curls. Also red hair was a big thing."

This comment brought up the obvious question of Patti's own hair color. She answered, "Yes, it is really brown, but no it was never meant to be blond. My hair had to be stripped of all color before it could be rinsed red. I will be very happy when I'm a brunette again."

In preparation for the contest," Patti explained, "the designer spends weeks reading magazines to learn new trends, then made sketches of a new style within the current trend. After this hard work came practice and more practice on my head until the time for combing out was cut to a minimum." Patti was chosen as a model because of her oval face and slightly naturally curly hair.

Patti was first interested in this field when she was a receptionist at the Aesthetic. Miss Rogers was the only winning female entry in the New York contest.

When asked what all the dyeing did to her hair, Patti said, "A lot of girls think this kind of thing really kills your hair, but it doesn't. You have to be more careful how it's treated, but dyed hair can actually be more healthy."

With all this experience and excitement, Patti would seem a natural for a modeling career after graduation, but she says, "They get paid pretty well, about $5 an hour, and I've thought of it, but I like to stay up at night and eat good food. Still, I love New York, and I'll probably end up there."

A new correspondence study guide with courses in 35 different fields has just rolled off the press.

The courses listed are available from 62 colleges and universities in the United States.

Among those listed are more than 100 courses from the UNC Extension Division. State lists some 70 courses.

The new guide was edited by Mary E. Henry, head of correspondence instruction here and the University of Mississippi director of correspondence study Vasser Bishop.

Single copies of the booklet are 50 cents each and can be ordered from the National University Extension Association, 122 Social Science Building, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn., 55455.

Fighting Only 2 Miles From Capital

War Nears Saigon Doors

SAIGON (AP) — A hamlet battle brought the war to Saigon's doorstep again last night. Flare planes lighted the sky as defenders beat off a Viet Cong assault on Tan Phu, less than two miles from the capital's Tan Son Nhut seaport.

Artillery firing could be heard clearly within the city. A military spokesman said the raiders attacked with grenades and small arms. There was no report of casualties on either side.

Battle reports Thursday told of the death of 501 Communists in widely scattered actions. Vietnamese troops, planes and artillery were reported to have accounted for 222 of these in turning back heavy Viet Cong night attacks on two government posts 100 miles apart.

U. S. Air squadrons hit again at Communist targets both north and south or border. Pilots reported that among 67 missions over North Viet Nam Wednesday, bombing and strafing attacks left the wreckage of 19 trucks clogging Mugia Pass, one funnel to the Ho Chi Minh supply trail.

Gunners aboard U. S. 7th Fleet destroyers in the South China Sea joined air and ground forces in hammering at red holdings between allied costal strongholds.

Bodies of 32 guerrillas were lined up for exhibition to passersby on highway no. 13 near a Government armoed regiment's headquarters at Go Dau, 12 miles north of Saigon. In all, 71 from an assault force of perhaps 700 were reported slain in that area.

A post at Bu Prang, 112 miles northeast of Saigon, was the other Red target. A Communist battalion struck before dawn. Flare planes, combat jets and distant artillery batteries joined the denfese in a five-hour fight. The Vietnamese said the Communists, in retreat, left behind 151 dead and a variety of weapons including a recoilless rifle and three 50-caliber machine guns.

Vietnamese losses in both engagements were described as light. South Viet Nam's armed forces, however, are still suffering most of the allied casualties in the war.

Announcements today disclosed South Vietnamese losses rose last week while the American combat toll declined, along with that of the Communists.

The U. S. military command said 80 Americans were killed, 816 wounded and 17 missing or captured, against 100 killed, 808 wounded and eight missing or captured in the week of March 6-12. The American death toll throughout the war rose to 2,186.

South Viet Nam's armed forces lost 232 killed and 73 missing. That compared with 131 killed and 97 missing the previous week.

Soldiers Decorated

FT. BRAGG, N. C. (AP) — MSgt. Dallas W. Johnson, 36, of Neesho, Mo., received the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in Viet Nam in ceremonies at Ft. Bragg Wednesday.

Sgt. Kenneth D. Wheeler, 22, of North Ford, Calif., also was awarded the Silver Star for gallantry.

The two are members of the Special Forces, which has its headquarters at the U. S. Army John F. Kennedy Center for Special Warfare at Ft. Bragg.

Sukarno Firm On Cabinet

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — President Sukarno apparently stood firm today against the appointment of a new anti-Communist cabinet.

Sukarno met with the Presidium of Civilian and Military Leaders without reaching any agreement on the composition of the cabinet the new regime has been trying to form for four days.

While Sukarno has been shorn of all real power, the government of Indonesian strongman Lt. Gen. Suharto still wants his assent for important decisions.

Suharto has respected Sukarno's constitutional position as chief of state and officially maintains that the new regime is acting under the president's orders.

But Suharto and his backers know they have to make a start, with a new cabinet, on restoring Indonesia's sagging economy.

Unless the new regime acts soon, the Anti-Communist students may again take to the streets in demonstrations. They are the ones who toppled Sukarno's old cabinet, largely made up of Communists or Pro-Communists.

Islamic members of the lower house urged Suharto to restore to Parliament "its real authority and function." It had been converted into a rubber stamp by Sukarno.

The powerful Moselem Nahdatul Ulama Party and the Catholic Party issued statements in support of Suharto. The Moslems called for a rackdown on graft and corruption and urged the government to seek foreign aid without strings attached.

The Catholics urged a Foreign policy "independent and active and guided by national interests." This was an attack on Subandrio's Pro-Red Chinese policy.

Stray H-Bomb Being Moved For Recovery

PALOMARES BEACH, Spain (AP) — A U. S. Naval Task Force is dragging the long missing H-bomb into a favorable position in the sea from where it may be recovered, the Spanish government announced last night.

Spanish officials were hesitant to say exactly when recovery was expected. But they said a plan of operation selected by Rear Adm. William S. Guest, commanding the highly specialized task force 65, was in progress.

This was described in knowledgeable circles as moving the nuclear weapon, lost from a crashing B152 bomber last Jan. 17, off a 70-degree slope where it was last reported, and dragging it well inshore from its position five miles from this beach. There divers or frogmen might retrieve it.

Such an operation was described as time-consuming even with favorable weather and could account for much of the delay since the bomb was located by the midget submarine Alvin in 2,500 feet of water a week ago.

U. S. officials hedged at outright confirmation but admitted that the plan was as described.

How long it would take to move the H-Bomb and its attached parachut shoreward into a hundred feet or less could not be estimated.

Gov. Stalls On Requests, Awaits Financial Reports

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Dan Moore indicated Thursday any decision on major new budget requests for public education would be premature until the state's financial status is known early next year.

The governor told his weekly news conference, "we do not at this time have adequate information as to the needs and resources. We will have adequate information on which to base needs by the convening of the 1967 General Assembly."

The comments were in reference to the $130 million legislative program unveiled Monday by the United Forces of Education and talk of a $100 million bond issue for capital improvements at tax - supported colleges and universities.

While the fiscal outlook for 1967 is good, Gov. Moore said, "we don't know what the situation will be at the end of this biennium. That is purely conjecture."

He said the needs of higher and public education will not be known until the Advisory Budget Commission completes its hearings in the fall.

Moore said "public education is the most important part of state government and we will do everything possible in higher and public education."

He noted education presently received 67 cents of every general fund dollar and received a record appropriation increase of $106 million from the last legislature.

"There are demands on state government other than education," he said. "We will meet the needs of all agencies as nearly as possible."

The $100 million bond issue for buildings at higher education institutions was endorsed by the UFE and has gained support from other educators.

Sexpots 'Bad' For Men

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The "Chaplain of Bourbon Street" claimed today the visits of Hollywood starlets to Viet Nam have done more to undermine morale of American fighting men that Viet Cong bullets.

"One sexpot can undo the work of 100 chaplains," said the Rev. Bob Harrington, just returned from a 10-day trip to the embattled country.

The burly "Brother Bob," an evangelist whose trademark consists of red socks, red necktie and a large Bible tucked under one arm, gave this appraisal:

"After the visit of one of these voluptuous entertainers and her return to the U. S., the boys are so stirred up that things begin to happen. Consultations with the chaplain, chapel attendance and letters home to mother fall off alarmingly.

"The incidence of veneral disease skyrockets. And believe me, there is ample opportunity to sate one's lust in Viet Nam. There are what is known as Saigon tea girls coming out of every nook and cranny."

On the other hand, said the Southern Baptist minister, "there is nothing more heartening and inspirational to the boys than wholesome performances by such stars as Bob Hope, Martha Ray, Roy Rogers, and Tennessee Ernie Ford. These entertainers are a great antidote for the loneliness that grips the boys on the front lines."

S. C. Representatives OK Attendance

COLUMBIA (AP) — The South Carolina House of Representatives approved a watered - down version of a compulsory school attendance bill today, after exempting 15 counties from its provisions.

However included is an amendment by Rep. Theodore Guerard of Charleston which provides that if any sections of the bill are held unconstitutional the remainder of the proposed act would remain in force.

Highly suspect from a constitutional standpoint are a series of amendments which exempt 15 counties from provisions of the bill.

Pitching Only Weakness For Clemson Team

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the first in a series of articles on ACC baseball teams. Today is the Clemson Tigers —tomorrow whill be the Maryland Terps.

By ERNIE STALLWORTH
Tiger Sports Editor

Clemson, a perennial power in ACC Baseball wars, once again will have a fine team and will be a definite contender for conference laurels in June.

North Carolina, itself a yearly baseball power, and Maryland, the defending champion, will contest Clemson for the top position.

The Tigers feel, however, that this is the best Clemson team since Billy O'Dell carried his team to the finals of the NCAA competition.

In fact if O'Dell were to pitch once more for Clemson, the Tigers could quite possibly be the best baseball team in the nation—the only obvious weakness is on the mound.

Charley Watson and Bill Parmar will key the team from the hill. After these two — they split ten wins last year—there is an acute shortage of hurlers. In a game that is supposed to be ninety per cent pitching, this weakness could be fatal.

Returning off the ACC's second place ball club from last year, are all of the starters except Tommy Chapman, All-ACC hurler. Thus the remainder of the Clemson team is so powerful that it is thought in Tigertown that Watson and Parmar will be enough to bring another championship to Clemson.

Coach Bill Wilhelm boasts of the greatest college infield in the South and, perhaps, the nation. Certainly this infield can be dubbed the "All-ACC Infield."

Three of the five returnees in the infield placed on the All-ACC first team last spring, and one was on the second team. The other, catcher Eddie Barbary, is a junior who made only two errors last season behind the plate. Rated excellent defensively, it is hoped that Barbary's hitting will improve after playing in a strong summer league.

Jacky McCall, Rusty Adkins, and Lawton Coward were tops in the league last year and will play at short, second, and third respectively this season. Ellis Dantzler hit .310 and played first base.

McCall, an excellent glove man at short, batted .362 with eight home runs. Teamed with Adkins at second, who led the ACC in hitting with .444, McCall gives Clemson a very fine double play combination.

As fine an infield as Clemson has, it is doubtful if all of the men will play in the same position as last year. Gene Dunlap, a junior college transfer, and two freshmen—Reed Watson and Ron Zupa—have forced Dantzler to the outfield—and threaten to replace Cowart at third.

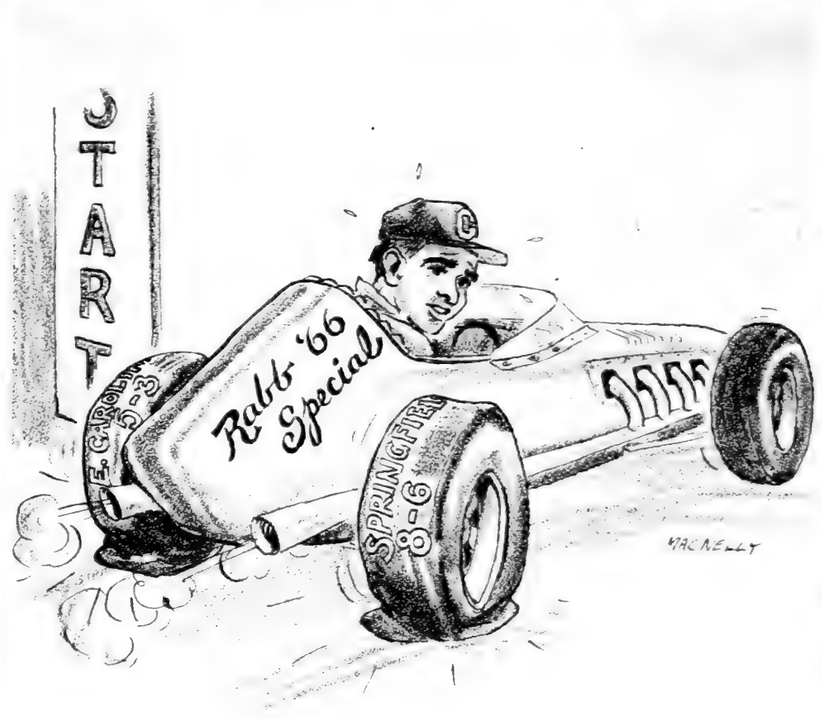
Dantlzer may have trouble breaking into outfield, as all three regulars return. Tommy Pack, after spending time in the service, has already muddied the water out there by reclaiming his centerfield position vacated two seasons ago. Pack hit .303 in his last season in a Tiger uniform.

It appears that Pete Meyers, .283, has won his left field position. That leaves Dantlzer and last year's two remaining outfield veterans to battle over one position. It is a happy dilemma for Coach Bill Wilhelm.

The Tigers have had four scrimmage games to date and have yet to score fewer than 12 runs in the three inning games.

Clemson bases its title hopes this season on proven veterans who will provide sound defense and superb hitting. Clemson will score a whole bushel of runs—how many the opposition will score worries Coach Wilhelm.

Tar Heels, Gobblers Clash In 'Battle Of The Beatens'



'Hot Seat And A Cold Start'

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

The Tar Heels and the VPI Gobblers face off against one another at 3 this afternoon on Emerson Field.

Each team is still searching for their first win of the '66 season. The Gobblers have lost three games — losing to Clemson by scores of 11-1 and 9-6 and South Carolina 4-2. The Tar Heels were beaten in their opener by East Carolina, and Wednesday they were edged out by Springfield 8-6.

The ball game Wednesday got under way before a large shirtsleeved crowd sitting on the old concrete stands of Emerson Field.

The Massachusetts' boys struck first in the top of the second against Carolina's Beattie Leonard.

Third baseman Dave Bennett started out the inning with a single. Center fielder Hammeenick reached base on a fielders choice. Then Bob Murphy and Bruce Worley hit back to back singles. Left Fielder Worley's hit accounted for Spring fields' first two runs.

In the top of the third, Springfield added four more runs to their side of the scoreboard on four base hits and two Tar Heel errors.

Carolina struck back in the bottom of the third. Mike Leonard, drew a walk. And with one out, Tar Heel second baseman Butch Watts homered.

Spring added their seventh run in the fifth off of Danny Walker. Lelas singled. Then Walker ran into control problems and filled the bases then walked in a run.

Carolina also capitalized on their half of the fifth inning. Bill Estes got a pinch hit for Walker and reached base on an error. Right fielder Larry Mills singled. And with one out, Danny Talbott collected his second hit of the game. Center fielder Charlie Carr's base hit with two away drove in the Tar Heels third and fourth runs.

John Hubbel got out Springfield in the sixth without a man crossing the plate. In the bottom of the inning shortstop Butch Baylin walked. Tom Robbins, taking over hitting duties from Hubbel, tripled. With two out, Robbins scored on a single off the bat of Butch Watts.

Score at the end of 6: Springfield 7 and Carolina 6. The Tar Heels had chopped away at the northern boys and it looked like they might pull out a victory. No one in stands was about to leave.

Springfield's John Fredricks opened the top of the seventh with a walk. Bob Murphy sacrificed his teammate over to second. Fredricks scored on a single by Bruce Worley.

Springfield's eighth run broke the back of the Carolina drive. It put them in the lead by two and the Tar Heels were unable to score in their last three trips to the plate.

Fencing Meet Starts Today

Six members of Duke's undefeated fencing team are among some 170 fencers who will launch individual and team competition here this morning as Duke University hosts the 22nd annual NCAA Fencing Championship Tournament.

A total of 35 teams are entered in the event, in which Princeton is not participating. NYU, Air Force, Illinois and Navy are considered to be the strongest threats to capture the team title.

Individual crowns will be awarded in the epee, foil and sabre categories upon completion of competition tomorrow.

Other Atlantic Coast Conference teams in the tournament are N. C. State, Virginia, North Carolina and Clemson.

UNC Journeys To Florida Meet

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sportswriter

After a decisive win over N. C. State 95-50, the Carolina trackmen journey to Tallahassee, Fla., to participate in the Florida Relays Saturday.

Among Coach Hilton's standouts are Jon Levin, Mike Williams, Gary Iverson, and Jim Meade.

Levin, the ACC Indoor Champion in the 60 yd. dash, is one of the favorites in the 100 and 220. Sophomore Mike Williams, the ACC Indoor Mile Champion may run the mile and the half - mile. Against State. Williams ran a fast 1:53 for the 880.

Broad jumper Gary Iverson, second best in the ACC, won the broad jump against Clemson and State. His best performance outdoors has been a leap of 22'6".

Last year Jim Meade finished fourth in the two - mile at Florida. He is back to old form and has been consistently in the 9:20's. His stiffest competition will most likely come from Tennessee, which has a fine two - mile trio.

In the relays Carolina is very strong in the distance medley. The thinclads quartet consists of Ed Daw in the first 440, Tom Carpenter at the half, Bill Bassett at the three quarters, and Mike Williams as the anchorman in the mile.

Kenth Svensson, a Swedish discus thrower, will lead the freshmen. He has thrown over 180 in the discus and is a strong contender for first place honors.

Hligh jumper Bill Lassiter is another Frosh hopeful. Indoors he cleared 6'5" which was better than most varsity jumpers in the ACC.

In the running events Carl Mengel will give the Tar Babies strength in the hurdles and dashes.

All-America Tackle Coming To Carolina

Bob Newman, an All-America tackle at Ferrum (va.) Junior College, has signed a grant-in-aid at the University of North Carolina, it was announced today by Coach Jim Hickey.

"He's a good catch," said Hickey of the 6-3 235-pounder. "We were among many schools which talked with Bob after his fine season last fall. I'm pleased to have him as a Tar Heel and it's my feeling he can definitely help us."

The 21-year-old Newman, whose home is Allendale, N. J., will be eligible for competition at Carolina next fall. He will have two years of varsity eligibility.

Newman was voted the "Lineman of the Year" by the National Junior College Athletic Association. He led his Ferrum squad to a National Junior College football championship.

"Bob should be an outstanding prospect for college ranks," said his coach, Hank Norton. "His skill and ability meant much to our success last season. He just did a great all-around job.

Newman excells at defense and Coach Hickey said he planned to use him in such a capacity. The Tar Heels lost one first string defensive tackle last season in Joe Churchill of Roanoke, Va. The other starter, Hank Sadler of Charlotte, returns for a final year.

"My feeling is that Newman is of varsity caliber right ow," said Hickey. "This isn't saying he will step in and be assured of a regular role. But I do think he can be of vital help immediately. He will certainly provide stimulating competition at defensive tackle."

Carolina, now in the thick of spring drills, is seeking strong tackle play and that phase is a major concern of practice sessions. The defensive staff plans constant shifting to find the right combinations. Other than Sadler, a 230-pounder, the chief defensive tackle experience is in the person of Pat Shea, a 240-pounder who will be playing his final season.

Dartmouth Proves No Match For North Carolina Golfers

By JIM FIELDS

The UNC golf team brought its 1966 record to 3-1 Wednesday with a whalloping 30-3 win over Dartmouth.

The first four players on the squad all came in with one over par 73s to tie for medal honors. They were John Baldwin, Steve Robbins, Dick Van Leuvan and David Owen.

After the match Baldwin commented on his back nine by saying, "I was real consistent—four birdies, four bogeys and a par for a 36—par on the back nine."

Robbins, the number two player on the team also had a 73, but this score has to be considered a great individual effort considering he was playing with an injured right hand and had to swing with only one hand on many shots.

"I hurt it while I was warming up," Steve said after the match. "I don't know what's wrong with it, but it hurts and is swollen."

"Steve shouldn't have any trouble with his hand after the swelling goes down," said trainer John Lacey after examining and treating Steve. "He has a slight sprain, and he's going to lay off for a couple of days. He should be able to play by this weekend, and there shouldn't be any reason why he can't play in their match next Monday."

The Tar Heel golf team plays MIT next Monday here and then plays host to Ohio University on Tuesday.

It'll Take 6 Years

The Buildings and Grounds Department, after failing to keep a promise to plant ivy around a cyclone fence beside Carmichael Auditorium as soon as the fence was finished, has said, it will plant the ivy Monday or Tuesday—but it will take at least six years for ivy to cover the fence.

The four foot high wire fence which was begun late in February brought protests from people who thought it would be too ugly a contrast to the rest of the University.

At that time, John A. Bennett, head of the Buildings and Grounds Department, said "the ivy will be planted as soon as the fence is completed so that it will be well on its way to covering the fence by this spring."

The fence has been completed for the past couple of weeks.

According to University landscapper, Walter J. Dunsmore, the ivy "will take root and start growing this year but it will be at least six years before it covers the fence."

Soil has already been laid around the fences but Dunsmore has to get some ivy first.

The fence was constructed to keep people playing on the intramural field from running into the drive.

At the time protests were raised J. A. Branch, University Business Manager, said "we wanted to cover the fences on the drive side with some type of hedge or shrubbery, but the fence posts have already been put into the ground in cement."

The fence couldn't be moved back to make way for shrubbery because, according to O. K. Cornwell, "it would take part of our intramural field. We need every inch of ground we have since some of our fields were taken in by the new Carmichael Auditorium.

Instead the University settled for the ivy which takes six years to catch on.

Lay Philosopher Speaking Today

By WILLIAM FESPERMAN
DTH Religion Editor

The Department of Religion, the YM-YWCA and the Wesley Foundation are sponsoring today, Saturday and Sunday a visit by a Catholic lay philosopher, Michael Novak.

The overall purpose of his three day visit is to discuss the new awakening in the Church, especially the Catholic Church.

Novak will speak on three occasions. Friday, March 25, he will lecture on "Belief and Unbelief" at 8:00 p.m. at the Wesley Foundation building located at 214 Pittsboro Street.

Saturday, March 26, from 2-4 p.m. he will be at a panel and informal discussion at the Wesley Foundation. The discussion will center around some issues raised in the previous address.

Sunday, March 27, Novak will lecture on "A New Generation: American and Catholic." The meeting will be in 111 Murphey Hall at 8 p.m.

The movement of the church in history is always one of rise and fall, i.e. of decay and rebuilding. This unique character of the church, to rebuild itself, is the prime movement of the church today.

Two elements are necessary for this rebuilding. First, there must be a recognition that the Church is ineffectual for its age. The first ripples of this movement appeared in the 19th century with Soran Kierkegaard. Then the rise of capitalisitc Christianity in America and of national fascism in Europe met head on in this century to dissolve the optimism of the 19th century.

Secondly, any reawakening in the church must be a theological reawakening.

Coming Of Easter Means Death's Meaning Coming

By WILLIAM FESPERMAN
DTH Religion Editor

The coming of Easter is the coming of the meaning of death.

Grunewald, the 15th century German artist, comprehended the moment of death fully in his paintings of the crucifixion. The Christ of his canvasses is of a body drawn and contorted, green with the horror of rotting flesh, punctured and wealt-beaten, bleeding from the pressure of grotesquely huge and entangled thorns.

It is as if the emaciated Christ of Grunewald reaches out from the canvass, graps out from the canvass, grasps fully into the face of the observer, "this is death."

The death Grunewald paints is the death of Christ. It is a death that one can sluff off. But there is another death that cannot be sluffed off. And that is our own death.

When this realization presents itself in its fullness to a man, what is he to do? "Do not go gentle into that good night Rage; rage against the dying of the light" says the poet Dylan Thomas in a truly human cry. We are all in bondage to death. This is particularly what the coming of Easter means.

The artists knows about the bondage of death. No matter whether he speaks out of the canvas, the orchestra, or the sonnet, the artist confronts the meaning of death for his life.

This marks a point between the artist and ourselves. The artist cannot, for the sake of his art, forget about death.

The composer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart understood this fully. For it is in his last Mass in D minor, that Mozart breaks away from the category of the courtly musician into the fullness of life by singing to death.

The senior choir of the Chapel of the Cross will perform this profound work at 8 p.m. Sunday, March 27. The choir, under the direction of musicology student Jerry Baab, will be accompanied by strings, brass, winds and percussion. Soloists will be: Walker Glenn Weigel, soprano;Susan Quinn, alto; Wayne Zarr, tenor; and Kenneth Smith, bass.

The story of the composition goes as follows:

It was fashionable in Mozart's time for greedy members of the aristocracy to commission works by well known composers so that they could pawn them off as their own.

A certain Count Franz Wallsegg zu Stuppach commissioned Mozart to write a requiem for his dead wife. The count sent as an emissary his man Leutgeb to the seriously ill Mozart. Leutgeb concluded the contract.

The servant dressed rather gloomily and Mozart is supposed to have come to associate the person of Leutgeb with the figure of Death.

Consequently, Mozart came to feel that he was composing this "missa pro defunctis" for himself. In truth, he was; for Mozart died after completing only eight measures of the Lacrymosa.

Legislature Orders Action On TV Bill; Ignores Veto

Council To Decide On Constitutionality

By JIM SMITH
DTH Staff Writer

Two prominent legislators from opposing parties will challenge a March 17 executive order made by Student Body President Paul Dickson.

The order prohibits fraternities and sororities with discriminatory clauses in their constitutions from receiving Student Government funds for the purchase of televisions.

The legislators will also challenge an amendment to the by-laws of Student Legislature which permits fraternities and sororities to receive Student Government funds without having their by-laws reviewed by the Legislature's Rules Committee.

Representatives Hugh Blackwell and Steve Salmony said the Constitutional Council will rule on the questions early next week.

The Student Legislature Thursday ordered the immediate implementation of the television act, the executive order of Student Body President Paul Dickson to the contrary not withstanding.

The action was a direct slap-in-the-face at Dickson.

After the passage of the Television bill, March 3, the Legislature amended its by-laws and constitutions reviewed by the Legislature's Rules Committee.

The Constitution of the Student Government requires that the Legislature review the by-laws on March 12 to permit fraternities and sororities to apply for Student Government funds without having their by-laws and constitutions of any organization receiving Student Government funds.

On March 17, Dickson vetoed the Legislature's amendment to its by-laws because of the provision in the Constitution.

On the same day the legislature subsequently overruled his veto by unanimously passing the amendment again.

Meanwhile, still on March 17, by executive order Dickson attached a provision to the original television act, directing that:

1. Any organization wishing to purchase a television through Student Government should submit a statement of its willingness to submit its by-laws upon request to the Student Body Treasurer and the Director of the Student Activities Fund office for reviewal, and

CFI Still Alive And Collecting $

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The Committee for Free Inquiry is still alive, according to Paul Dickson, chairman of the CFI steering committee and Student Body President.

CFI has collected $53.36 since the money drive began two weeks ago. "The money has been trickling in," Dickson said yesterday.

No lawyer has been retained by CFI for a court case to test the speaker ban law. Most likely the case will be taken directly to a federal court if it is based on constitutional grounds.

Dickson was reluctant to comment about the court case. "That is something the lawyers will have to determine," he said.

The steering committee of CFI has not met for two weeks. About $1,500 to $2,000 will be needed for the costs of the court case.

"We hope to collect the money entirely on campus," Dickson said. He did not know what methods would be used to collect the needed funds.

"Everyone has been busy with elections, and we've had no time to think about that," he said.

Herbert Aptheker, the Communist who was denied speaking privileges here March 9, indicated when he was here that he might act as a plaintiff if the case were brought to court.

Dickson said he has not contacted Aptheker since he left campus. Aptheker spoke off campus in the Community Church on Purefoy Road.

Asked if he would continue pursuing the case after he left office Thursday, April 14, Dickson said, "I wouldn't do it alone."

He expects the case to enter in a court "within the next two to three weeks."

New Election Set Tuesday In MD V

By GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

The Constitutional Council yesterday ruled last Tuesday's legislative election in Men's District V invalid and set a new election for Tuesday.

The protest in Men's District V was filed by Joe Chandler, incumbent SP legislator in the district, because of a misprint on the ballot. Bruce Jolly (UP) was listed on the ballot as an SP candidate.

Jolly received 112 votes in the election, Artie Robinson (UP), 101, Joe Chancer, (SP) 84, and Stan Sharpe, (SP) 43, giving other seats in the district, made up Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, Old East, Old West and Carr, to UP candidates.

Chandler told the council, "The results in the election can, in no way, be read to be a true representation of the student voting."

He said he called attention to the mistake on the ballot to election officials about noon on the day of the election before any results were known.

Don Carson, representing the UP before the council, said he felt the protest was being based on "a minor technicality" and would turn out the same way if an election were held again. He said the technicality was "no justification in setting the election aside."

SP Chairman Jim Little said the voters were "misinformed" by the ballot and asked that the election be declared invalid.

In ruling the election invalid, the council said the error was a "major violation of the election laws," and the election could not stand.

Bill Miller, a member of the council, commented at the meeting that he felt the hearing "had been turned into a political hashing ground" and that the issues in the case were evaded.

He said such practices should not be permitted in future hearings because the efficiency of the body was hampered.

The council also heard a protest of the legislative in Men's District XII (Morrison). Its decision in this case was reached after the DTH dealine.

Profs Debate Asia Policy

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

Whether Communist China is as much a "monster" as some people think was the primary question at a debate Thursday night between Dr. Frank Trager of New York U. and Dr. Alden Lind of the UNC Political Science Department.

The debate, "Can Southeast Asia be neutralized without its subsequent domination by Communist China," eroded into series of historical facts.

Lind held that "there is ample evidence that China will insist upon what they consider complete territorial integrity."

He cited Chinese confrontations over their border in Korea, Tibet and North Viet Nam as supporting evidence of his point.

Lind said that "there is no doubt that at the present time China does not have too much" in terms of weapons and internal war resources. He felt that this is one reason it does not initiate a program of open territorial aggression.

Speaking for the negative, Trager said that the U. S. role in Southeast Asia has "on the whole been an ignorant one."

He added that "we did not do very much to honor our obligations to Southeast Asia between 1954 and 1965." Trager called on North Carolina students to make a value judgment on what the U. S. is justified in doing to prevent the "erosion of freedom" in the area.

Trager, who has made several special missions to Southeast Asia since 1951, feels that China is not to be trusted to remain within her boundaries.

He blasted the way some aspects of American policy have been handled, mentioning specivically the "strategic hamlets."

Strategic hamlets are villages in Viet Nam which are held by allied forces to prevent Communists from getting food supplies and intelligence reports. Our procedure has been to have hamlets located like "measle spots" rather than in an orderly fashion.

ECC Looks To N.C. Legislature

RALEIGH (AP) — Dr. Leo Jenkins, president of East Carolina College, hinted yesterday his institution may bypass the state Board of Higher Education in its bid to become a regional university independent of the Consolidated University system.

A spokesman for the college told the DTH yesterday that ECC had no intention of bypassing the State Board of Education and going to the legislature.

Jenkins raised the possibility in a question and answer session following a breakfast for ECC alumni in which he made a strong bid for their support in promoting the independent university idea.

"It is an ancient right of the people to petition directly to their representatives in the legislature," Jenkins said when asked if he would apply to the Board of Higher Education for a university status recommendation.

"It is up to the people to decide," he said. "No agency speaks for the people. I don't speak for the people. It is up to the people to speak through their elected representatives."

Jenkins said, "This is what we did with our nursing school. That school was authorized by the legislature, not by an agency. There is nothing in the law to prevent a legislator from introducing a bill to make East Carolina a branch of the Consolidated University."

He urged the 50 ECC alumni present to back the independent university idea.

"Talk to people," he said. "You have friends in the legislature. People will listen to you. We can send you all the ammunition you need . . . the facts are on our side."

Jenkins said a decision on what course the school will take in its quest for university status will come at the May board meeting.

Draft Policy For Students Established

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Guidelines have been established by the Selective Service System headquarters in Washington for use by local draft boards in deferring college students.

The standards are to be taken into consideration by local draft boards when processing a student's application to be placed in class 2S.

The guidelines apply to "registrants actively in study at a college, university or similar institution of learning who may be considered to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety or interest" when certain standards exist.

These standards include the academic class standing or the attainment of at least 70 percentile on the Selective Service qualification test.

The class ranking standards are the top half of the freshman class, the upper two-thirds of the sophomore class and the upper three-fourths of the junior and senior classes.

The cumulative average of men students only will be used to compute the class standings.

This list has not yet been started by the office of General Records. It will be compiled at the end of this semester and is expected to be finished by the middle of July.

The average grade for the freshman class including women, for last semester was 2.176. Half the class of 2,414 students had less than this average.

The sophomore class had two-thirds of its 1,977 students make above 1.955 last semester.

The junior and senior classes had two-thirds of their students with a 2.0 average or better. There are 2,409 juniors and 2,042 seniors at UNC this year.

The guidelines set for graduate students included being in the upper one-fourth of his class during his last full year of undergraduate study or the scoring of 80 percentile or better on the qualification test.

The three-hour qualification test will be given here on campus by the testing service May 14 and 21 and June 3.

Applications to take the test must be secured from local draft boards and mailed by April 23 to the Science Research Associates of Chicago.

Long Sees No Buses To South Campus Right Now

By BOB HARRIS
DTH Staff Writer

Dean of Men William G. Long has said he did not expect to see any form of shuttle transportation for south campus "in the relatively near future."

He said the Committee on Traffic Safety had considered many solutions to the problem of transporting students from South campus, but of yet has made no commitment.

"I'm not nearly as favorably disposed to the 'tiger-train' concept as I am to buses," he said.

The "tiger - train" is an eight - mile - an - hour tractor which pulls a string of trailers. It has a maximum capacity of 54 persons.

Student leaders disagree on the 'tiger - train' concept. Teddy O'Toole, candidate for student body president on the UP ticket favors it, while his opponent on the SP ticket, Bob Powell, opposes it.

O'Toole says he doesn't necessarily oppose using buses, but they are not the solution to the short range problem.

"It is an error to think the 'tiger - trains' will not work," O'Toole said. "We have taken polls on students schedules, leaving from South campus. According to these polls, the maximum number leaving South campus at any one half hour period is 90.

"Two 'tiger - trains' can carry 216 in a half hour if necessary. Student government should consider the short-range solution. We need transportation now. The University administration, at the same time, needs to be working on the buses. They will be needed to solve long - range transportation problems."

"The University administration says the 'tiger - train' is on the bottom of its list, but the figures I got from Dean Long's office were $20,000 for a transportation system."

Powell favors the bus system because "it would provide swifter and more convenient transportation."

He said he was willing to get behind anything the administration is willing to finance. He stressed that one-third of the financing should fall to student government.

Jim Little, SP chairman, agreed with Powell. He said the "tiger - train" is an "impossible solution." Little did recommended, however, that the buses be put into operation as soon as possible because "at least half of the student population will soon be living on South campus."

Student Body President Paul Dickson disagrees with Gordon on the financing. He favors buses and feels they should be financed by a combination of increased student fees and money collected by Dean Long's office from parking fees and fines.

Long stressed that he did not want to get involved in student political campaigns when giving his opinion on the traffic problem.

He said he favored buses because the eight m.p.h. speed of the "tiger - train" would probably cause traffic tie-ups.

"One bus will carry as many people as one 'tiger-train,'" Long added, "and a bus will carry them much faster."

Long said he thought some solution would be made within the next five years. He said he welcomed suggestions offered by anyone.

Rumors False, Yack Not Late

Contrary to reports, the Yakety-Yack will be delivered in early or mid-May, according to publications board officials.

There had been some reports that the Yack would be delivered later this year because of some delay by the engravers.

However, Hugh Blackwell, pub board chairman said a representative of the publishers said the Yack will be delivered on time.

Dicky Baddour, Yack business manager, said the staff has completed all of its work and is "waiting for the book to be delivered."

He said no exact date was ever set for the delivery of the yearbook but that it should be delivered by mid-May.

Baddour said several changes have been made in the Yack this year. He said the cover of the yearbook has been changed and the book is larger than it has been in the past. Other changes have also been made but were not revelaed.

MRA Receives Varied Remarks

By JACK TATE
Special to the DTH

Moral Re-Armament hit the North Carolina campus Monday bringing with it the entertainment show called "Sing Out '66."

MRA believes shows such as "Sing Out" are the most effective means of presenting its doctrine and ideas. Thus, the successor of this group of college and high school students represents also the success or failure of, Moral Re-Armament.

A poll conducted Wednesday and Thursday produced varying results.

One senior, who asked not to be quoted, said: " 'Sing Out '66' was unadulterated cornball and anybody falling for that idiocy would have to be missing a screw."

But this reaction was in the minority.

Charles Swearingen, freshman from Aberdeen, said, "It was beautiful. I felt chills when they sang patriotic songs. It really gave me a new feeling. Unfortunately, I had to leave when the performance was only half finished. I got hungry."

Ashley Hardison, a sophomore from Columbia, was enthusiastic about the "Sing Out."

"I realize," he said, "that they mixed performance with propaganda, but the type of propaganda could not be objectionable to most Americans. The type of people who object to this show just felt that the four moral absolutes were a slap at their own moral relativism."

Of the 100 people interviewed who had attended the Monday night performance, 22 spoke out strongly in favor of the "Sing Out" and the four absolutes of love, purity, honesty and unselfishness. Fifty-one students liked the performance but could not fully accept the ideals expressed by the "Sing Out."

One person was particularly antagnozed by the cliches in the songs.

"They kept on singing 'Freedom isn't free,'" he said, "and I found out just how unfree freedom is when they tried to sell me a program for a dollar and a record for four dollars."

Fifteen of the students interviewed called the performance such things as "Cornball Inc.," "Neo-Nazism" and "Corn, brother, just corn."

Nine students claimed they had never heard of Moral Re-Armament even though they had attended the performance. Three others refused to express an opinion.

UNC COEDS Judy Logan (left) and Pam Davis are two of the lovely contestants in the Miss Orange County Pageant to be held tonight at 8 in Memorial Hall. Tickets will be on sale at the door for $1.25.

O'Toole, Thomas Respond To Pepper's Endorsement

University Party candidate for Student Body President Teddy O'Toole and UP Chairman Neil Thomas replied yesterday to Sonny Pepper's endorsement of Bob Powell in Tuesday's run - off election. These are their statements.

TEDDY O'TOOLE:

"I was very surprised to hear yesterday of Sonny's endorsement decision. I cannot help but feel, although, that a grave misunderstanding has taken place.

"Sonny stated at the convention that he would support the University Party candidates, and he knew Bob Powell was running then. Since he said yesterday that he has known both of us for a long time, I am at a loss to see what has swayed him in short a period of time.

"I do not think that Sonny can 'give' his votes to the Student Party, for a vote for Sonny, like a vote for Bill Purdy, was a vote for Student Government on the grass roots level. I feel that those who supported Sonny, if they are to be true to his philosophy of Student Government, should support me in my platform of 'returning Student Government to the Students.'"

NEIL THOMAS:

"I am not at all disturbed by Sonny's endorsement of Bob Powell for one simple reason that should be made clear to the Student Body at this time. Most of the 900 votes that Sonny has seen fit to give to the Student Party were votes that were cast for him by members of the University Party.

"Aside from the technical aspects of the vote turned out last Tuesday, there are a few other points which should be very apparent at this time. One of these is that Teddy O'Toole has not yet reached his peak, to speak politically. He is still working very hard getting votes to 'return Student Government to the Students.'

"Teddy is being heartily endorsed by almost every member of every branch of Student Government, but this endorsement is not finality. It takes the students interested in the working of their Student Government — their judicial reforms, their residence hall improvements, their fraternity interests, their course evaluation booklets, and their programs — to put a man into the President's seat.

"The University Party now has a legislature and a Vice-President; I want to make it a clean sweep and put in a President who will oil the rusted and ill-used machinery."

Students Are Always Students

FIFTH IN A SERIES

Suppose a UNC student visits the University of Virginia campus for a weekend, gets drunk and smashes six windows in a Charlottesville fraternity house.

Should he be tried by the UNC Honor Council?

The question of a student's sphere of responsibility is a particularly perplexing part of any changes which might be made in the Honor System.

The bill recently submitted to Student Legislature says that students should be held responsibile for obeying the Honor and Campus codes only in "the University community or while present at an organized student function."

This is a reversal of the present situation. Jim Aplin, a member of the Attorney General's staff, said about 10 per cent of the cases tried by the Men's Council this year have dealt with off-campus offenses.

An attempt to adopt the policy of more limited responsibility might run into considerable opposition from faculty members and the adminitration.

The Faculty Committee on Student Discipline has submitted a report to the chancellor which makes its position on this issue very clear.

"We recognize that this (difficulty of enforcing campus rules outside Chapel Hill) is to some extent true," the report said.

"There are, however, unalterable barriers to the institution of this proposal. Every student, whether he likes it or not, is identified with the University in which he is enrolled, and his status as a student at Chapel Hill, with its privileges and obligations, does not abruptly end when he crosses a designated boundary that separates the Chapel Hill community from the rest of the state.

"Whatever he does, wherever he does it, reflects upon the University; and the University is in no position, has no right, to renounce its reponsibility for disciplining him when by some act committed, for example, on another campus, he shows himself unfit to belong to the student body . . .

"We believe that a geographic limitation of responsibility to the Code will engender more cynicism than it destroys . . . Responsibility is inseparable from the rights of citizenship in the University, and if there are students who wish to be released from it they should enroll at other institutions."

The faculty committee made these statements after studying the report of the Student Government President's Ad Hoc Commission on the Judiciary last fall. Several students joined the faculty committee in discussing the proposals, which are largely incorporated in the bill for constitutional amendments now before the Student Legislature.

The bill, however, was written without specific knowledge of faculty opposition to some of the ideas suggested.

As a matter of principle, The Daily Tar Heel feels that the fewer restrictions imposed on students, the better.

However, responsibility is not something UNC students can wear like a coat during the week, then hang in the closet when they leave town. A student is a student, anytime. When they get into trouble, they are identified as students of this University, and reflect on its reputation.

It is true that enforcement of out-of-town responsibility would probably be haphazard at best, but the right to discipline students in such cases should be retained. If we fail to keep our own house, someone else will do it for us.

Private Citizens Snoop, Too

The best way to train for CIA duty nowadays is to write a book saying Detroit produces unsafe automobiles.

That's what author-lawyer Ralph Nader did recently, and, according to his testimony before a Congressional committee, here's what happened:

—Private eyes began following his personnel activities.

—Nader's friends were quizzed about his sex life.

— A strawberry brunette walked up to him in the drug store, supposedly wanting to discuss foreign affairs.

—A strawberry blonde tried to lure him into her apartment.

—Somebody attempted to use a secret recording device during an interview.

And this, said Nader, was not the work of some strange government.

The culprit, he charged, was none other than General Motors.

GM president James M. Roche, under Congressional pressure, admitted that his firm's gumshoes had indeed harrassed Nader, although he said the writer got many of his facts confused, including most of the items on the above list.

Significantly, however, Roche said he learned of the Nader investigation only two weeks ago—and then said it was begun last November. His explanation poor communications, with GM.

It seemed appropriate to question Nader's honesty—and Sen. Robert Kennedy was ready to do exactly that. He doubted GM could be this inefficient, adding. "I like my GM car, but you kind of shake me up."

Sen. Kennedy's skepticism was well justified; for, as Vance Packard has pointed out in his book describing the abundance of privacy invasions in American life, "Big Brother" isn't always the federal government. Often, it is another citizen or a group of citizens intent on probing the alleged misdeeds of their countrymen.

Aware of this problem, the government recently took action against the use or private wire tapping devices.

But, as Nader's experiences indicate, there are still a lot of old microphones, recorders and other electronic bugs floating around.

What's more, nobody yet has found a way to prevent private snoops from quizzing Americans about their personal lives for no legitimate reason whatsoever.

And, of course, there'll always be a few enterprising blackmailers around who use strawberry blonds.

This makes me think that Nader won't be the last innocent citizen to involuntarily play James Bond. And some people apparently agree with me. The former producers of the now-illegal bugging apparatus are now making equipment to detect hidden microphones. Which just goes to show they believe there'll always be microphones around to detect.

U. S. Must Change Its Basic Attitudes About Red China, Inevitability Of War

By SVEN LUNDSTEDT

The first and foremost issue of importance for all of us is the American contemporary and future role in world politics. Is that role going to be defined in terms of justice and morality, or is it going to be defined predominantly in power categories?

In either case, what will be the implications on the restoration and preservation of peace and the pace of development and change in the overpopulated and underdeveloped parts of the world?

As a foreigner molded in another culture (Sweden) and therefore with somewhat different outlooks on the world than that of most Americans I feel I can contribute to the political debate at this University on some of the most burning issues of our time.

During and after World War II America had in my country as well as in all European countries, I believe, a tremendous good-will. The U. S. was conceived of as a great nation thanks to which the despotic, authoritarian Nazi terror and expansion had been halted. I and my friends hailed and made friends with many of the American crewmen of Flying Fortresses that due to damage of their aircraft on bombing missions over Germany had to go to Sweden for emergency landing.

It was felt that the U. S. measured up to high democratic, moral, and judicial standards. This was very important as the U. S. had emerged as a nuclear power, in which a great many countries of the world had to have faith as the defender of peace, justice, and high moral standards, all critical in the atomic age.

In 1947 came the Communist take-over of Czechoslovakia, then the Berlin crisis, and in 1956 the Russian suppression of the revolt in Hungary, and on all three occasions the U. S. scored, prestige-wise.

What the Korean war meant from this point of view is somewhat ambiguous since it became obvious that the South Korean government and its leader perhaps were not of the democratic kind and calibre that justified the massive support given.

This was, I believe, the first time I ever questioned whether American foreign policy as I had been able to assess it primarily was based on moral and-or legal criteria or if perhaps other motives had come into play, namely that of opposing and containing alien political thought and the emerging power of China.

What has then happened in Cuba (the invasion), in Viet Nam, in the Dominican Republic, all gives clear evidence that morality and justice is not the prime concern of American foreign policy, if of any concern at all. Instead, I am able to identify this same policy as a power strategy vehemently and in violence of the Geneva Accord of 1954 fighting the liberation movement in South Viet Nam.

Officially this is being done in the name of justice and freedom, whereas the real cause appears to be, again, the encircling and containment of China. I have also observed that China is consequently called Communist China or Red China, apparently with an intent to generate and justify feelings and eventually also actions of hostility towards that country.

What all this adds up to is that more and more people in Europe and Asia gradually have come to realize that the U. S. prime interest, contrary to peace, is to preserve world dominance and hegemony. This seems to be a goal so attractive for some people that even a nuclear war should be risked for its achievement. Can we come much further from moral, legal, and democratic ideals?

Of course people arguing along such dangerous, aggressive lines of thought present reasons (rad; justifications). They believe wholeheartedly that the world is that of the jungle: to eat or to be eaten. If we don't defeat China, China is going to defeat us. With that kind of a cynical philosophy no peace would seem possible and the world would seem to approach the verge of catastrophe in five to ten years, when China may have thermonuclear weapons.

Why does China develop nuclear weapons if she is not going to use them against the U. S., these same people would be inclined to ask. I suggest it takes little imagination to realize how terribly threatened China must be, having Polaris submarines patroling outside her coast and having American troops in Korea and in Viet Nam.

How would Americans feel if Chinese troops were fighting friendly regimes in Mexico and Canada? Would your government be capable of the measure of restraint that China seems capable of? And would you not do your utmost to develop nuclear weapons, assuming the Chinese had them? Of course you would.

Hostility breeds hostility. If we are not able to disrupt the vicious circle, no lasting peace would seem possible. I am afraid many people in Scandinavia and in other parts of the world have lost or are about to ose confidence in the U.S.A. as the kind of leader they can trust in the pursuit of world peace, which is indeed the most imperative need of all peoples.

It does not mean much if this or that country or bloc of countries have the greatest influence in terms of physical power. The kind of influence that matters will supposedly not be military power unless it be coupled with leadership qualities in the realms of justice, morality, and the kind of democracy that pays dividends not only to the upper and middle socioeconomic classes of the people—as the American democracy seems to do despite the war on poverty (see Harrington: The Other America)—but as well to the lower classes.

In this respect it seems as though it could very well be that both the Russian and the Chinese kind of communism is more democratic than the American democracy, noting though that the lower classes in these two countries may form the majorities and so are not directly comparable with their American counterpart.

With regard to the plea for world peace, it seems to me as though a great many people in Scandinavia and probably in other parts of Europe lately have turned their hopes to Russia. Russia has since long committed herself to the theory of peaceful coexistence and, what matters more, there is some indications this is meant to be taken seriously and not to be sheer demagogism.

Take for instance the Cuban crisis, when Russia to the effect of continuing world peace agreed to withdraw her missile installations in the face of the fact that the U. S. opposed the Russian counterproposal to withdraw her military installations in Turkey.

Perhaps some Americans would assert that this was a demonstration of weakness and that it implied loss of prestige. I would suggest the opposite: by withdrawing Russia gained prestige and displayed strength. I think the real test of strength is not to persist in the face of adverse circumstances but rather to be flexible enouh to change one's mind should this be justifiable.

Reasoning along this line I would not say that pulling out of Viet Nam would indicate weakness or loss of prestige, though I agree that some other considerations, i.e. the fate of the people opposed to the Viet Cong, leave the Americans in an awkward position on the issue.

The greatest threat to enduring peace, then, seems to stem from the breakdown of communications with China, leaving it wide open to all kinds of wild speculations about China and her future plans. But I cannot see how communications can be opened up with China unless a profound change of attitudes can be brought about in this country.

The prevailing hostilities and condemnation of communism to the extent that communism sometimes on certain campuses is deemed "not serving an educational purpose" to learn about is certainly not conducive for such a necessary change in attitudes and offers little hope for a greater understanding between different peoples adhering to different bodies of political thought.

How could it be that so much hostility is brewing towards communism in this country? Certainly no simple answers are readily available. I suppose psychologists would point to self-defensive mechanisms of displacement and projection of repressed aggressiveness onto so called "outgroups."

In that case reasons reside in deep-seated emotional grounds unconscious for the individual and therefore probably very hard to change. Could it possibly also be that conformity, so highly praised, is supposed to encompass also the prevailing ideas? In that case it would seem as though there could be no truly free market place of ideas irrespective of any speaker ban law.

Another impairment of a peaceful world appears to be the widely held notion in this country that wars are unescapable. Aside from the fact that such an assertion, if true, would be disastrous, I believe there is no wishful thinking employed in the following more optimistic outlook. We conceive of reality differently according to our different frames of reference, i.e. our personal history of experiences, set of norms, values, beliefs, and attitudes.

These are greatly influenced by the cultural context of which we are part and parcel. As the American history is a history of wars, and wars that have paid off, it should be easily understood if the average American's frame of reference is such as to conceive of wars as natural and even unescapable.

That kind of conception is fostered early in childhood when children are given guns to play with and at school when the soldier's career by some teachers is idealized and florified and feelings of patriotism and nationalism are inspired. On the American scene, and to the American, all this will seem congenial and natura, but to me, with my different drame of reference, it is indicative of prepardness of war.

By this I want to point out that the way we perceive reality can be changed if the environment that forms our frames of reference is changed. If the U. S. could manage to have no war for say 40-50 years, it then would change the frames of reference in generations to come to the effect that wars would be regarded as escapable as they are today regarded as unescapable.

Two Performances Brighten Play

REVIEW . . . THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST by Oscar Wilde presented by the CAROLINA PLAYMAKERS and directed by TOMMY REZZUTO.

By MYLES ERIC LUDWIG
DTH Staff Writer

Of Oscar Wilde, it may be said that he epigrammed his way to immortality and his audience to death. Of the Carolina Playmakers, it must be said that they should have left well enough alone; for it is a horrible thing to hear the lines of a play condemn both the piece and its author.

However, they persisted in rising his witty spectre and did so with surprising results.

"The Importance of Being Earnest" represents theatre in its most limited form. It is a single-dimensioned monologue carried on between nine people who share no common humanity.

It is a play neither of nor about people, but around them; it is, in its own clever way, about either and we all know how important a position that concept occupies in our current lives. It is, in the words of its author, "excessively boring."

Unusual Production

However, this production was the most unusual one I've seen; in a sense, it was perfectly suited to the style of the play and, intended or not, that is indeed a marvel.

It's unusual in that it is the only time I've seen a production of this play in which the principals take a back seat, nay a back bench, to the supporting players. And it's unusual in that it's the only performance I've ever seen which forces a comparison between it and an 8 x 10 glossy photograph.

James Slaughter sparkles as Algernon. Somehow, he manages to radiate vapidity: and his muffin-eating scene is the most precise piece of acting that I've seen done at this University. Watching him perform is one of the two things that make the evening endurable.

The other is the technical beauty which Amanda Meiggs brings to the part of Gwendolyn Fairfax, a character who, under the control of an any less talented actress, would have gone the way of all flesh, only much sooner.

Disappointing

But disappointing is the word of Thomas Hull's enactment of John Worthing, the central figure of "importance." Hull pouts a great deal and wilts—as does the audience—as the evening wears on. He has his bright spots, but generally he paints a picture of the lamest rogue I've ever seen.

The remainder of the roles are portrayed with varving degrees of amateurism, but note should be taken, if adversly, of Louise Lamont who marches about the stage as if she were Anastasia's grandmother and Carolyn Fitz-Simons, who is simply miscast as the sweet-young-thing-sophisticate.

Tommy Rezzuto directed the play with a tone of slickness that rivals duPont's invention of greaseless cookery; the atmosphere is teflonesque.

And yet, the movement is graceless and static; too often we have to make do with tableaux. The same lack applies to the settings of Millard McDonald which are pretty but sparse.

I've tried to resist using the expression, but I can't. If you're looking for Camp on campus, this is where it's happening.

Colby Eight, Sinfonians Give Combined Concert Sunday

A barnstorming vocal group, the Colby Eight, will appear in a combined concert with the Sinfonians tomorrow afternoon at 4 in Hill Hall.

The program is part of the Contemporary Music Festival currently being sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha music fraternity.

The Colby Eight is an acapella singing group from Colby College in Waterville, Me. The octet will also appear at tonight's Military Ball and will make a tape for WUNC-TV's "Performance" before heading back north.

The Sinfonians, a 15-piece concert jazz orchestra, will present a representative program of contemporary jazz music. Music chosen by the Sinfonians for their concert ranges from the late Forties up to today.

From the Forties, the group will play Stan Kenton's "Opus in Charturce" and Lester Young's "Symphony Sid," both driving big band compositions. For a change of pace, the Sinfonians will play Keith McClelland's arrangement of Errol Garner's classic, "Misty." McClelland is the music director for the Sinfonians.

To take the presentation through the late Fifties, the band will play a subtle arrangement of Jim Heath's "Big P" and then a fast Ray Brown creation, "Gravy Waltz." The Brown tune is arranged by Willie Maiden, who plays tenor saxophone with the Maynard Ferguson Orchestra.

The Sinfonians will not neglect Henry Mancini. They will feature Ozzie Wiggins in Mancini's "Walkin' Bass." Trombonist Buddy Parker has arranged Andre Previn's "Goodbye Charlie," which will close the show.

The Sinfonians Jazz Trio will also be on hand to entertain the audience with an improvised version of "Green Dolphin Street."

"The Contemporary Music Festival will be one of the big highlights of the year," says the Sinfonians' Charles Dearman. "We are honored to be a part of this festival, and I feel that it will be gratifying for the audience as well as the band."

Alpinists First To Lick Mt. Eiger

Switzerland (AP) — Defying slashing winds and bone-chilling cold, five daring Alpinists yesterday became the first to conquer Mt. Eiger by the vertical route of the north wall.

Four Germans and a Scotsman fought up to the 13,036-foot summit of the triangular-shaped mountain, whose steep slopes over the years have cost the lives of 26 climbers.

The five made the final assault across a dangerous ice field, feeling their way through a blizzard as the temperature sank to 40 degrees below zero.

They sent their jubilant radio message at dusk. Joerg Lehne, 29, and Guenther Strobel, 24, were the first on top. They were followed by Siegfried Hupfauer, 24, Roland Vutteler, 23, and the Scotsman, Douglas Haston.

Shortly before their triumph, an American who had hoped to join them on the summit was buried at Leysin, Switzerland. John Harlin, 30, of Los Altos, Calif., was killed in a 4,000 - foot fall down th mountain Tuesday. He had conducted a modern Alpinist school at Leysin.

At the funeral service was Harlin's assistant at the school, Layton Kor, 26, of Boudler, Colo. He gave up the climb Thursday, but the five others decided to press on in Harlin's memory.

Harlin and many others had scaled Eiger before, but on an easier, zig-zag route, not up the icy north face.

The last hours before the assault on the summit were filled with tension. The climbers' radio had fallen silent for 16 hours, and a blizzard swept the mountain.

Then the clouds parted briefly and watcher with telescopes in Kleine Scheidegg could make out four of the men struggling upward about 250 feet below the summit. Then the clouds closed again.

The five were all that were left of a 13 - man, group that set out 30 days ago to attempt the almost sheer north wall.

West Germany Launches Non-Proliferation Plan

BONN, Germany (AP) — Chancellor Ludwig Erhard's government launched yesterday its own plan to halt the spread of nuclear weapons but insisted it still wants a share in responsibility for nuclear defense.

Erhard outlined his idea first in a brief statement to parliament. Then his foreign office distributed a note to almost all the governments of the world, except for Red China and its close allies. The note was announced with some fanfare—the United States repeatedly has urged West Germany to take an initiative in world affairs.

Erhard wants countries without nuclear weapons to promise and nuclear nations to agree not to spread them. His government said it would consent to an agreement to reduce the number of nuclear weapons in Europe step by step.

But—and it is a big but—such an agreement must extend to the whole of Europe, and all, including Russia, must preserve the present over-all balance of power, provide effective controls and must "be linked with essential progress in the solution of political problems in central Europe."

The causes of tension need to be removed, Erhard told the Bundestag.

Planning for the future?

Let us offer a suggestion.

The book business is short of men—good men—in almost all areas. Right now, there are good openings all over, in publishing, editorial work, sales, promotion, and retail sales.

Interested? Good! The chances for getting rich are not what they might be in other areas. They compare with teaching, say. But there's something new every day. Something interesting. And the feeling that perhaps this is better than selling nylons all day.

Still interested? Okay, now, how do you get these jobs? With experience, education and ambition. And assuming you have the desire and the education, where do you get the experience?

That's where we come in.

The Intimate, over the years, has trained many young men and women for positions in the book game. It's surprising what two or three years' experience can do for your job opportunities when you finish school. And you earn a bit while you're learning and while you're finishing your schooling.

After your graduation, we help you find a good job—and if you're really good, we keep you ourselves, if you like.

It's a good racket, we think. It takes a particular sort of person, of course. A certain attitude that's hard to define. And it takes training.

Right now, we have openings for two staffers. We prefer people who will be here for two years or so, at least, including summers. We prefer people who just might be interested in finding out if they'd like to come into the book business after college.

Think it over. If you like the idea, come in and talk to our Mr. Kuralt.

It could be the chance to get in on a profitable and enjoyable career.

Women Filched Furnishings

ALBEMARLE (AP)—Two strong-armed women who registered at the Sunset Motel Thursday night left shortly before dawn yesterday, along with most of the furnishings of the room, Deputy Sheriff A. J. Simmons reported.

He placed the value of articles taken at between $250 and $300.

Missing were standard items in such cases—four sets of sheets, pillow cases, two blankets, two pillows, several towel hand wash cloths and two picture. But there were notable exceptions.

The loot also included a television set, a 42-inch mirror and two table lamps.

Bragg Expansion Recommended

WASHINGTON (AP)—Expansion of the John F. Kennedy Center for Special Warfare at Ft. Bragg, N. C., has been recommended by an Army board which is studying the entire Army schooling system ,it was announced yesterday.

The board also has suggested the center be renamed the John F. Kennedy Center for Foreign Studies and that it include the Civil Affairs School relocated from Ft. Gordon, Ga.

Teachers May Be Integrated

RALEIGH (AP)—Delegates to the North Carolina Education Association convention yesterday were urged by their president to consider merging with their Negro counterpart—The North Carolina Teachers Association.

"To many of you this suggestion may go down hard at the first swallowing," Dr. Frank Greer said, "but I hope you will give it some consideration."

In his report to the association, Dr. Greer said:

"Our association has long presented a progressive image and I believe you will want to continue to lead rather than to follow other professional groups in this and other states."

He said it might be "thoughtless and unrealistic to except one association to disband quietly and lose its identity overnight in the other."

Therefore, Greer said, consideration should be given to combining them.

He said through the work of an NCEA-NCTA Liaison Committee, which has been working on the merger, "I have come to know and respect the leaders of the NCTA. I deem them to be worthy members of a great profession."

Several years ago the NCEA removed from its constitution a provision which restricted membership to white persons.

Peach Crop Not Damaged

(AP)—No serious damage resulted to the multi-million dollar North and South Carolina peach crop from Thursday night's subfreezing temperature, but growers prepared for another night of anxiety yesterday after predictions of widespread frost.

Low temperatures Thursday night in most peach growing areas of the two states were about 30 degrees.

Reports from major South Carolina peach areas, Spartanburg County and Johnston in Edgefield County, said the blossoming trees escaped major damage.

House-For-Veep Bill Sent To President By Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate sent to President Johnson yesterday a bill authorizing $750,000 for a Vice President's house on Massachusetts Ave., in the embassy section of northwest Washington.

The Senate completed legislative action on the measure by accepting, without debate and on a voice vote, House changes in an original Senate bill passed last October.

The House passed its version on Tuesday by a 197-184 vote in the face of strong Republican opposition.

The idea of building a government home for the Vice President has been discussed in Washington for many years.

Vice Presidents always have provided their own homes, some living in houses of varying sizes and others in apartments.

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey lives in a relatively modest suburban home in Chefy Chase, Md., which he bought when he first came to Washington as a Senator 17 years ago.

The Senate, in acting last year on the legislation to build a Vice President's house, voted to authorize $1 million for it and to set up a commission to select a site.

The House reduced the authorization to $750,000 and fixed a 10-acre site on the Naval Observatory gounds

Time Running Against Suharto's Cabinet Plans

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) —Indonesia's new regime failed again yesterday to reach agreement on a new cabinet amid indications that time may be running out on Lt. Gen. Suharto, the strongman.

The powerful student organizations, whose demonstrations forced President Sukarno to yield Supreme power, may take to the streets again unless Suharto gets a cabinet together and takes positive steps to head off economic collapse.

The cabinet issue came up again before a meeting of the five-man government presidium. Afterward, Sukarno left for his summer palace at Bogor, 40 miles south of Jakarta, for the weekend. That indicated there will be no cabinet decision before next week, because the new regime needs his assent.

Suharto met with a delegation of the students and supporting political parties and complained about problems of getting the new cabinet together. He said "vested interests" were trying to name some of the ministers. He did not name the interests, but they could be Sukarno, who has balked at the composition of the cabinet, or several political parties that are trying to get ministries.

Suharto said frankly the economy is "in a state of collapse" but "we should be able now to overcome some of the economic difficulties."

The students have gone back quietly to their classes to await the results they expect Suharto to produce. But they are restless. Many feel years have been lost in building the country, politically and economically. They are impatient for action.

UFO's Were Swamp Gases Says Air Force Expert

DETROIT (AP) — A special Air Force investigator said yesterday that numerous sightings of unidentified flying objects in the southern Michigan skies were probably the result of swamp gasses and not visitors from outer space.

"I emphasize . . . that I cannot prove in a court of law, that this is the full explanation of these sightings," said Dr. J. Alllen Hynek, a scientific consultant for the Air Force who was brought to Michigan to investigate a week long series of reports of mysterious celestial objects.

Hynek added at a news conference jammed by more than 60 newsmen:

"It appears very likely, however, that the combination of the conditions of this particular winter — an unusually mild one in this area — and the particular weather conditions . . . were such as to create this unusual and puzzling display."

Hynek added that photos released Thursday to the press showing two lights in the sky over a series of other lights were "without any question" trails made as a result of a time exposure of the rising moon and the planet Venus.

Hynek said the photos were taken March 17 near Milan, Mich., about 25 miles southwest of Detroit and have no reference to the sightings at Hillsdale, to the north, on March 21.

Hynek noted that most of the sightings were near a swamp.

"A dismal swamp is a most unlikely place for a visit from outer space," Hynek said.

"It is not a place where a helicopter would hover for several hours or where a soundless secret device would likely be tested."

Most witnesses to the flying objects described them as having glowing lights, some red, green and yellow and appearing to move sideways and move a short distance.

Hynek said that such a sight is not to be seen frequently and as a matter of fact is of a unique character.

Humphrey Sees Revisions In NATO Out Of Dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) —Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey predicted yesterday that "much needed revisions" of the NATO structure will result from the differences between French President Charles de Gaulle and the United States.

He also said he expected to see the day when France will "return as a leading partner of the NATO structure rather than a reluctant member."

The Vice President expressed his views in a taped interview with Metromedia news.

He spoke against a background of events which finds De Gaulle preparing to cut alliance links with the United States and Western powers, and planning a Moscow visit in June during which he is expected to seek new ties with Russia.

Humphrey was asked what the effect might be on U. S.-French relations if, as widely believed, De Gaulle concludes a non-aggression pact with Russia.

He said he did not believe this would basically affect U. S.-French relations. He said he did not know what De Gaulle would do on the Russian visit, but expected him as always to "exercise a good deal of independence."

He viewed De Gaulle's attitude toward NATO as "unfortunate," saying the French leader expected total production without total commitment.

Humphrey said he personally feels De Gaulle "jumped the time schedule" on modernization of NATO. But, he said, a general re - examination of NATO is in order because times have changed. He mentioned, for one thing, that Germany was much weaker when NATO was formed.

"Out of the differences with President De Gaulle," he said, "May very well come some very much needed revisions and readjustments of our NATO structure to the mutual advantage of every member of NATO."

It would be much better, he said, if France could stay as a member of the denfese system than go back to the position of the early 1920s.

House Gets First Non-Defense Bill

WASHINGTON (AP)—House members who have been clamoring for cuts in non - war appropriations will get a chance next Tuesday to practice what they have been preaching .

The appropriations committee gave them the opportunity yesterday when it sent to the house floor the first non-defense money bill of 1966, with cuts in funds for rent subsidy and teachers corps programs and a hike in money for impacted school districts.

The $2,564,872,568 measure provides emergency funds for about 15 government agencies, mostly for use during the few remaining months of the fiscal year ending June 30.

On paper, its total is $248-679,600 less than President Johnson requested, but $242 million of the cut was in funds sought as an advance for the trust fund for the new medical care for the elderly program. The committee said revised estimates indicated that the entire amount wouldn't be needed immediately.

Fourteen of the 16 Republican committee members called for further cuts in funds for new "Great Society" programs and expansion of some existing programs. However, they made no attempt to reduce the bill in committee but are expected to make their fight when the House considers the bill Tuesday.

The only substantial boost over the President's requests was $41 million for payments to school districts heavily populated by children of civilian government employes or military personnel. The President didn't ask for the money. It would supplement $347 million already appropriated for the present year.

Since these "impacted" districts are scattered throughout areas represented by Republicans as well as Democrats, there may be little enthusiasm to delete the additional money.

Tougher fights are in prospect over cuts in the rent subsidy and teachers corps programs and restrictions imposed by the committee. Both are new programs authorized but not financed last year.

Terps Depend On Sophs

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the second in a series of articles on ACC baseball teams. Today is the Maryland Terps—tomorrow will be Wake Forest.

By STAN GOLDBERG
Executive Sports Editor

The Maryland baseball team will finish second in the ACC this year. That's the way the conference baseball coaches saw things at their preseason meeting.

The defending champion Terps were picked to finished behind Clemson. The Tigers received 58 points and three first place votes to 54 points and two first place votes for Maryland.

If Maryland hopes to finish that high, the Terps are going to have to get a lot of mileage off of their sophomores, especially in the pitching ranks.

The Terps top pitcher last year, Jerry Bark, signed with the Mets at the end of the season. Their number two man, Brad Frost, has come up with a bad shoulder and hasn't thrown a ball all season.

This means that Maryland coach, Jack Jackson, will have to rely on two sophs and one senior as his top three pitchers. Left hander Chris Sole is the only experienced hurler among the group. Last year he was the Terrapins' third starter, behind Frost and Bark.

The two sophomores are George Manz and Mark Harris, who both played with the frosh last season.

"Our biggest problem this year will be pitching," Jackson said. "What we had planned on is not coming through."

"The rest of the team is pretty good," Jackson continued. "Reservewise we are stronger than last year and I hope our hitting is better."

The Terps will go with junior Larry Davis at first, sophs Mike Rogosky and Jerry Kremer at second and short, respectively, Tom Bicky, a senior, at third and junior Steve Sauve catching.

The outfield will consist of Paul Breslow or Bill Siedling in left, Mike Long in center and Dan Kerns in right. Kerns, who suffered a back injury earlier, is back to full strength now.

Jackson also will have some football players at his disposal for the first time this year. In the past spring practice has come too late for the gridmen to play baseball. But this year the starting date was moved up to early March.

One football player, Bud Sudyak, has already made the team, while two others, Dave Stofa and Charley Tine, will come ut when spring practice is over.

Residence Hall Tournament Sliced To Last Four Teams

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The Connor Animals, BVP 76'ers, Mangum Mugs and Ehringhaus were the four teams which gained berths in the semifinals of the intramural residence hall basketball tournament Wednesday and Thursday.

Connor eliminated the Graham Bells, 34-30. After trailing at the half, 13-9, Connor ignited a rally behind Ken Swartz to pull the game out. Swartz scored 11 of his 15 points in the second half. Teammate Don Richards added 9 more points. Dick Coleman had 12 points for the Bells. The Connor defense limited high - scoring Steve Balcolm to only 6 points and just one field goal.

Ehringhaus defeated the Morrison C Cavaliers, 61-44. Tom Lampman pumped in 22 points and Jim Harrington added 17 to lead Ehringhaus to the relatively easy win. With Lampman hitting 19 points and Harrington 12, Ehringhaus grabbed a 38-21 halftime lead and coasted to the win. Glenn Cuthrell hit 16 points and Scott Peterson had 14 for the Cavaliers.

Battle - Vance - Pettigrew ousted the Craige C Alkacelitics, 52-44. Willie Cooper led the BVP attack with 18 points and Charles Evans had 11 more. Buddy Peele led Craige with 12 points. Craige had a slim 24-22 halftime lead, but Cooper scored 11 of his points after intermission to salt the game away for BVP.

The Mangum Mugs advanced despite losing a ball game. The Teague Trojans beat the Mugs, 51-45, but Mangum protested that Teague had used an ineligible player. It was upheld and the Mugs given the victory.

In the fraternity division, Phi Delt Blue crushed the Phi Gam Fijis 74-38 to move into the semifinal round. Ed Williams poured in 30 points to lead the way for the Phi Delts. Tom Parrish contributed 14, Jeff Beaver 12 and Butch Winstead 12. John Titchener had 14 for the Fijis. After a mild first half, the Phi Delts exploded 47 points in the second to mop up the Fijis. Williams hit 20 of his points in the second half.

ATO I advanced to the semifinals with a default win over Pi Kappa Phi No. 3.

In the graduate division, Med Blue blasted Med White, 57-28. Dick Fleming led the Blue doctors with 12 points and Bill Jarmen added 10. The Med Blue scoring was spread out over seven players and extremely well-balanced. Jerry Woodard managed 9 points for Med White.

Softball scores: Sigma Chi 13, Zete II 10; DKE Blue II 14, ATO Blue III 3; Chi Phi Red 17, PiKA Blue 12; Beta Bums 9, DKE Red 8; Pi Kappa Phi White 12, Pi Lamb 2.

Barnes Takes UNC, State To NCAA

"This should prove if Consolidation really works," quipped Dr. Sam Barnes, University of North Carolina wrestling coach, as he prepared to leave for Aimes, Iowa, and the National Collegiate Wrestling Championships this week.

Barnes has three of his Tar Heels under his wing — plus two members of the North Carolina State squad. He is serving as "acting coach" for the Wolfpack athletes in the absence of Coach Al Crawford.

"If we could only post a combined score," notes Barnes, "we might make a name out there. The competition will be terrific and will last for three days. I'm sure the men I'm taking will do well.'"

Capt. Roy Haggerty, a senior from Greenville, N. C., will lead the Tar Heels. He posted a 9-3-2 record during the season and was runner-up for the Atlantic Coast Conference 145 title, a belt he captured a year ago. Haggerty is aggressive, fast on his feet and a good take-down man.

Jay Jacobson of Pensacola, Fla., was runner - up at 167 in the ACC, but he will drop to 152 for the Nationals. Jacobson, 7-3 for the year, stays in superb condition and manages to keep active during tough situations. He is a junior.

Alan Marshall is a 160-pound soph who compiled a 6-3-1 mark. The coach figures the Nationals will give him invaluable experience for the next two seasons. Marshall, from New York State, has come fast in two seasons.

Tiger Netmen Test UNC Streak Today

By GENE WHISNANT
DTH Sports Writer

Coach Don Skakle's undefeated tennis team will take on the Clemson Tigers today at 2:00 p.m.

The Tar Heels who have won four in a row this year now have a 30 game winning streak. The last loss was in the 1964 season against Maryland 4-5.

"The Tigers will be tough with four of their first six back," said Coach Skale, "but I think we can beat them."

Clemson under Coach Duane Brley won 15 and lost 4 last year. Returning for the Tigers are Tom Long, Dirkran Ornekian, Zulfi Rahim, and Sam Smithyman.

"I am pleased with the team so far this season, but we will have to have a good match to take Clemson," said Coach Skakle.

"A good crowd today would certainly help the boys."

Carolina clinched the match on a doubles victory by Andy Goddard and Ken Oettinger over Bob Engel and Don Swartout 6-4, 6-3.

Junior Bronson Van Wyck, sophomore Gene Hamilton, junior Nat West, and sophomore Bob Davis picked up wins in the single matches. Van Wyck and Hamilton won one doubles match and Goddard and Oettinger won the other.

Tuesday, the Tar Heels easily downed Williams College 9-0. None of the members were extended in the singles or doubles play. Van Wyck, Hamilton, West, junior Tom Chewning, Oettinger, and Davis were the singles winners playing in that order.

Carolina picked up its third win in three days Wednesday downing Dartmouth, 9-1. The Tar Heels' only loss was suffered by Bronson Van Wyck. It was Van Wyck's first loss after 22 consecutive wins. Hamilton, West, Chewning, Oettinger, Davis, and junior Jim Wadsworth picked up the single matches. Van Wyck with Hamilton, Oettinger with Goddard and Chewning with West all won.

Thursday, the Tar Heels edged Williams College 5 - 4, the team Carolina downed 9-0 Tuesday. Hamilton, Van Wyck, West, and Davis won single matches for Carolina. However only Davis and Goddard won a doubles match.

The Carolina freshmen team has a 2-0 record. Coach Bill Morre's team downed Woodberry Forest Monday, 7-2 and defeated Elon Collete 9-0 Tuesday.

UNC Edges VPI 3-2 For First Victory

By BILL ROLLINS
Assistant Sports Editor

EMERSON FIELD — Right fielder Bob Bonczek rifled a one-hop strike to catcher John Shaw to nail a Virginia Tech runner at the plate, and relief pitcher Danny Walker struck out the next batter to end the game as North Carolina nipped a late rally and halted the Gobblers, 3-2, for its first win of the season yesterday.

The Tar Heels nursed their slim lead—gained on outfielder Bob Hume's fifth inning sacrifice fly—into the final round. Walker had relieved starter Chip Stone (who pitched well but developed arm trouble), to start the seventh, and had a pair of 1-2-3 innings behind him when Tech began its rally with one out.

Third baseman Tom Childress—who had homered for VPI's first run back in the second—bounced a high one-hop shot off Walker's glove. Pinch batter Buddy Dalrymple then looped a single into shallow left-center, with Childress stopping at second.

Bucky Wellisch, the Gobbler shortstop who had circled the bases on a twice-erred blow for his team's second run in the second inning, followed with a ground single to right.

Bonczek scooped up the ball and fired past cut-off man Danny Talbott. Catcher Shaw fielded the ball n one bounce, and with the plate nicely blocked, tagged Childress for the second out.

With VPI runners stretching off second and third, Walker then zipped a third strike through swinging pinch batter Mike Knight to send the Virginians reeling to their fourth straight loss of a winless season.

Sophomore right - hander Chip Stone survived a shaky start and retired the last nine men to face him, to pick up the win—his first decision of the season. The tall hurler yielded just two hits in his six inning stint, while striking out six and walking three. Only one of the two runs he allowed was earned — that being Childress' drive to deep left field which he legged into a homer. Chip simply developed soreness in his arm, which he says should not hamper him after a day or so.

Tech's other run also came in the second frame, when Wellisch boomed a drive off left fielder Bob Hume's glove, and scored when the relay throw got away from Shaw in a close play at the plate. When the ball arrived at the plate, the runner was on top of Shaw, making the error call a difficult one.

Carolina second baseman Butch Watts twisted his ankle while sliding into third after singling in the first inning. Watts stayed on base as a two-on, one - out UNC threat died, but he was replaced by sophomore Charlie Thomas at the start of the second inning, and Thomas triggered the winning Tar Heel rally in the fifth.

Thomas—who had doubled in his first appearance in the third—lined a single to left leading off the fifth with the game in a 2-2 deadlock. First baseman Danny Talbott then rolled what was intended to be a sacrifice bunt along the third base line. But Danny beat the throw to first to put Tar Heels at first and second with none out.

Bob Bonczek executed Coach Walter Rabb's strategy— which was to follow Talbott's bunt with a second straight sacrifice, to perfection, moving Thomas to third and Talbott to second.

The left-hand hitting Hume followed with the longest sock of the day, to deep right-center, but Tech center fielder Bob Dickerson caught up with the ball and made the catch after a long run.

Thomas tagged up and scored easily, with the run which turned out to be the clincher.

Stone went from rags-to-riches when Carolina rallied to tie the game in the fourth.

Shaw plated the first run when he cracked a soft line-drive single to left-center to drive in Bob Hume, who had walked and moved to second by beating the throw there on third baseman L. E. Sawyer's sacrifice. Sawyer took third on Shaw's hit, while John himself raced to second on the throw to the plate.

At this point, with pitcher Stone batting, Rabb called for a suicide squeeze bunt. Stone missed his bunt attempt, and Sawyer was a dead duck at the plate.

Carolina, which failed to score after putting two men on base in each of the first and second frames, and getting a runner to third with one out in the third, will meet the Techmen again this afternoon at 2:30 on Emerson Field.

Ace Parker Joins UNC Football Staff

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Clarence Ace Parker, for 19 years a member of the Duke football staff, Friday was named an assistant football coach at the University of North Carolina.

Parker, a member of football's Hall of Fame, will fill the vacancy created when Vito Ragazzo resigned to become head coach at Virginia Military Institute.

Head Coach Jim Hickey said Parker would handle the offensive backfield.

Athletic Director C. P. (Chuck) Erickson, who announced the appointment of Parker, said, "we at UNC have known Ace for many years and we are especially familiar with his ability."

Parker, who resigned from Duke two weeks ago, said, "I realized I should remain in football. I have spent too much of my life in the game to leave it now. I had several attractive coaching offers, but the Carolina job had special appeal because it permitted my family to remain in North Carolina."

Parker is expected to join the Tar Heel staff within the next few days. The football squad currently is in the second week of spring practice.

Parker was named an All-America back in 1936 and after graduation played professionally with the old Brooklyn Dodgers of the National Football League. He was a unanimous choice for all-pro honors in 1938. He also played two seasons of professional baseball with the Philadelphia Athletics.

After wartime service in the Navy, Parker managed the Durham Bulls of the Class B Carolina League from 1948 through 1952.

Parker left Duke after the resignation of Head Coach Bill Murray and the hiring of Tom Harp of Cornell to replace him.

No Late Hours In Honor Dorm

Vandy Experiment Works

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

An "Honor Dormitory" for women students at Vanderbilt University was established this academic year, and from all indications the idea has been a smashing success.

Rules in the dormitory are few in number and lenient towards all residents.

Heading the list of "missing rules" is the fact that at Kensington House there are no late-hour restrictions. Barbara Brosby, writing in The Vanderbilt Hustler, has this to say about the late hours:

"The dominant symbol of an honor dorm to many people is its lack of closing hours. Kensington residents feel that the main significance of the closing policy is that it emphasizes the freedom of the girls have in all their activities.

"Most of the Kensington girls say they come in earlier or at the same time they would if living at the Quad. (Branscomb Quadrangle, the major women's living area).

"They say that often they and their dates don't feel as obligated to stay out to closing hours every night."

Another Hustler writer, Judy Carmack, stated that the pressure of staying out earlier or later than they wish is now gone. She wrote, "Most coeds feel that they actually come in earlier than they did before."

The criterion for selection of the residents are rigid. A release by the Office of the Dean of Women states that "only those juniors and seniors who are committed to the highest personal standards and to maximum scholastic achievement are eligible to live in the Honor Dormitory."

At present, there are 22 junior and 18 seniors who have met the requirements and been invited to live at Kensington.

Miss Crosby, in writing of the advantages offered by life in Kensington, placed "informality" at the head of the list.

"Girls like being able to go into the lobby wearing slacks. They enjoy being able to go downstairs and watch TV with the other girls and their dates.

"Informality is symbolic of a home atmosphere to the girls. Talk to a girl about her college dorm, and you will often discover how possessive she feels about her room. She wants it to be her home.

"Her room often becomes her means of fighting the impersonality of college life. Kensington residents feel that their entire dorm is a means of destroying this impersonality."

The community spirit abounds at Kensington — each girls seems to feel that she is responsible not only for herself but for her friends who also live in the dorm.

Dean of Women Nora Chaffin said the girls have taken the responsibility that was previously held by floor counselors and house mothers. She said the girls "like the fact that they are running the dorm themselves. The coeds have taken the initiative."

The few rules that do exist are for the benefit and protection of the residents.

Each girl has her own key to the dorm. This is not to keep people in, but to keep people out, according to Dean Chaffin.

Guests must leave the dorm by 12 each night, for the convenience of other residents.

Men guests may be entertained only in the public lounge areas.

No alocholic beverages are allowed in the dorm.

Juanita Goodman, a graduate of Duke, summed up the feelings about the Honor Dormitory when she said, "From the beginning I felt that an honor dormitory was a good idea, and so far, nothing has destroyed this impression."

Book Thief Identified

The book thief whose name was being traced by Booketeria officials Thursday has been identified and turned over to the Book Exchange office.

The Book Ex will turn their file in to Dean of Men William Long for prosecution.

Any other people who have lost books should go to the Booketeria and attempt to find them on the shelves.

Markle Scholar Selected

Dr. Frank C. Wilson Jr., assistant professor of orthopedic surgery at the School of Medicine, has been appointed a Markle Scholar in Academic Medicine.

He is one of 25 young medical scientists in the U. S. and Canada selected for the honor by the John and Mary R. Markle Foundation of New York City.

The sum of $30,000 will be paid—$6,000 a year for five years—to the medical school at which the Scholars are faculty members.

The Markle Foundation funds are used to supplement salaries, to assist in research or to otherwise help the scholar develop as a teacher or investigator.

Wilson's major research interests are in the use of antibiotics for bone and joint infections. He has been successful with a unique orthopedic procedure known as knee arthroplasty, in which a patient's diseased knee joints are complete removed and replaced with artificial metal knee joints.

The Marke Foundation now has selected 11 medical faculty members at UNC as Scholars. Its grants have been made annually since 1948 "to relieve the faculty shortage in medical schools by giving support to young teachers and investigators early in their careers."

School Accepts 70 Out Of 600

The 70 students who will enter the School of Medicine next fall were selected from more than 600 applications.

In his annual report to the UNC Medical Alumni Association here, Dean Isaac M. Taylor said that competition for admission to the medical school increases as the babies born during the post-World War II boom reach medical school age.

He said that plans are being made to increase the number of new students entering medicine here from 70 to 75 in the fall of 1967.

The UNC medical school now has 279 students, one under a full complement of 280 and probably the largest student body in its history.

2. Any organization with a "discriminatory clause" in its by-laws or constitution should not be eligible for Student Government funds.

Dickson told the DTH that two Negro students, whom he refused to name, had told him they would protest to the Office of Education in Washington if fraternities and sororities practicing discrimination were permitted to receive Student Government funds.

Dickson said he based his decision refusing Student Government funds to organizations practicing discrimination on the following statement from the U. S. Office of Education.

United States Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel wrote on June 17, 1965:

". . . It is apparent that an institution which maintains a fraternity system as a part of its activities and overall program is responsible under the Civil Rights Act requirements for assuring that discrimination is not practiced by the fraternities in the system."

It has been suggested that Congress later overruled this action. Dickson said he is investigating this now.

UNC Unveils Big Building Program

CHAPEL HILL, NC. (AP)—Officials here Saturday unveiled a two million square foot building program they hope to get approved by the 1967 General Assembly.

Dr. William C. Friday, Consolidated University president, and acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson said the construction program is needed "to cope with problems of expected enrollments, especially increased number of students on the graduate and professional levels."

Also planned for the 1967-69 biennium are more residence halls for women students and an expanded health center.

Friday said the price of the 24-points program would not be known until studies are made by state agencies. Many of the projects, he said, would be subsidized by federal funds, foundation grants, alumni gifts, corporations and from self liquidating programs.

He gave these highlights of the proposed expansion program:

A dramatic arts building including a theater, classroom and other facilities; social science classroom buildings; physical science buildings, renovations of lower quadrangle dormitories for use of women students, residence halls for 2,000 students, a "bed tower addition" to North Carolina Memorial Hospital, a "model nursing home" and center for chronic diseases, 300 apartments units for married students, a continuation education center for adults, other health buildings, including a child development center, a research animal farm for animals used in medical research; rehabilitation center, a health facilities research center for hospital administrators, a new building in the school of business administration, and a new student infirmary.

Also a public health and environmental health training center to be a cooperative venture with the federal government's new $25 million environmental health center in the Research Triangle Park, and a number of additions and renovations to present buildings.

3 Million OK'd For New Dorm

A $3 million federal college housing loan was announced by Congressman Horace Kornegay Friday for the building of ten-story Hinton James residence hall.

The Housing and Urban Development Department made the grant. Work must begin within two months and the building completed by September of next year.

The 1,000 man residence hall will be located on the newly - developed South campus across from Ehringhaus. It is named in honor of UNC's first student, Hinton James, who walked from his home in Burgaw to Chapel Hill to enroll in 1795.

It is scheduled to be completed by the fall of 1967 at a cost of about $3 million, including the grounds and furnishings.

H. L. Coble of Greensboro is the general contractor.

Want To Fly? UNC Club Has Plane, Teacher

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

The Chapel Hill Flying Club has purchased a new Cherokee 140 airplane and hired a full-time instructor to better "promote aviation education and safety."

The club was ncorporated in 1961 as a non - profit organization.

A membership drive is now underway. Any students or Chapel Hill residents interested in receiving expert flight training towards getting a private license can join the club and begin flying immediately.

There is a $40 initiation fee and monthly dues of $10. The cost of renting the old club plane — an Aeronca 11 AC — is $5 per hour and the instruction fee is $5 per hour. This is considerably lower than any other airport rates in the area.

Usually six to 10 hours of dual flight are required before the student can solo. The student then performs several hours of flight around the airport.

These hours include "touch-and-go" landings in which the pilot makes an approach to the runway, lands the plane and takes off again without coming to a full stop.

After mastering the basic flight techniques the student is allowed to go on his first solo cross-country trip.

In order to get a private pilot's license the student must log at least 40 hours of flying time and pass both written and practical tests.

All lessons are taught from Horace Williams airport by instructor Woody Woodall. He may be contacted at 929-3274.

Committee To Rule On Two Banned Speakers Tomorrow

Wilkinson, Aptheker Re-Invited To UNC

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The student - faculty committee on visiting speakers will meet tomorrow afternoon to discuss the recommendation it will make to Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson in connection with the new invitation that has been extended to Frank Wilkinson and Herbert Aptheker.

The new invitation was made on March 14 by the same organizations that made the original invitation, except the editor of The Daily Tar Heel was omitted so that the invitation would not be made public.

President of the Student Body Paul Dickson said that the new invitation was made upon the recommendation of the lawyers who have been studying the possibilities of a court case involving the denial to Wilkinson and Aptheker of the right to speak on campus.

Frank Wilkinson, head of a committee to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities, was denied the right to speak on campus March 2. Communist theortician Herbert Aptheker was not allowed to speak here March 9.

Wilkinson has agreed to speak here in the future if permitted. Aptheker has not yet accepted the recent invitation.

The latest invitation, issued March 14, requested that Wilkinson be permitted to speak here March 23 and Aptheker March 25. It requested that if these dates were unsatisfactory that these men be permitted to speak here at a subsequent date convenient to the University sometime in the immediate future; in April, May, the summer session, or the early fall.

Dickson said, "The invitation offered many alternative dates to see if the speakers would be permitted to speak here at any time or if they had been refused permission just for two specific dates.

"We tried to learn this from Sitterson without issuing another invitation, but he refused to tell us anything."

The information concerning whether or not Wilkinson and Aptheker will be allowed to speak here is the determining factor in the proposed court case.

"If the Chancellor allows Wilkinson and Aptheker to speak on campus, there will not be any need for a court case," Dickson said.

The students backing the invitation are awaiting Sitterson's decision before continuing the drive for money to finance the proposed court case.

Sitterson said, "I'm puzzled about the whole thing because I don't know what we will do with the recommendation after it is made.

"The students who extended the invitations will be out of office and I don't know who we'll be expected to deal with."

Dickson will be the first of the students signing the letter to go out of office in the near future. The inauguration of the new student body president is scheduled for April 14.

The signers of the invitation are President of the Student Body Paul Dickson; George Nicholson, III, chairman of the Carolina Forum; Bob Powell, Carolina Forum Executive Director; Jim Medford, YMCA President; John Greenbacker, Di-Phi President; Carolina Political Union Chairman Eric Van Loon; Gary Waller, chairman of sstudents for a Democratic Society and Stuart Matthews, a member of SDS.

Morrison Vote Invalidated By Constitutional Council

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The Constitutional Council drove Elections Board Chairman Art Hays deeper into martyrdom Friday night by invalidating all Morrison Residence Hall ballots.

Candidates running for legislature seats in Morrison will have to run in Tuesday's run-off elction because one of the candidates withdrew from the election on election day.

The Council ruled that the withdrawal of UP candidate Bob Pittard at noon last Tuesday invalidated balloting in Morrison.

This addition to the run-off election is the third group of offices to be placed before voters again.

The office of President of the Student Body, legislature seats in Men's District V, and now Men's District XII (Morrison) are being placed on Tuesday's ballot.

Teddy O'Toole (UP) will run against Bob Powell (SP) for student body president.

In MD V (Old East, Old West, Carr, and Battle-Vance, Pettigrew) candidates will be Joe Chandler (SP), Bruce Jolly (UP), and Art Robinson (UP).

In MD XII candidates will be Joe Ford (UP), Dick Levy (SP), Frank Longest (SP), Frank Peterson (UP), Lacy Reaves (SP), Eric Van Loon (SP), and Bob Wilbur (UP).

Hays said the ruling of the Council has "given the elections board an impossible task even though they found the elections board had committed no errors.

Since the elections law does not state when a candidate may withdraw, Hays said, candidates may withdraw at any time up until after the polls close.

"It opens up wide areas of sabatoging elections," Hays said. "Any party can have one candidate withdraw if they don't like the way the voting is going, and cancel the whole election."

Hays indicated he would resign from the post of elections board chairman if there are any election mix-ups in Tuesday's vote. He is the fifth chairman this year.

The MD V ballots were declared invalid by the Constitutional Council last week when UP candidate Bruce Jollys name appeared as an SP candidate. Incumbent SP legislator Joe Chandler filed the protest.

Hays called the decision in validating the Morrison election there "asinine," since it would have been impossible to remove Pittard's name from the ballot even if he had withdrawn earlier.

Absentee ballots for Tuesday's election may be picked up at the Graham Memorial information esk.

Hays said a meeting of the elections board today at 3 p.m. in the Grail Room is compulsory.

Hockfield Plans To Enter Protest Of By-Law Denial

Another legislator has entered the protest over the constitutionality of recent actions of the Student Body President and Student Legislature.

Edward Hockfield told the Daily Tar Heel yesterday he will challenge the constitutionality of the bill passed by Student Legislature which suspended a provision of their by-laws.

The by-laws give the Rules Committee the right to review the by-laws of all groups which receive funds from Student Government. Under a bill passed by legislature, the committee would not have to review the by-laws of fraternities or sororities which have been approved by the Office of the Dean of Men when they want funds to purchase televisions.

Hockfield feels the legislature cannot arbitrarily suspend its by-laws. He will formally launch his protest next week.

Hugh Blackwell and Steve Salmony announced Thursday they will challenge the constitutionality of an "executive order" issued by Paul Dickson on March 17. The order would prevent the implementation of the black and white-color television act.

Morrison Pins

The Morrison house pins have arrived and are being sold to house and college officers and former officers.

The pins, styled after fraternity pins, are diamond-shaped and have "Morrison" engraved down the center. They are 14 caret gold with a chain connecting the body and the house initial.

The initial supply is being sold at $7.50 to officers only, but when additional pins arrive they will be sold at the same price to all residents.

Men's Glee Club Makes Second European Tour

By BOB ROYSTER
Special to the DTH

The UNC Men's Glee Club is busy rehearsing and making final preparations for its month-long European tour this summer.

This will be the club's second tour of Europe. The first was in 1927 under the sponsorship of Alanson B. Houghton, United States ambassador to Great Britain.

The first stop will be Amsterdam, Holland, where the club, directed by Dr. Joe Carter and accompanied by Michael Kelly, will present several concerts for the International Rotary Club.

They will then travel to Lyon, France, stopping for a short time in Cologne, Germany. At Lyon, the club will be joined by Nelson McDaniel, participant in the "UNC Junior Year at Lyon" program, for several concerts at the University at Lyon.

From Lyon, the club will journey to Geneva, Switzerland and on to Munich, Germany, for several concerts behind the Iron Curtain.

At Leipzig, Germany, the club will take part in a social gathering with a communist youth group.

The club will then tour Wittenberg, Germany, and visit the cathedral where Martin Luther nailed his famed Ninety-Five Thesis in 1517.

The West Berlin Senate will host the club during a stay in Berlin and tour of East Berlin.

Copenhagen, Denmark, will be the next stop where the club will be the guest of "Meet the Danes Program." It will present a concert in the Trivali Gardens.

A Sunday concert at Westminister Abbey in London will close out the tour.

Visiting Editor Gets Lesson From UNC 'Love Mongers'

Pam Saylor, former editor of the University of Tennessee Beacon, was in Chapel Hill this weekend. Here is what she "learned" on her first trip to the "Southern part of Heaven."

" 'What did you learn in school today dear little boy of mine' 'I learned . . .' and so on goes the song.

Well, this is what I learned "in school" Saturday while on the UNC campus: that there is a Confederate memorial in the square of McCorkle Place known as "Silent Sam" which has a significantly collegiate legend behind it . . . that there is an element, much like a similar element on University of Tennessee campus, that thrives on beards, sandals, dirty hair and protest songs sung (poorly) with out-of-tune guitars and improvised instruments. all used unquestionably for the purpose of drawing attention to themselves . . . and that the immediate watchword of this element Saturday was "Make Love Not War."

The 100 UNC students who gathered around the statue were but a quiet sampling of a weekend of nationwide anti-war demonstrations that included a showpiece march down Fifth Avenue in New York City and similar displays in Washington, D. C., Cape Kennedy, Dayton, Ohio, and San Francisco.

New York sponsors of the "Make Love Not War" march claimed to be over 30,000 strong, while there were 3,000 in San Francisco that went up Market Street to a civic center Viet Nam protest rally.

In New York, lady parade marshals persuaded two youths from the League for Sexual Freedom not to display placards reading, "Make Love, Not War," lest opponents seize the chance to make the marchers seem "a bunch of nuts."

This ingeniously placed comma might have accounted for a portion of UNC students who gathered here yesterday at high noon.

Elliot Krames of Greensboro sported a "Make Love, Not War" (notice the comma) pin this week to go along with signs advertising the "Sing Out for Peace and Freedom."

Significant or not, the sing out was accompanied by the Make Love. Not War Jug Band.

"Oh freedom, oh freedom . . ."

Ah, freedom: a much disputed word that has grown trite with over misuse by sometimes well-meaning, but often ill-advised, fanatics in regard to th U. S. stand in Viet Nam.

What is freedom? That is, of course, to be answered by each individual.

"Make Love Not War." Tell that to the over 200,000 GIs fighting in the mosquito-infested swamps of hot, Southeast Asia. There could be no doubt that these men would rather not "make war" for war is never a pleasing, nor a quickly settled, task to have undertaken.

A Dangerous Move

The renewal of invitations to Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson was an ill-considered action.

The Daily Tar Heel has consistently upheld the right of these men and any others to speak on the campus, and has supported efforts to overcome any kind of speaker ban — from the General Assembly or the school administration.

But this does not mean we abandon common sense and throw reason out the door in a willful and obstinate attempt to prove a point — at the expense of the University.

Some students, it appears, are doing just that.

The new invitations are confusing. As Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson pointed out, most of those students who signed the letter on behalf of the organizations they head will soon be out of office. What happens to the invitations once those who extended them are replaced? Will the new Student Government president — to be elected Tuesday — follow the present SG head's lead? What does the administration do in the meantime?

The purpose in re-issuing the invitations is not clear. Perhaps the intention is to establish a "pattern of rejection" which might strengthen a court test of the speak. SG President Paul Dickson said it is an attempt to find out if the earlier ban on these two speakers was permanent or only applicable to the February dates first mentioned.

An effort was made by the group of nine signers to keep the re-invitations secret. They succeeded for a week, and were lucky no one talked sooner. Things such as this just are not kept quiet, and to think they can be is naive.

Regardless of intent, the effect of the new invitations can only bring the Uiversity harm. With state legislators up for election in the May primaries, the speaker controversy is bound to be an important campaign issue. There is every reason to think that the vast majority of the people of the state oppose letting these men speak, and they will elect legislators solely on positions of support for a speaker ban.

Carson Gregory, Harnett County legislator, recently predicted that the 1967 General Assembly will restore the speaker ban law. Continued stirring of these passions will aid him and others in their fight to reinstate the law.

Maybe the invitations were a good idea. Maybe they would have proved a point and answered a question. Maybe nobody would have found out about them and got upset.

Maybe.

But things do not always work out as planned. And the inviters in this case were not prepared for that eventuality.

Can Girls Hurt War Effort?

If you're a Hollywood starlet, by all means stay away from Viet Nam, says Rev. Bob Harrington, the "Chaplain of Bourbon Street."

He thinks you might hurt the war effort. ?????????

According to Harrington, "One sexpot can undo the work of 100 chaplains

"After the visit of one of these voluptuous entertainers and her return to the United States, the boys are so stirred up that things begin to happen. Consultations with the chaplain, chapel attendance and letters home to mother fall off alarmingly.

"The incidence of venereal disease skyrockets," Harrington continues. "And believe me, there is ample lust in Viet Nam. There are what is known as Saigon tea girls coming out of every nook and cranny."

He even says the starlets' visits hurt the GI's morale more than do the bullets of the Viet Cong.

Being somewhat conservative morally, I can sympathize with the Reverend's view toward the tea girls. But Ann-Margaret and the rest of 'em bringing down the spirits of our country's fighting men?

Never!

As everybody well knows, the United States wouldn't have won World War II had to not been for the invention of cheese cake — not just on pin-up photos but in the flesh.

During the conflict, Hollywood starlets traveled to distant lands on their so-called "good-will" missions.

Their singing left much to be desired, judging by what I've heard from veterans; but, then again, it wasn't merely the music that interested the soldiers, most of whom has eyes as well as ears.

Korea meant additional demands on the starlets' patriotism. However, they went overseas anyway, even if their press agents had to prod them.

And about the only reason the draft continued after the Korean War was that Marilyn Monroe didn't go abroad often enough to spur the re-enlistment rate.

What's more, the government would not have to pull students out of college to meet its manpower requirements if Jayne Mansfield appeared in the right places.

And I am fervently convinced that Ann-Margaret's Viet Nam tour has caused enough soldiers to stay in the Army to explain the recent temporary lowering of the draft quotas.

So for goodness sake, all you publicity-hungry starlets, please do us students a favor by traveling to Southeast Asia.

Please.

Tht way, you'll help a lot of us remain in college since the draft boards won't be as pressed for new victims.

Now — about weapons with which to shorten the war by undermining the enemy's morale. Do what Rev. Harrington suggests; Send Roy Rogers and Martha Ray rather than Jayne Mansfield to Viet Nam. To North Viet Nam, that is.

And when the enemy discovers they'll have to listen to Rogers and Ray instead, they'll get so angry they won't even remember to write their mothers.

Letters To The Editor

Letter From Viet Nam

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I just received a Charlotte Observer Newsletter dated 1 March 1966 announcing that "UNC students, alert and anxious to test the new policy, say they will invite a Communist to speak . . .". After a little fist-pounding and cigar-chewing I felt I had to write you.

We get to hear a Communist speaker every evening — the name is "Hanoi Hanna" — we get the views of all the top Communist spokesmen thru her. Despite the wonderful opportunity we do not listen to her very often. We see the results of Communist lectures daily.

The story goes this way: first week, a friendly young man and his small group visit a small un-commited village and talk to the people about how terrible the bombs are and how to increase the rice crop, just conversation: next week the young man shows up with a regular lecture group and puts on a command performance, command for the audience; the next week the young men and women of the village are organized into a military group — VC style.

From here the plot can go in many directions. Results: from our selfish viewpoint it often means friendly casualties, from the rice-roots viewpoint it means the loss of an entire village into VC control. We hear other Communist voices; the tommy-gun in the theater killing innocents, the mine that blows up a truck load of rice workers scattering lunch buckets and babies with equal disregard. And even closer, the sound of the bullet that kills your buddy.

Of all people in the United States, they are the most qualified to talk on communism: and it is their constitutionally guaranteed right to speak, long and loud. I hope you stand beside them, they have learned the hard way exactly what communism means.

Leadership Needed

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It was deplorable that the North Carolina legislature passed the speaker ban law, but it was not an incredible act. It is well known that politicians, local, state and national, generally speaking, are not notable for courage, insight or wisdom. Most of them, I am sorry to note, have not yet entered the 20th century. Passage of the speaker ban law is proof of this. Many of them are frightened little "men."

But most of us, not all, who were privileged to know the intellectual and spiritual giants that inspired the students under the administrations of Francis P. Venable, Edward Kidder Graham, Henry W. Chase and Frank Porter Graham are simply appalled at the timidity, the lack of faith of those who now stumble about in their shoes.

A university "leadership" which has lost faith in its students and ideas cannot lead. People and ideas are the cement, the matrix upon which a humane society is built. It is not the "Great Society" built upon the projects of the war industries extracted for profit from the resources of the peasants of Viet Nam and other defenseless peasant peoples of the underdeveloped countries.

I do not know Dr. Aptheker, who was not allowed to speak upon the campus of UNC. But I am not frightened by his ideas, whatever they are. I am willing to let the market place decide which ideas are wheat and which are chaff.

An administration which is not willing to permit this is not worthy of the people of North Carolina. It cannot command the respect of the student body, not to mention its mission, which is to inspire and lead the students and people to a future worthy of man.

I have not lost faith in the students of UNC. I am inspired by their courage and intelligence in a period of mediocrity and conformity. Nor have I lost faith in the people. What North Carolina and the University need today is a rebirth of the leadership of an Aycock, a Joyner, a McIver, a Graham and a Josephus Daniels.

These men believed in the free exchange of ideas. They believed in people, not ciphers. They instinctively knew that the "feedback" from the computer was no better than the 'feed-in." They knew that people were more important than profits.

Why Criticize MRA?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The editors of the DTH have pronounced themselves strongly in opposition to the MRA program, and just as surely have they condemned the members of Sing Out '66 as "misguided idealists."

One editor condemned them because they are "seeking to impose moral armaments that our society has rightfully discarded." Since when have the moral principles of honesty, love, purity and unselfishness become outmoded so as to be "rightfully discarded."? Since when has America become established as a country which "rightfully discards" such principles? I say that our great land never will adopt such a policy.

I was dismayed to see that our campus ministers found fault with the Sing Out group. The statement was made by one of the ministers, with all due respect to him, "MRA claims they're a religious group . . ." I have talked extensively with Mr. John Parker, of the group which appeared here last Monday night.

According to Mr. Parker, the group is not a religion, nor is it to take the place of any religion. Yet their principles are common to all religions, and to an atheist, they are plain common sense.

Many people have the mistaken idea that the group is out to change the world overnight. This is a grave error, because they entertain no such notions. They have a very realistic idea about the work they are to do. They know that they may see no direct concrete results during the time they are with Sing Out, yet they have given a year from high school and college to dedicate themselves to help make the world a little bit better place to live.

Their purpose is not so much to change the world overnight, but rather two-fold in scope. (1) They want to give the people of the world a clearer picture of American youth and the American way. (2) They are training men and women to live in a clean, upright manner. They are building a new generation which will be able to face modern problems with a love for clean living and a fear of God in its heart.

I haven't seen the editors of the DTH come up with any better plan for building the leaders of tomorrow. Until they do, I'd suggest that they refrain from criticizing those who have the courage to take a stand and make a move for a better America.

Yours sincerely,
David Wheeler

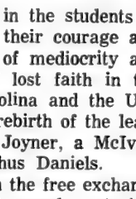
Supreme Court Defeats Constitution Again

The Supreme Court has struck another blow for "right" and against the Constitution. After the country went to all the trouble to ratify the 24th Amendment to abolish poll taxes in Federal elections, the Court has announced that we needn't have bothered. Poll taxes, it says, are unconstitutional.



The decision, delivered Thursday, was odd in several ways. It came in a suit filed by the Attorney General at the direction of one provision of the Voting Rights Act. The whole reason for the fuss over the rather puny taxes in the first place was that they were used as a means of racial discrimination. The Court, however, expressly denied that race had anything to do with the decision, which was based on the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

In the majority decision, Justice William O. Douglas said, "We conclude that a state violates the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment whenever it makes the affluence of the voter or payment of any fee an electoral standard." He further termed that to use wealth as a voting qualification in any form is "to introduce a capricious or irrelevant factor" into the registration process.

Noble-sounding words. Most Americans, I for one, would agree with Justice Douglas and the five who sided with him that a poll tax should not be imposed on a person desiring to vote. Its desirability, however, is not the question. The question — the only question before the Court — is its constitutionality. On this point I side with the dissenting Justices, John Marshall Harlan, Potter Stewart and Hugo Black.

As Harlan and Stewart point out in their dissent, the equal protection clause does not guarantee that all people shall be treated alike, regardless of circumstances. It merely protects people against arbitrarily different treatment. That is, the proposed instrument of differentiation, or classification — in this case, the poll tax — must have some reasonable basis for its use.

To say that property qualifications for voting are wrong is one thing. To say that there are no rational grounds for supporting them and that they are "capricious" is to fly in the face of American history. Property qualifications were used when the Constitution was written.

Poll taxes themselves have a long history. No one can seriously argue that the framers of the 14th Amendment had the abolition of the poll tax in mind. True, times have changed; but unless we intend to simply scrap the Constitution, we should not cavalierly dismiss the intentions of the men who wrote it.

Moreover, as Harlan argues, a rational case can certainly be made that the payment of a small poll tax (Virginia's is $1.50) promotes civic responsibility and that anyone too lazy to pay should not be allowed to vote. This may not be a convincing argument, but it is not totally unreasonable or capricious.

Justice Harlan has long stood as one of the conservative bulwarks on the Court, but Hugo Black is as liberal as they come. If he thinks the Court has gone too far, everyone should pause to think about it. Black pointed out that the Court had previously upheld the constitutionality of the poll tax on two occasions and that since the Constitution had not been amended on that point, he would continue to uphold it. The Justice makes sense.

The biggest danger in the practice of judicial review is that each set of justices can write its own idea of what the law should be into the Constitution. Like no other High Tribunal in our history, the Warren Court is doing just that. Apparently the members of the Court feel that they are there to correct what is wrong with the American system of government. If so, they are incorrect.

Their function is to interpret the law, not to write it. They must judge the validity of laws according to the Constitution as it stands, not as they would like it to be. Article V provides two ways to amend the Constitution. Either Congress or a convention may submit amendments, and the states must approve them. The Court is not a part of the amending process.

Few people will mourn the passing of the poll tax, and that is the insidious thing about the Court's action. By making popular decisions, the High Bench can eat away at the Constitution without causing a great outcry. The Court couldn't get away with applying the one man - one vote rule to the United States Senate or with taking away from a state the right to establish its own capital. Yet it can get away with the abolition of literacy tests and poll taxes and "little Federal" legislatures. The damage to the Constitution is the same.

The Constitution may be old, but it has served us well. When it must be changed, there are prescribed ways to do it. The Supreme Court has no part in making those changes.

As Justice Harlan said, "The fact that the coup de grace (to the State poll tax) has been administered by this Court instead of being left to the affected states or to the Federal political process should be a matter of continuing concern to all interested in maintaining the proper role of this tribunal under our scheme of government."

Piano-Playing Duo Performs Tuesday

By SUSAN ZARR

Bela Bartok's Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion, one of the few genuine masterpieces produced in this century will conclude a program of contemporary music to be performed Tuesday night by duo - pianists Lilian and James Pruett. The program, one of several concerts included in the Spring Festival of Contemporary Music now in progress on the UNC campus, will begin at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Other composers to be represented during this particular evening are Norman Dello Joio, John Diercks, and Paul Hindemith. Bello Joio is an American whose works, in practically every medium, are enjoying the blessings of wide performance currently. The Pruetts will perform his Aria and Toccata for two pianos.

John Diercks, chairman of the music department of Hollins College in Virginia, is this year residing in Chapel Hill as a Hunanities Fellow under the Cooperative Program in the Humanities sponsored by UNC and Duke University. His contribution to Tuesday's program, entitled Night Vision, is described by the composer as belonging to the nocturne genre.

During his extremely productive career, Paul Hindemith set himself the task of jor instrument. The Sonata for Two Pianos, an extensive work exhibiting rhapsodic as well as strictly formal traits, is one of the results of this ambitious project.

The concluding Bartok Sonata, a composition of almost unprecendented dynamism at the time of its completion in 1937, is scored for two pianos, three tympani, xylophone, two side - drums, cymbals, suspended cymbal, bass drum, triangle and tam - tam. This impressive array of percussion will be manned by Keith McClelland and William Bolen, both students at the University. Bartok, by the way, has a sort of tenuous connection with North Carolina. Under the sponsorship of ASCAP, he spent the winter of 1943-44 in Asheville and while there, composed his last original score, a Sonata for Solo Violin commissioned by Yehudi Menuhin. Bartok died in New York in 1945.

Tuesday evening's principal artists, Lilian and James Pruett, both received the Ph.D. degree from UNC and are both presently teaching in the Triangle area, Mrs. Pruett at North Carolina College in Durham and Mr. Pruett at the University, where he is also head of the Music Library. Their concert appearance, as well as all events sponsored by the Spring Festival of Contemporary Music, will be open to the public free of charge.

LILIAN AND JAMES PRUETT will play Bartok's "Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion" Tuesday night at 8 in Hill Hall.

Carolina Youth Comes Back Home

By JUDY BOLCH

Send a North Carolina boy to Harvard and what happens? Does he become a young man disillusioned with the South and determined to turn his back on that unenlightened area?

Not in the case of John R. Taylor Jr. who grew up in one of Piedmont N. C.'s whistle-stop communities.

"Rusty" Taylor has returned home with new ideas, new enthusiasm and a desire to stay in North Carolina—both to see what the State can do for him and what he can contribute to the State.

Now a first-year law student at the University, the tall, articulate Harvard graduate explains his feelings about his home State concisely:

"It's the most progressive state in the South, thanks to the initiative of Hodges, Sanford and others. There's no question about its industrial growth and its emphasis on education."

"It used to be, when Southern boys got into the Ivy League, they had flown the coop. Now they're coming back. You might call it a sort of quasi-missionary zeal, but it's not wholly altruistic at all. There's a great opportunity in the South for education and fulfillment."

Why did Taylor, who was president of his class for four years during his Harvard undergraduate career, choose the UNC Law School?

"I knew if I was serious about coming back to North Carolina, it would be advantageous to have an educational foundation here. Besides, no other school teaches North Carolina law better."

The winner of a Harvard National Scholarship (an award similar to the UNC Morehead Scholarship) and now the holder of the Van Hecke Law Scholarship, Taylor is an avid supporter of both Harvard and UNC.

Looking back to the days before he enrolled at Cambridge, he was uncertain about a school with Harvard's towering reputation.

"I was afraid the students might be a bunch of psuedo-intellectuals, but they're definitely not." He calls the "multiple diversity" of most of the students amazing. "Not only had they all done well academically, they excelled in something else too."

UNC also has impressed him. "The students are top-notch, and there's great classroom participation. I've been very pleased with my acceptance in the law school."

He refused to compare the two schools or make generalizations about any differences. "It's hard to do that because I'm in such different disciplines. It's like comparing a horse and a cow."

During his first semester here, Taylor has become part of a number of extra-curricular projects, despite his avowed intention to limit himself.

Although he holds what amounts to an around-the-clock position as a "housemother" for a residence hall, Taylor has also found time to initiate "Operation Match" in North Carolina. One of the originators of the computerized date program at Harvard, Taylor helped organize a local branch of the boy - meets - girl - via - computer game.

He has also joined the Young Democratic Club and helped head a campus drive to send a Thanksgiving Day telegram to soldiers in Viet Nam. That drive netted some 6,500 signatures for a telegram of support and appreciation.

The most unusual and perhaps most meaningful of Taylor's extra-curricular activities is one which reflects a more serious side of his personality. Despite his quick wit and outgoing manner, Taylor has a deep interest in other people.

This concern for the welfare of others has led to his involvement in a "Y" project which has 20 tutors who work with about 100 local school children who need aid in their school-work.

As head of the tutoring service, Taylor said, "It's a seemingly selfless activity, but it's so rewarding it's almost selfish.

"These kids are so eager to learn. We try to give them factual information and, hopefully, also serve as a sort of confidant. It's more than a teacher - student relationship. It's like a big brother-little brother one."

Many of Taylor's past activities and plans for the future are marked by this interest in people.

A government major at Harvard, he spent a summer and two months working with North Carolina agencies and helping co-ordinate the N. C. Fund and N. C. Volunteers programs with welfare departments.

After graduation, when he joins his father in the family developer-contractor business, he intends to continue working in the health, education and welfare areas. Both his parents who live in McLeansville are involved in similar poverty programs.

Young Mexican Architect Will Lecture At Ackland

A young Mexican architect will present three illustrated lectures and an exhibition in the Ackland Art Center this week. His subject is "The Latin American House, Prehispanic to Our Days."

Eduardo Langagne will lecture on the "Prehistoric House in Latin American" tomorrow at 4 p.m. Monday, he will speak on "The Latin American House During this Century." It is scheduled for Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Langagne has designed buildings in Ecuador, Chile and Spain, as well as in Mexico. He was one of the designers of the new National Museum of Anthropology in Mexico City which has attracted so much attention.

League Supports D.C. Home Rule

League of Women Voters' president, Mrs. Robert Wettach of Chapel Hill, this week called on local members to urge Congress to follow through on the job they began last year — the job of providing a plan which would allow the people of the District of Columbia to enjoy self - government as other Americans do.

Five years ago District citizens were given the right to take part in presidential elections but they still cannot take part in their own local government. Only a simple act of Congress would be required to give them a voice in the running of their city, Mrs. Wettach pointed out.

Congress started the job last session when each house passed bills for D. C. home rule. But they were vastly different proposals. Concerned citizens believe the time has come for both houses to finish the job and agree to a workable bill which would provide meaningful self - government for the District of Columbia.

Mrs. Wettach asked that citizens let their Congressmen know how urgent an issue they consider District home rule to be.

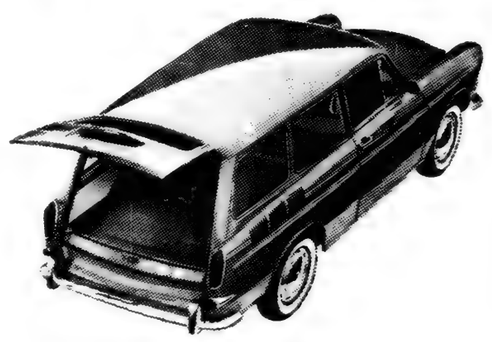
It would be less than honest to call it a station wagon.



We can't look you square in the eye and call this car a station wagon.

Compared to our bus-like station wagon, it just isn't big enough to deserve the name.

But we can positively call it a Squareback Sedan.

So we will. It's a Squareback Sedan. It costs $2279* And this is what you get:

You get a Volkswagen that holds 5 people plus a decent amount of luggage. (Or 2 people plus an indecent amount of luggage: twice as much as the trunks of the biggest sedans.)

You get everything that we've learned about making Volkswagens: the air-cooled rear engine, the torsion bar suspension, the synchromesh transmission, the blobless finish, the airtight fit.

You also get some things you never got on a VW: more power, disc brakes in the front, seats that adjust 49 ways, and a dozen other innovations.

But good as it is, a bus it's not.

So if you want to be brutally honest, you can think of the Squareback as a less-than-perfect station wagon.

But we'd rather have you think of it as a more-than-perfect sedan.

*Suggested retail price, P.O.E. $2279. Local prices and other dealer delivery charges, if any, additional.

Buddhists Demonstrate Against Ky

SAIGON — (AP) — Buddhist youths staged an antigovernment street demonstrations in Saigon last night while U. S. Marines consolidated a beachhead, newly won in their southernmost landing of the war, to protect river traffic to the capital.

Mountaing against Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military regime were political pressures which threatened—as others have done at intervals since the downfall of President Ngo Dinh Diem in 1963 — to complicate the fight against the Viet Cong.

Leaping into that fight were about 1,200 American leathernecks of the 1st battalion, 5th Marine regiment, specially trained in Hawaii for a special job in Viet Nam.

They stormed ashore in assault boats and helicopters in a driving rain at the mouth of the Saigon River, 35 miles southeast of Saigon. With Naval guns firing in support, there was no initial Viet Cong resistance. The main mission is to help shield from Communist harassment a shipping lane by which vital supplies are moved inland from the South China Sea Operations elsewhere cost the United States three planes. Of four crewmen in these crashes, three were killed and one is listed as missing in action.

One of the planes, an A4 Skyhawk from the nuclear-powered carried Enterprise, crashed in one of 38 attacks against North Viet Nam's transport and communication lines Friday. It went down about 60 miles north of the border during a bomb run on a highway ferry landing. The others fell during attacks on Viet Cong centers in the South.

Paraders Over Nation Protest War

NEW YORK (AP) — Thousands of people paraded down Fifth Avenue yesterday —to protest the war in Viet Nam. It was the showpiece in a weekend of nationwide anti-war demonstrations.

Hecklers threw insults, and some eggs and tomatoes, at the New York marchers, whose sponsors claimed they were 30,000 strong.

At one point, spectators broke through a shoulder-to-shoulder line of policemen guarding the parade route and engaged in a brief fist fight with marchers who were carrying Viet Cong flags.

More police moved in and restored order in a few moments. Three men were hustled away in a patrol wagon.

The marchers included veterans, clergy, students, children and old folks. There were few beatniks.

Two lady parade marshals persuaded two youths from the league for sexual freedom not to display placards reading "make love, not war," lest opponents seize the chance to make the marchers seem "a bunch of nuts."

In Washington, several hundred from rival groups demonstrated near the White House. Police arrested two men from the American Nazi party after they burned a Viet Cong flag taken from peace pickets.

At Cape Kennedy, Fla., about a dozen pickets marched at the main entrance to the space base—but it is remote from the populated area and there were few people at work on Saturday.

In Dayton, Ohio, a group of 60 started a five-block march to mail war protests letters to their Congressmen, and were joined by 20 or more by the time they reached the Post Office.

About 100 persons marched in downtown Buffalo without incident.

In San Francisco, 3,000 marched up Market Street to a civic center Viet Nam protest rally.

U. S. Changing Policy On China?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is holding the door ajar for a broad change in its China policy. At the moment, a key tactic is to blame Red China's isolation on Peking itself.

Just when Washington might shift to a policy of recognizing Communist China, favoring her entry into the United Nations and engaging in trade with her is unclear. But most agree the time still is years away.

It takes two to tango, and so far Peking continues to peratae the United States as her No. 1 capitalist-imperialist enemy. As Secretary of State Dean Rusk put it Friday, "We do not find at the present time a serious interest in Peking in improvement of relations."

Even with an overnight about-face by the Reds — which no one expects — the issues involved are of such giant proportions as to defy speedy readjustments.

One interlocking question is the Sino-Soviet rivalry and Washington's relations with Moxcow. Another is what to do about national China. Still another could be the structure of the United Nations.

Still, the latest round of official U. S. statements has an air of keeping the way open for a change sometime in the future.

This contrasts with hard-line talk in earlier years about U. S. steps to quarantine the Communist mainland.

One value of a more flexible posture is tactical at the United Nations. For instance, a growing number of countries favors peking's admission. Last year a General Assembly vote on this issue was a 47-47 tie with 20 members abstaining.

Washington still opposes a U. N. seat for Red China at this time. But faced with a diminishing margin in the world body, American strategists are weighing how to proceed at the next assembly meeting this fall.

Within the past few days, U. N. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg and Joseph J. Sisco, Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, have underscored in public statements the Communist Chinese demand for U. N. reorganization and expulsion of Nationalist China as her price for entry.

Many nations favoring Peking's admission do not want to expel Formosa.

Sisco questioned whether Red China wants to join the United Nations or really wishes to destroy it. And he asked U. N. members to weigh the serious consequences of her entry price.

"In actuality," he said, "Communist China is keeping itself out of the United Nations."

The Johnson administration has been giving some answers to scholars who in recent congressional testimoney and elsewhere have called for a modified U. S. policy.

Rusk, at a news conference Friday, again recited Peking's belligerancy on a wide range of issues from Southeast Asia to her dealings with the Soviets.

"Those of us who are carrying official responsibilities," the Secretary of State said, "have some rather harsh facts to come up against, and we have to deal with the situation as we find it."

Rusk recounted the continued U. S.-Chinese ambassadorial meetings at which he said the United States seeks improved relations. He recalled U. S. easing of its ban on travel by Americans to Red China, offers to exchange weather information and other efforts.

So long as Communist China continues to rebuff Washington the relationship remains status quo. But the other side of the question would present itself if Peking sweetens its tone.

A side issue at the moment is whether to recognize Outer Mongolia, the Pro-Soviet buffer state between Russia and China which is claimed by both the Communists and Nationalist Chinese.

Rusk said U. S. recognition of Outer Mongolia is "under consideration" — the same status that possiblity has held in Washington for several years.

But as a measure of the sensitivity of the subject, the Secretary of States' brief mentioning of it ,under, news conference questioning, was enough to ring alarms at once in U. S.-supported Formosa.

State Department sources said Nationalist China inquired about Rusk's statement yesterday and was told it represented no U. S. change.

H-Bomb Recovery Almost As Difficult As Finding It

PALOMARES BEACH, Spain (AP) — The elusive U. S. H-bomb is proving almost as difficult to snatch from its sea bottom resting place as it was to locate in the first place.

U. S. officials confessed yesterday that progress was disappointingly slow after a cable which the tiny submarine Alvin attached to the bomb-lost in a plane collision Jan. 17 — broke twice during attempts to pull the bomb into a more favorable position for recovery.

"This is a problem very serious and very complicated," said one U. S. official. "We will get that thing out, but as of this moment it's difficult to say exactly when."

Since the Alvin found and photographed the bomb March 15, Naval Task Force 65 under Rear Adm. William S. Guest has been trying to pull it from a 70-degree slope in 2,500 feet of water without appreciable success.

Major factors have been unfavorable weather, the depth involved, and the limited range of operation of the submersibles available for the recovery.

If recovery difficulties continue another 48 hours, the task force could turn to its newest undersea vehicle for results. This is "CURV" controlled unmanned recovery vehicle, originally designed at the Pasadena, Calif., naval weapons testing facility to recover spent torpedoes from the ocean's depths. It was flown here a day or two ago and is being assembled. It should be ready late tomorrow.

Gemini Astronauts Describe Wild Ride

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The Gemini 8 astronauts yesterday described their wild ride in space when their tiny spacecraft raced out of control as a bearable experience similar to a spin in an airplane.

During the height of the tumbling, though, they said, they did have difficulty reading over head panels.

Neil A. Armstrong, the troubled flight's command pilot, said at no time did he or Pilot David R. Scott feel they were about to lose consciousness.

"It was similar in many respects to a spin in an aircraft," Scott said.

"The experience was not particularly new to us," Armstong related. "I think it's appropriate to say all pilots, particularly test pilots, have been exposed to rates like this in a spinning airplane."

The two astronauts told the dramatic story yesterday of the harrowing ride through space that brought a quick, emergency end to their historic flight during which man's first link-up in space was accomplished.

Armstrong said at one point when his spacecraft and an Agena rocket tumbled locked together, he was concerned that the "structural integrity was in jeopardy."

It was at this point, he said, he realized that "more drastic measures would have to be taken."

Armstrong revealed that even before they docked there was some question in their minds over the status of the Agena's control system because "some difficulty had been encountered in putting ground commands into the Agena system."

The two astronauts said they first noticed a problem with the two vehicles docked when the spacefract attitude system showed the spacecraft was "diverging."

At that time, they did not know that a small maneuvering thruster had burned out of control. "We had not heard or seen any thruster activity," Armstrong said.

He said also that for the first three minutes after the tumbling became serious "We seemed to be bringing the combination under control and began attempting to isolate what was the problem."

"When it became obvious that this was not completely effective (tests on the Agena)," Armstrong said, "we began to consider it may be some sort of spacecraft system malfunction."

"We really began to think we had the combination under control," he told a manned spacecraft center news conference," he added "then the problem came up again. The rates were such then that we felt the structural integrity was in jeopardy, and some more drastic measures would have to be taken."

Dividing the commentary, the two astronauts related the sequence of events, leading to separation from the Agena, firing the re-entry control rockets to stablize the spacecraft, and the eventual emergency landing in the western Pacific.

"We were extremely reluctant to give up the flight at that point but the decision to reenter under such circumstances is one determined prior to a flight," Armstrong said.

"We very much would have like to stay up there but it was reasonable to agree with the ground decision."

Substance Found To Cure Tumors

PHOENIX, Ariz.— (AP) — Researchers injected two cancer-ridden mice with an unknown susbstance yesterday—and killed their tumors within hours. They hope to tailor-make a similar substance for humans.

So potent is the material that it sometimes makes a tumor dissolve within 15 minutes. But no one knows why for sure.

The substance has been tried on humans to see if they can tolerate the material, and the results show that they can. Although these humans were gravely ill with cancer, the researchers would give no results of the material in human tumors until the work has been published in medical journals.

Drs. Lawrence Burton and Frank Friedman, geneticists but not medical doctors from New York City's St. Vincent's Hospital, have been refining the material for some eight years.

The mice used are from a strain that has been bred to develop breast cancer in 100 per cent of the cases. The cancer is caused by a virus which is transmitted from mother to baby mouse in the mother's milk. As the mouse matures large tumors develop.

To demonstrate, they injected two mice last night. Both had large tumors. By morning the tumors had all but disappeared in one, and completely disappeared in the other. Then, with a similar injection, they treated two more mice and this time the tumors were killed within two hours.

The substance comes from fractions of serum from cancer-stricken mice, humans and cows.

Anti-Inflationary Measures May Negate Tax Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) —High administration officials believe the odds against another Viet Nam tax increase have risen because of apparent successes in reducing some inflationary pressures.

They give part of the credit to a government - wide campaign to ease the cost pressures on industry by prying open some supply bottlenecks, striking at such trouble spots as they develop.

Under orders from President Johnson, the White House has coordinated a dozen or more moves made on individual commodities to reinforce the basic anti - inflationary weapons which have been brought into play—the credit - tightening operations of the Federal Reserve Board and the $6-billion tax bill just passed by Congress.

Where looming shortages have threatened to push prices up, federal agencies have moved rapidly to release metals and other materials from the defense stockpile, tighten export controls to conserve domestic supplies, sell grain from surplus stocks, curb the defense department's buying of some foods served to troops, and encourage government contractors to substitute more plentiful materials for scarce ones where possible.

None of these measures has received the publicity of the pressure-and-persuasion plays by the President's council of economic advisers which brought the rollback of an aluminum price increase and partial rollbacks of announced price advances on structural steel and cigarettes.

But a White House official said privately yesterday:

"The commodity - by - commodity approach is working. We've had some real successes in the basic metals — copper, aluminum and steel. We see signs that food prices are starting down, although this may not be reflected in the consumer incexes for a month of two."

Will They—Won't They? The World Is Breathless

MOSCOW (AP) — Chi-Chi and An-An finally met on their first blind date yesterday — rubbed noses in the giant panda version of a kiss, and gave delighted zoo officials the impression of love at first sniff.

Zoo officials were so pleased they issued what sounded like a high society wedding announcement.

An-An, the Moscow Zoo's boy giant panda, was put into a cage adjoining Chi-Chi, the London Zoo's girl giant panda, in the early morning hours yesterday. They were separated by an iron grill which allowed them to rub noses and touch paws. They did. Their barking conversation never lagged during the first date.

The animals are the only known giant pandas in captivity outside Red China. Neither has seen another panda since shortly after birth.

Zoo officials were so cautious that they kept yesterday's introduction a secret until the meeting had proved successful. Then they released a statement much like a formal marriage announcement. It began:

Dr. Igor Sosnovsky, Director of the Moscow Zoo, and Dr. Oliver Graham-Jones, Senior Veterinary Officer of the London Zoo, are happy to announce that An-An and Chi-Chi, the giant pandas, are now side by side in the same building."

Dr. Graham-Jones said it would be "certainly a couple of days" before the two pandas can be brought together in the same cage.

The affair will be a steak dinner and freshman basketball coach Larry Brown is tentatively scheduled as a speaker.

The final Grail Mural Sports Jamboree results were slightly different than printed earlier this week. Pi Kappa Phi-Mangum I was the winning entry with 109 points. Second was KA-Morrison C with 100 1-2, third Phi Delt-Teague with 97, fourth TEP-Craige C. with 89 and fifth ZBT-BVP with 88. Archery, which was not tabulated in the early results, was won by Beta-Stacy.

My experience as a forecaster was a disaster. All three teams that I said to keep an eye on in last Sunday's column about the residence hall basketball tournament were defeated. One of them, Morrison C, was trounced by 18 points. So on the subject of predictions I will keep silent.

In the residence hall tournament, Ehringhaus will meet the Mangum Mugs at 7 p.m. Monday and the Connor Animals play the BVP 76'ers at 8 in semifinal contests. The winners will clash Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in the finals.

In the fraternity tournament, semifinal games will be played Monday with Phi Delt Blue meeting KA Blue at 7 p.m. and DKE Blue meeting ATO I at 8. The finals in this division will be played Wednesday at 8.

The graduate tournament will not finish with the others, but it is slowly getting untangled. The Med Mooses meet Law III Blue at 7 Monday and the Navy Dolphins meet the FCA at 8. Wednesday the Med Mooses-Law III Blue winner will play Law IV and the Peacocks take on Law II.

UNC Winning Streak Ends; VPI Drops Tar Heels 4-2

Assistant Sports Editor

A two-out error in the sixth inning opened the door to two unearned runs for Virginia Tech, and the Gobblers went on to hand North Carolina its third loss in four games yesterday on Emerson Field 4-2.

It was VPI's first win, after four losses.

Starting Carolina southpaw Beattie Leonard had retired 17 Techmen in a row after yielding a first inning leadoff double, and had set down the first two batters in the sixth when misfortune struck.

Bob Dickerson rapped a solid grounder at Tar Heel shortstop Bruce Bolick. The ball kicked off the heel of Bolick's glove for an error, and the gate was opened.

Bob Kramer lined a single to left and Tom Childress beat out an infield hit to load the bases. Clean-up hitter John Oates promptly ripped a ground single through the middle, scoring Dickerson and Kramer.

The tech rally wiped out a short-lived, 1-0 UNC lead which had been gained a half-inning earlier.

With one out in the fifth; catcher John Shaw fouled several drives down the left field line and then singled to center. Third baseman L. E. Sawyer then drilled a hit past third base. Shaw came all the way around to score, and when Sawyer made his turn at second, VPI left fielder M. H. Herndon fell down trying to make the pick-up in foul territory. Sawyer moved on to third. However, Sayer had not touched second, and was ruled out.

Virginia Tech came right back in the seventh to add its final two runs. Bolick's second error put the leadoff batter, Tony Shroy, on first. First baseman Henry Webb followed with a line single to right-center, and righty Danny Walker replaced Leonard on the mound.

Bucky Wellisch lined a single off the glove of second baseman Charlie Thomas, and Shroy scored from third. Next, John Whitesell, who pitched and won for Tech, smashed a single off Walker's glove to load the bases. Leadoff man Dickerson grounded to Sawyer at third, and the runner was forced out at the plate.

Then Kramer shot a single through to left field, driving in VPI's fourth and last run. Left fielder Bob Hume fielded the hit and cut down Whitesell trying to make third, and then Walker fanned Childress to end the inning.

John Shaw, who rapped out four hits in the two-game series with VPI, slammed a home run to left field in the ninth to account for UNC's final run.

Masino Shifted To Middle Guard In Spring Drills

Jimmy Masino, a 230-pound starting defensive end during the 1965 football season, has been shifted to middle guard during North Carolina's early spring drills.

"He's tough and he's doing well at the spot," said Assistant Coach Bob Thalman. "We know he is a good end. He can help us in several places."

What is foremost on tap for the Tar Heels, who have worked a total of four days? Coach Jim Hickey says finding football players is the most important thing.

"We have almost 100 boys trying out for the team," said Hickey. "Those who really want to play will come to the front by the half-way mark in our workouts. After 10 full days, we should know something."

In the meantime, several other shifts are being made. One is Bo Wood, a 229-pounder who played the defensive end opposite Masino last fall. Wood is being tested some as an offensive end.

"He shows he can get the job done," notes Assistant Joe Mark. "Of course, Charlie Carr is counted upon heavily as an offensive left end, but Charlie is out for baseball. Wood can go either way."

Will the Tar Heels use some men on both offense and defense? The coaching staff says that is a strong possibility.

Two scrimmages have already taken place.

Wake Forest Will Depend On Pitching, Experience

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the third in a series of articles on ACC Baseball teams. Today is the Wake Forest Deacons.

By DICK PAVLIS
Old Gold and Black
Sports Editor

The varsity baseball squad has been practicing regularly since February 1, and has been working outside for the last three or four weeks. According to coach Jack Stallings, the team is coming along fairly well and is shaping up for the first regular season game played yesterday.

Coach Stallings has a "Big Three" of returning lettermen to head his pitching staff; Paschal Renn and Steve Wrenn, both juniors, and Don Rich, a senior, are the hurlers who are expected to contribute heavily to the team's effort this year.

Two sophomore pitchers, Larry Cain and Bob Mumford, have been impressive in practice and should enhance the hill strength of the Deacons. Steve Hagey and Will Staples complete the pitching staff.

Bill Molloy, who led the team in hitting last year while playing third base, has been shifted to catcher for the upcoming season and is expected to be the regular in this position. Sophomore Harry Fisher is the number two backstop.

Wrenn, when he isn't pitching, will play first base. Last year, Wrenn's activity was confined solely to pitching because of an injury. Rounding out the regular infield are senior Gerald Boyles at second base, senior Joe Kraus at shortstop, and sophomore Sonny Swails at third. Other infielders, are Jimmy Grimsley, Herb Grote, Stve Lehman, Bill Myers, and Herb Pike.

In the outfield, senior letterman Tommy Cole has a firm grip on center field, while Randy London, who played sparingly as an infielder last year, is to play in right. The left field post is wide open, with junior Buddy Sizemore the leading candidate. Sophomores Dwight Barlett, Doug Horner, and Terry Woganare the other outfielders.

Coach Stallings expects an improvement over last year's 14-15 record, the first losing season for a Deacon baseball team in 19 years. The team will depend mainly on good pitching and experience in this year's race. Team speed is fair, and the middle of the lineup supplies power. Cole, who along with Lynn Nesbitt the team last season, Wrenn, the team last season, wrenn, and Milley will supply the needed punch.

The conference is well-balanced, and no one team should run away with it all. "This balance has been a trademark of ACC baseball for a long time, and it shouldn't be any different this year," said the coach.

Maryland won the title last season and, in addition to having many talented players returning, has many new faces from last year's very good freshman team. Clemson, UNC, and South Carolina should also be battling for top honors and, said Stallings, "We have a good chance to up there too."

LA Hurlers May 'Begin-End' Era

By BOB GREEN

(AP) — The Sandy Koufax-Don Drysdale holdout could signal the beginning of a new era in baseball — or the end of one.

If their joint demand for a $1 million contract, divided between them and spread over three years, is met by the Los Angeles Dodgers, it could signal the start of collective barbaining in baseball.

The owners — not only of the Dodgers but owners of all the major league clubs — are terrified of the prospect and are adamant that it must not be allowed, an informed source said.

On the other hand, if their demands are not met — and Koufax and Drysdale appear to be equally adamant — both may lay out for a year. And that could be the end of the Koufax - Drysdale era.

"Most everyone hopes they will sign," a baseball source said.

"But I can tell you one thing for sure. They won't sign as a pair. Dodger owner Walter O'Malley is determined not to yield to that demand. He can't afford to. The other owners can't afford for him to. It would be the start of collective bargaining."

Although it isn't generally known, this isn't the first time two players, in fact, two pitchers, have tried it. And, strangely, the Dodgers, Brooklyn variety, were the target before.

Dazzy Vance and Burleigh Grimes joined in an attempt to get a joint contract. The effort was quickly quashed by the owners.

Both Koufax - Drysdale and the Dodgers have some strong bargaining points, and there is no indication that this joint effort will go by the boards as quickly as the one 40 years ago.

Much more than $1 million is at stake, and the negotiations have drawn the attention of owners of teams in other professional sports.

First, there's the threat of unionism. Secondly, there's the size of the package Koufax and Drysdale have asked, an indication that established stars may start demanding pay proportionate to the fantastic bonuses being paid untried rookies.

"The owners are terribly worried, tremendously concerned," said the source, who asked that he not be identified.

"It's unionism they're scared of. It's a thing they cannot allow. The players could start ganging up, with the big guys protecting the little guys.

"Maybe, for instance, a whole pitching staff would go out and a 20 - game winner wouldn't sign until some obscure relief man got his share,

Confusion Erupts Tuesday As Clay Defends Crown

By MURRAY ROSE

TORONTO (AP) — Another chapter in the bizarre Cassius Clay story will be written here Tuesday night when the tempestuous boxer from Louisville, Ky., risks his share of the world's heavyweight championship against oft-beaten George Chuvalo.

Although Toronto is the Canadian champion's hometown, the 15-round bout in the Maple Leaf Gardens won't be recognized as a world's championship contest here.

This is about a typical incident as any in the odd and controversial career of the undefeated American, who turned pro after winning the Olympic light heavyweight crown in 1960 and may be fighting for the last time in at least two years.

The Ontario Boxing Commission is a member of the World Boxing Association which recognizes Ernie Terrell of Chicago as its champion. The WBA stripped Clay of recognition for signing a return bout contract with Sonny Liston in the face of warnings not to do so by the boxing group.

Clay, however, is recognized as world champion in most areas of the globe outside of WBS jurisdiction.

And if Chuvalo, a 7-1 underdog, should happen to get lucky and upset Clay, it's a cinch he will be rated the champion in most corners of the world.

To get around the title knock, the promoting Maple Leaf Gardens and Main Bout, Inc., which owns the ancillary rights, are billing the bout as "The Fight of the Century" and "The Fight of Champions."

If Chuvalo wins, it could be the upset of the century, far more so than Clay's stunning conquest of champion Sonny Liston at Miami Beach, Feb. 24, 1964, when Clay also was a 7-1 underdog.

That was the strange title fight in which Clay first tried to quit and then won when Liston failed to come out for the serventh round, claiming an injured shoulder.

There has been very little wagering on the outcome of Tuesday's fight. In Toronto, a bookmaker said the big bookies want no part of it.

The promoters have found a similar reaction in their efforts to sell the hastily - arranged fight to theaters and arenas in the United States and Canada.

With the prospects of a one-sided fight and hints of picketing by veteran groups, theater chains and independent operators have rejected the show.

Symposium Relies On Informal Talks

By BILL TAYLOR
Special To The DTH

It has been said that the success or failure of the Carolina Symposium depends on the work of the Related Discussions Committee. While the statement is extreme, it is correct to the decree that the Symposium's success must be measured by the number of students it reaches as well as by the quality of speakers it brings.

The Related Discussions Committee attempts to present the Symposium personally to every student to stimulate interest in and knowledge of the problems involved.

Accepting the maxim that one learns most from those who should know most, the committee brings outstanding faculty members into student living quarters to lead informal discussions. Strangely enough, the difficulty has not been getting students to cooperate, but finding enough faculty members willing to devote their time to the project. So far, estimates show slightly more than 60% of professors contacted who agree to help.

Excuses run from "I'm too busy writing a book," to "I'm helping the Symposium in other ways." Nevertheless, an adequate number of first-rate student-pleasers have been secured to make at least one discussion available to every student.

Every fraternity and sorority has been invited to participate individually; the large dorms will have separate discussions, and the smaller ones will come together in the girls' dorms.

The committee consists of eleven members, Peggy Paul, vice chairman, Connie Williams, Ann Stone, Carol Williams, Roma Leah Trobaugh, Louisa Wilson, Tom Leach, Ronnie Kaplan, Barry Schwartz, Ace Dawson, and Bill Taylor, chairman.

Most of the labor is legwork, talking to professors and students, distributing in-and, finally, making sure that no professor is greeted with a "What are you doing here?" expression when he arrives for a discussion.

The committee acts a sort of propaganda - distributing machine yet also as a stimulus to cause people to be self-propagandized. Reaction from the student body has been good, and it is easy, once contact is made, to organize the discussions. Students are interested in the Symposium, in who is coming, and in what will be dealt with. Related Discussions provide the needed informal yet intellectual atmosphere to answer these questions and to stimulate more.

The idea is not to sell "Man, Mind, and Myth" as an overwhelming revelation. It is rather to point out that it presents issues which affect every member of the university community, and to give that community an opportunity to stop and think about them.

1 Out Of 3 Returns Faces Check, Says IRS Director

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the taxpayer now grappling with his conscience and his Form 1040, there's no comfort in the 1965 annual report of the Internal Revenue Service, newly released.

It shows that nearly every individual income tax return gets an arithmetic check, 1 of 3 gets at least some further look-see, and 1 in 23 gets the works—a formal audit, or examination.

Those were the results of last year's operations. TRS Commissioner Sheldon S. Cohen's report shows that IRS brought big computers into increased use, caught more errors, and levied more additional tax and penalties than ever before.

Here are some questions and answers, based on the report which might help enlighten the millions of taxpayers who still must file returns before the April 15 deadline.

Q. To start with the billion-dollar question, who is audited?

A. Anybody could be. IRS picks some returns at random from every income level, to get a balanced sampling and to make sure that no taxpayer feels safe.

Q. But the chances are greater at higher incomes?

A. They become increasingly great, until a point is reached—at about the $30,000-and-up income level, officials indicate—where every return that comes in as "classified."

Q. What does "classified" mean?

A. It means put into the IRS hopper for possible audit. Of 65.9 million individual returns filed last year, more than 21 million were classified. That means they got at least a cursory inspection.

Q. And how many were actually picked out of the hopper for audit?

A. About 1 out of 7 classified returns, which means 1 out of every 23 returns filed. There were about 3.1 million auditis last year.

Q. Does the number constnatly increase?

A. Not necessarily. There were 4 per cent fewer last year than in 1964. IRS is concentrating more of its manpower on "quality audits"—more intensive examinations of upper-income returns and complicated business returns.

Q. This meant less extra tax and penalty collected?

A. Not at all. Despite fewer audits and lower tax rates, the audit process turned up record totals — $1.1 billion from individuals, $1.3 billion from businsses.

Q. What else might cause a return to be audited?

A. Some unusual feature—abnormally large personal deductions, for example. Also, the character of your business might make a difference. People who get much of their income in cash payments, like professional men and some self-employed, are more likely to be auditied than salary-earners.

Q. How is an audit undertaken?

A. Usually, individual income taxpayers get a notice by mail to report, with whatever records the agent wants to check, at the IRS offices. And about 1 out of every 8 individual examinations, are "field audits"—made at the taxpayer's place of business.

Q. Does every aduit cost the taxpayer more money?

A. No. In some cases he finds he owed less. In 38 per cent of all audits last year no extra tax was assessed.

Q. What about the other cases?

A. The average tax and penalty, for individuals, was $56 per return.

Q. What about errors in arithemetic?

A. The "mathematical verification," as IRS call it, turned up 1 error in every 16 returns.

Q. Is that about normal?

A. It is about 50 per cent above normal. And whereas taxpayers generally make most of the mistakes in their own favor, about three-fourths of the additional mistakes made last year were in favor of the government.

Q. So the arithmetic check helped those taxpayers?

A. Yes. About half of all the taxpayers who slipped up in their computation were cheating themselves.

Q. Why were more errors made?

A. Aparently taxpayers don't yet fully understand the 1964 tax law changes concerning personal decutions. Many who would have benefited from the new "minimum standard deduction" failed to take advantage of it until IRS found their mistake.

Q. Which came out ahead when all the errors were unscrambled, the taxpayers or the government?

A. The U. S. Treasury, by about $100 million.

Q. Will Internal Revenue's new computer system be in full operation to process the returners now being filed?

A. On business returns, yes, as in 1965. On individual returns, not nationwide. Individual tax returns from the Southeast and Mid-Atlantic regions were processed last year at the Atlanta and Philadelphia computer centers. This year the computers take over in the Southwest, the West except for California, and the Central states except for Michigan.

A. And in 1967?

A. The System will be nationwide, with the addition of the North Atlantic states, California and Michigan.

Belief In God Not Necessary, States Sing Out Member

By JACK TATE
Special to DTH

Moral Re-Armament may stand for a God-controlled society, but at least one member of MRA's "Sing Out '66" thinks that many of the singers are atheists.

Sulimon Edmondson of Los Angeles said in an interview before leaving the Carolina campus, "At least one-fourth of our group are atheists and that doesn't include the Buddhists who do not believe in God as we understand the concept.

Edmondson emphasized that belief in the power of one's conscience could be substituted for belief in God.

"Each individual," he said, "should decide for himself what is right. All we hope is that he will make his decision within the framework of absolute honesty, unselfishness, love and purity."

He also revealed that most of the members of the "Sing Out' group are liberals. "In fact," he said, "I don't believe there is a single conservative in the entire group.

"Before joining "Sing Out" last September," Edmondson continued, "I had seriously considered joining the Black Muslims. But I feel Moral Re-Armament is much more effective method of changing America."

Edmonsdon denied emphatically that MRA has a Nazistic philosophy, but he granted that once the group attained a majority in America they might try to eliminate minority opinion. "We believe we are right and we believe it enthusiastically,' he said.

During his three days at Carolina, Edmondson stayed in Ehringhaus and several of his suitemates formed defintie opinions of him and the "Sing Out" group.

Ron Perkinson, a freshman from Wise, said, "Sulimon told us that he first went to MRA's national convention at Mackinac Island for 'fun and games' but later changed his mind. I think he's still in the group for his personal interest in acting. MRA offers acting scholarships and they gave one to Suliman."

Perkinson also had definite opinions about the "Sing Out" performance: "I don't see how they can ask 'Which way America?' when so many of them aren't even from America. I just don't see how foreigners could sing patriotic songs to America."

Jerry Bliss, a third-year pharmacy student from Charlotte and another of Sulimon's suitemates, said, "I came out of the performance thinking of the Hitler youth movement.

"And as for Sulimon," Bliss said, "I think he's in there for acting experience and that's it.

Another student added: "I didn't know what 'Sing Out' was saying and I don't think they did either."

Three of Sulimon's suitemates pointed out that he was more "pure" than some of the other members of the group. "We met one who claimed to be a reformed street fighter," Perkinson said, "and his language sounded like it."

"But Sulimon was o.k.," said his roommate, Dave Welch, a junior history major from Greencastle, Penn., "I'd be glad for him to stay with me again. What I liked about him was that he was human. I even had to drag him out of bed in the mornings."

Latin Students Parade On Hill

Almost a thousand students took part in a demonstration staged in Chapel Hill yesterday. It was the first demonstration in over a week.

Students, shipped to town in yellow busses, filed out and paraded back and forth outside Memorial Hall carrying signs and placards.

So many demonstrators filled the wide brick walk that pedestrians were forced to use the other side of the street to get by.

Police were called out to direct traffic.

Student Cleared In Coed Death

Jeffrey R. Hackman a UNC senior, has been cleared of charges of criminal negligence in the motorcycle death of North Carolina coed Linda Carroll Wyatt on March 19.

Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Judge L. J. Phipps found no probable cause Friday for binding Hackman, a Thomasville native, over for trial on manslaughter and reckless driving charges.

Miss Wyatt died of injuries resulting from the cycle accident on Westwood Drive.

Park Started

Morrison and Nurses dorm residents combined arm-power for a while yesterday afternoon to begin cleaning the woods between the residences for a picnic area.

The site for the tables and grills is just southeast of the south gate of Kenan Stadium.

The area will be used for relaxation and eating during Morrison's "Old Fashioned Weekend" in April.

It can also be used by students and alumni later this spring and during football weekends.

The project was originated several months ago at a Morrison Nurses Inter Dormitory Council meeting.

George Isherwood's name was inadvertently left off the list of newly elected student legislators which was run in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel. He is a legislator from MD VIII.

CWC, WRC Winners

Judy Rogers and Susan Gretz won the elections to head the Carolina Women's Council and the Women's Residence Council Tuesday.

Miss Rogers won the CWC race over Cherry Vaughn by 488 to 402. Miss Gretz collected 614 votes to 428 for Sharon Finch to win in the WRC race.

Commercials Contest

Radio Station WCHL is sponsoring a contest to encourage creativity in radio advertising.

The 1000-watt daytime station is conducting a contest in which creators of the best locally produced commercials heard on the station in 1966 will receive prizes totaling $1,000.

The contest is limited to broadcasting students and WCHL staff members.

The best commercial will take the top award of $500. Second prize is $200, with $100, $50 and $40 being awarded for 3rd, 4th and 5th places. Lesser amounts will be presented to five additional winners.

too.

"It's something the owners simply can't allow to happen."

Of further concern to the owners, and in direct connection, is the recent naming of Marv Miller as the major league players' representative. Miller, a former executive of the steelworkers' union, currently is on a swing through the Florida training camps.

In California, it's status quo in the negotiations between Drysdale and Koufax, who won 49 games between them last season, and the Dodgers. Opening day is only a little more than two feeks away. It is extremely doubtful that if both signed this minute they'd be ready to go.

Planning for the future?

Let us offer a suggestion.

The book business is short of men—good men—in almost all areas. Right now, there are good openings all over, in publishing, editorial work, sales, promotion, and retail sales.

Interested? Good! The chances for getting rich are not what they might be in other areas. They compare with teaching, say. But there's something new every day. Something interesting. And the feeling that perhaps this is better than selling nylons all day.

Still interested? Okay, now, how do you get these jobs? With experience, education and ambition. And assuming you have the desire and the education, where do you get the experience?

That's where we come in.

The Intimate, over the years, has trained many young men and women for positions in the book game. It's surprising what two or three years' experience can do for your job opportunities when you finish school. And you earn a bit while you're learning and while you're finishing your schooling.

After your graduation, we help you find a good job—and if you're really good, we keep you ourselves, if you like.

It's a good racket, we think. It takes a particular sort of person, of course. A certain attitude that's hard to define. And it takes training.

Right now, we have openings for two staffers. We prefer people who will be here for two years or so, at least, including summers. We prefer people who just might be interested in finding out if they'd like to come into the book business after college.

Think it over. If you like the idea, come in and talk to our Mr. Kuralt.

It could be the chance to get in on a profitable and enjoyable career.

12 Candidates Run; Polls Open From 9-6

By GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

The officer of president of the student body and six legislative seats in Student Legislature will be decided today.

The run-off election for president of the student body will be the first one here since 1958. The elections for the legislative seats were made necessary after protests were filed with the Constitutional Council following last Tuesday's election.

Leaders from both political parties are optimistic about the results of the presidential election. The polls will be opened from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and estimates ranging from 3,000 to 5,000 voters have been made.

Presidential Candidates Bob Powell, Student Party, and Teddy O'Toole, University Party, have campaigned vigorously during the past week trying to get the necessary support for their election.

Independent candidate Sonny Pepper pledged his support to Powell in the runoff election. He polled 940 votes in last weeks voting.

Concerning the extra week of campaigning, David Kiel, UP, vice chairman, commented, "It's given the voters another week to meet the candidates, consider the issues and make a more informed comparison. That's why we're confident.

"Now that it's down to a two-man race, we feel Teddy will benefit by this," Kiel said.

Powell said, "The extra week has allowed me to see more people and many of the new leaders have given me their support. I'm quite pleased with their endorsement."

The Consitutional Council upheld protests for six legislative seats in Tuesday's election.

Another election will be held in Men's District Five because a UP candidate was listed as an SP candidate.

Competing in the district will be Joe Chandler, SP, Bruce Jolly, UP, and Art Robinson, UP.

In the Morrison race there will be four SP candidates and two UP candidates. Last Tuesday Dick Levy, Frank Longest, Lacy Reaves and Eric Van Loon, all SP, won seats in legislature. However, a protest was filed by George Ingram on behalf of Bob Wilbur, a UP candidate for legislature, with the Constitutional Council. The protest was upheld.

The protest was filed because a candidate withdrew from the election at noon on election day. Bob Pittard, UP, said he felt the protest should not have been filed. "The other candidates were fairly elected," Pittard said. He said he has placed statements on Morrison bulletin boards to this effect.

"I turned in my withdrawal 15 days before election day to E. J. Simmons, chairman of the nominating committee at Morrison," Pittard said.

Arthur Hays, elections board chairman, said the withdrawal was legal if it went to Simmons or to the Elections Board. Pittard said "the UP did definitely know about his withdrawal before the election Tuesday.

Hays said volunteer counters will be needed about 7:30 p.m. GM to count the ballots.

The name of Lew Brown, new Men's Residence Council president, has appeared on campaign endorsements for both UP candidate Teddy O'Toole and SP candidate Bob Powell.

"I'd like to make it plain that I am supporting O'Toole and Powell used my name without permission," Brown said yesterday.

Miller, Mustangs On Campus Tonite

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Roger Miller sings tonight in Carmichael at eight o'clock and three lucky people who attend will win the use of Mustangs for Jubilee Weekend.

One Mustang has been reserved for those who wait and pay $1.50 at the door while two will be given to students who buy their tickets for $1 in advance.

Advance tickets are available until 5 p.m. at the information desk of GM.

The Good Time Singers will appear with Miller.

Miller, who will have a television show next fall, is known for such hits as "England Swings," "King of the Road," "Chug-A-Lug" and "Dang Me."

He nas been referred to as "the missing link between country-comedy and pop music." He plays drums, fiddle and guitar.

Miller figures he has composed some 1,000 tunes, "about half of which have been published."

He thinks "King of the Road" is the best thing he has written, "though I had to induce labor to get it completed."

After completing the first verse, Miller was stuck. He went to a nearby store in Boise, Idaho, purchased a statuette of a hobo and "I sat and stared at it until the rest of the tune came to me."

Now in their fourth season with Andy Williams on television, the Good Time Singers have a couple of record albums on the market, and have established themselves as popular concert and nightclub performers all over the land.

The Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall, has announced R. H. Macy & Co. (Davidson's Division), Vulcan Materials Co., McLean Trucking Co., Atlanta Gas Light Co., John C. Muse & Co. and Southern Railway Co. will be recruiting on campus today.

California Packing Sales Co.; Jordan Marsh; Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.; Cameron Brown Co.; and Acushnet Process Co. will recruit tomorrow.

Swimmers Banquet

There will be a banquet tonight for all freshman and varsity swimmers at Brady's Restaurant. All team members are urged to attend.

Dateless? Help Is On The Way

By JACK TATE
Special to DTH

UNC has seven undergraduate men for every two coeds. Operation Match has hardly begun to meet Carolina Gentlemen's demands for dates. And Jubilee is just one month away.

Well, the unfortunate many without dates can relax. A unique American innovation, Lonely Hearts clubs, can solve their problems — permanently.

Each of America's some 600 clubs circulate master lists that contain descriptions of the physical and social characteristics of the members. Here are some examples—

"Betty: A perfectly gorgeous, shapely young lady. Gorgeous auburn hair. VERY LONESOME and very eager to meet a nice young man like YOU." And another opportunity—

"Nadine: Age 30, honey blonde. Beuatiful brown eyes. VERY AFFECTIONATE. . . wants to meet YOU very soon. . . "

And then the chance of a college man's lifetime—

MEN! MEN!

"Our women are screaming to meet you! Tell us what kind you want.

In a week you'll start receiving letters. Don't forget our slogan:

'No man is any good without a woman!' Janis Lynn. P. O. Box 1100." The perfect Jubilee dates? Of course.

Discretion is the key not only to valor but to happiness as well. In other words, choose your club carefully. For sociologist Clyde B. Vedder discovered that in some clubs "the women had underestimated their ages by 10 to 30 years . . . "

But a man with a little perseverance can't go wrong. Witness the success of the southern gentleman who placed this notice in a Lonely Hearts club magazine:

"Well-to-do Gentleman in early forties wishes to correspond with southern lady of refinement. Object matrimony."

This man received 13,000 replies from girls and women ranging in age from 11 to 103, according to Prof. Vedder. Paradise? — Compared to this man, Milton did not even know the meaning of the word.

In the May edition of "All Man" there is a directory of "Active" clubs. Under North Carolina is this statement:

"If you want to make the right move toward ending your lonely days, write us & we will go to work for you at once. . . . Men will receive free 490 ladies' picture & listings . . . . UNITED CIRCLE CLUBS — Dept. 53, 2702 Stratford Dr., Greensboro, N. C."

The Greensboro club claims to have girls from "everywhere" but some Loney Hearts organizations specialize in English, German or Japanese girls. One typical ad reads:

"For centuries Japanese girls have been trained since childhood in the art of pleasing men and catering to their every desire and wish . . . . TODAY rush $1.00."

The Japanese club is not only cheaper than Operation Match but even promises "unkissed maidens." Just the type of girl that every Carolina Gentleman is dying to date.

Speaker Ruling Due Wednesday

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson said yesterday that he expected to decide Wednesday whether he will allow Frank Wilkinson or Dr. Herbert Aptheker to speak on campus.

The student - faculty committee on visiting speakers met yesterday and decided on its recommendation. Sitterson said he expected the committee to advise him of its recommendation sometime today.

Sitterson said he would be in Raleigh today but that he would consider the committee's recommendation and the advice of faculty members Wednesday and at that time he would make his decision.

Wilkinson and Aptheker were reinvited to speak here March 14 by a group of student leaders.

Sitterson was advised of the invitation at that time although the student faculty committee meeting to discuss the invitation was delayed until Monday, the day after the invitation became public.

Student Body President Paul Dickson said Saturday that there would be no court case if Wilkinson and Aptheker are allowed to speak on campus.

Takes Sleeping Pills

Notice For Physical Prompts Suicide Try

By ED FRAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

A 19-year-old University sophomore attempted suicide yesterday morning after receiving notice from his draft board that he was to report for his physical examination April 12.

The student was taken to N. C. Memorial Hospital shortly before noon where his stomach was pumped. He is reported to be in good condition.

He was found lying on the floor of his downtown apartment by the student who lived next door.

"I came up the stairs and started down the hall," the boy said. "I saw an arm lying out in the hallway. The door to his apartment was open and the record player was on.

"I thought maybe he'd been drinking. I bent over him and shook his arm. He didn't move. I ran out and got someone to call an ambulance and the police."

According to the student who found the boy there was a suicide note. It was addressed, "Dear Mom and Dad." The student said the note said that the boy loved his parents very much and he was sorry for what he had done.

It also said he couldn't face two years in the service and this was the only way out, according to the neighbor.

Campus Security Office Arthur Beaumont said that three notes were found and all were intended for the boy's parents.

Beaumont would not reveal what was in the notes, but said they apologized for what the boy was doing.

Two empty sleeping pill bottles were found in the apartment. The boxes were with the bottles. Beaumont said a nurse in the emergency room told him that even if the boy took all the tablets in both bottles it would not have killed him. The number of tablets in a small bottle of the sleeping pills is 20.

The letter from the draft board had arrived in yesterday's mail, about 10 a.m.

Attempted suicide is a crime in North Carolina, but Chapel Hill Detective Capt. C. E. Durham said he didn't think charges would be brought against the boy.

Dr. Ed Hedgpeth, director of the infirmary, said the boy would be kept under observation for a couple of days.

Beaumont said the boy will undergo psychological examination to determine whether he will be allowed to remain at the University.

Popular Poplar Pines Posterity

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH STAFF WRITER

A tree grows on Emerson Field. Dr. E. McG. Hedgpeth and a group of alumni are out to save and honor it for posterity.

When asked why, the Director of Student Health stated, "Everybody knows the old story of the Rand boy dying while being hazed. Supposedly it was under that big poplar at the end of the stadium. Because of Rand's death, hazing was outlawed the University. I'm not making an all out campaign for this, but I am interested in having the tree saved and an historical plaque being put on it."

This all seems very simple except for one problem. A student union is to be built on Emerson Field and as John S. Bennett, member of the University Buildings Committee, said, "Yes, I think they plan to completely level Emerson Field."

When the proposition of saving the tree was put to Bennett he said, "It all depends on where the tree is. We wouldn't change the position or the style of the building for one tree, but if it is in a workable place, it could be saved."

Bennett stated a few stipulations for the project, "The tree would have to be positively identified before it could be saved. Although nothing will be done to Emerson for about 30 days, Hedgpeth should get in touch with the Chancellor who will make the final decision."

Was there really a tragic death under an old tree? Surprisingly, the answer is yes.

It was back in 1912. A freshman from Smithfield, Isaac William Rand, and his roommate, Robert Wellons, were awakened in the early hours of the morning by four sophomores. They were dragged from their rooms in Old East out to the athletic field. There both boys were made to give a speech on the glory of the class of '16 and the infamy of the class of '17.

After this, both boys were commanded to dance on a barrel while singing "Home Sweet Home."

Wellons was first to dance, and, although he slipped once, he completed the ordeal successfully.

Rand mounted the barrel and began his performance. He slipped and cut his jugular vein on a piece of crockery that had fallen out of the barrel.

The upperclassmen, at the first sight of blood, panicked and ran, leaving Wellons with his roomate.

Wellons carried Rand to Carr Dormitory, the closest building, but it was too late. Rand died within about three minutes after his fall.

The news went out over the state, and all the newspapers carried the tragic story.

Louis R. Wilson's book The University of North Carolina tells of the repercussions of the event. Peresident Venable and seven faculty members composed a committee to investigate the affair. Meanwhile the press, the governor, and the coroner urged a full investigation.

When it was all over, the four sophomores were arrested for manslaughter and tried in Orange Superior Court. One boy was acquitted and the other three were convicted and sentenced to four months imprisonment in the county jail.

Later the boys were given the privilege of being hired out instead of serving the jail sentence. By the commissioners' agreement, they were hired out to their parents who provided the costs for the case.

With the passage of several more weeks, four other students were expelled, 12 suspended for a year and two given an official reprimand for involvement with hazing.

Until this incident the Student Council had not been an

Those Pitiful Election Laws

The Constitutional Council's ruling that last week's legislative election in Morrison Residence Hall was invalid is a real head-scratcher.

The Council said that because a candidate offically withdrew on the day of the balloting the entire election has to be thrown out.

By this precedent, any candidate who decides at the last minute the election is not going to suit him or his party can withdraw, thus causing a new election to be held.

The chances of ever having a legal election on the first try again could be somewhere between slim and none.

It is possible that the Constitutional Council had no other choice except to rule as it did, but it seems that as many problems have been created as were solved.

B G. Pittard was running for a legislative seat in the Morrison district on the UP ticket. Fifteen days before the election he told E. J. Simmons, chairman of the Morrison UP nominating committee, that his doctor had advised him to withdraw from the election for health reasons.

Pittard did not attend the compulsory candidates' meeting nine class days before the election. Ordinarily a candiddate is disqualified if he misses this meeting without an excuse, but this year nominations were not due until the same day the compulsory meeting had to be held — March 12, and many candidates would have been disqualified if the attendance rule had been enforced.

UP Chairman Neal Thomas should have notified Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hayes that Pittard had withdrawn, but nobody remembered to tell Thomas that Pittard was no longer running.

In a pre - election check, Thomas approved the ballot with the UP slate — even though Pittard's name was included.

The first indication of trouble came when Pittard got a ballot on election day and found, much to his surprise, his name on the list of candidates. He immediately found Arthur Hayes, who informed him he had three choices:

1. Stay in the election by paying a $5 fine for submitting a late expense account (which was due at noon the day before).

2. Allow himself to be disqualified for not submitting an expense account.

3. Withdraw.

Since he had not conducted a campaign nor incurred expenses, Pittard decided to withdraw — officially, this time.

Pittard received 196 votes in the Morrison election, not enough to give him one of the four legislative seats. Bob Wilbur, another UP candidate, was also defeated. He received 249 votes. Dick Levy, SP, was the low man of the four elected, with 308 votes. Wilbur protested the election on the grounds he might have received enough votes to be elected if "non - candidate" Pittard's name had not been on the ballot.

The Constitutional Council agreed and upheld his appeal, and the way to chaos is opened.

The woeful inadequacies of our election laws are graphically illustrated by this kind of botch - up.

The deadline for withdrawals must be clarified because now a candidate can withdraw at his leisure — even up until the polls close on election day.

The confusion between the date nominations are due and the date of the compulsory candidates' meeting must be settled because, as demonstrated this year, they can fall on the same day.

And may God have mercy on the next chairman of the Elections Board.

Sitterson Has No Reason To Ban Speakers

Acting Chancellor Sitterson confused the speaker ban issue when he said consideration of the new invitations to Aptheker and Wilkinson is complicated by the fact that the invitation's signers (officers of campus groups) "will be out of office and I don't know who we will be expected to deal with."

Ridiculous, Chancellor.

Granted, all of the signers won't be in power next fall, but it takes only one group to invite (or try to invite) a speaker.

I haven't been able to contact any of the signers, but I know of at least two who have been elected through fall, and it is likely they will maintain their present stands on the ban. Furthermore, there's no reason to assume that all of the signers' successors will switch their organizations' policies.

Most important of all, Bob Powell, one of the two candidates for president of the student body, is among the signers. Thus, the odds are very high that the next S. G. head will support the new attempt to have Wilkinson and Aptheker speak here.

The students serving on the student-faculty speaker committee are other persons who, Sitterson said will soon lose their present status. In this case, he has a stronger argument, for all three can rightly be considered "lame ducks." To quote from the Chapel Hill Weekly: "A new WRC chai man was elected last week; a new legislature speaker will be chosen shortly by the newly elected Student Legislature, and a new State Affairs Committee chairman will be appointed soon by the new president of the student body."

But it is foolish to say that the students' opinions regarding future speaker appearances should be tossed aside merely because the students will soon leave the committee. Also, if Powell—who is presently a committee member—wins the election, he would undoubtedly appoint a successor sharing his views.

This column is being written Sunday, so I do not know what Sitterson's ruling will be on the invitation. But if he once again bans Aptheker and Wilkinson—even with the student-faculty committee's approval—the constitutional issues raised by the gag law will remain. This, of course, means a court case in which the American Civil Liberties Union could help supply the necessary legal resources to any student group which issued the invitations and was willing to act as a plaintiff. As indicated earlier, the possibility of there being such a group is almost certain.

And if, as some observers say, the General Assembly restores the original speaker ban law because of student efforts to overturn the moderated regulations, the court case would be better defined than ever. Moreover, the issue of UNC's accreditation would again pop up—meaning that the ACLU members wouldn't be the only citizens of this state wanting to take the matter to court.

Sitterson's being wrong does not, however, justify the underhanded tactics of the persons who re-invited Aptheker and Wilkinson.

Student Body President Dickson told me Sunday that he needed a tape recording of the Acting Chancellor's views on the new invitation to strengthen the proposed court case. But the means by which he sought to obtain this recording were inappropriate under any circumstances.

Dickson's maneuvering also acquired a sinister air when he denied reports that he and other student leaders intended to invite Aptheker and Wilkinson again. A premature disclosure of these plans indeed did what he apparently predicted: set back his public relations. But, as Dickson should have realized in the first place, news of the invitations leaked out anyway; and now, because of his past denials, Dickson's worthy cause has come out worse than ever. He says it was a matter of tactics; I say it was a matter of dishonesty.

Nevertheless, despite Dickson's questionable methods, he and other signers of the invitation deserve support in their battle to bring the speaker ban controversy before the courts should this be necessary.

Hopefully, the bad publicity Dickson received won't affect his campaign to raise legal funds if Sitterson strengthens the Student Body President's case by banning Wilkinson and Aptheker from the Carolina campus.

Here's The Late News On The UNC Disaster(?)

By MARY ELLIS and CAROLYN RICH
The Salemite, Salem College

Any more news from Viet Nam, Chep?

No, we've got the war wrapped up now, David.

What do you hear from Gemini 8?

They're safely back and ready to start the most grueling part of their journey—the interviews.

Well then let's switch to Sandra Van Okra who has the really big news story of today—Sandra?

Thanks, Chep. As you can see I'm standing in front of the Old Well at the University of North Carolina, a symbol of years of quality education—but we're wondering whether or not it will be standing long with the riots that have been going on here on the campus. They're not race riots or anti-speaker ban law riots this time but something with far greater consequences for our nation.

What's that, Sandra?

Well, David, it seems that the so-called Germans Weekend, a bi-annual Gothic tradition, erupted into a horror of drunkenness and pillaging last night. For further details we switch to Frank McNee who is standing in front of the Greta Sigma Phi House, Frank?

Thanks Sandra. I'm standing in front of the Greta Sigma Phi House, the scene of promiscuity, immorality, and drunkenness at last night's Germans "blow out," to use a collegiate term. If we can focus our camera on the chimney we can see a surfboard, the new craze in athletics, emerging from the ruin of a once lovely Southern mansion. And now we'll switch you inside to interview Stud Landingham, the Grand Wordly Master of the Greta Phi's.

Stud, what would you say happened last night to explain this overturned furtniture?

Stud: Well, I don't know, I didn't notice anybody getting out of hand. Seemed like a pretty calm Germans to me.

Thanks Stud. Now we switch you back to Sandra Van Okra who is with the mother of the bartender who served the drinks at last night's Greta Phi party.

Sandra?

I'm here with Mrs. Alfonso E. Jones. Mrs. Jones, when Wally was a young boy did he show any tendencies of being a part of such sin?

Mrs. Jones: Wally was always a good boy. I can't believe he got mixed up in such a horrible affair.

Sandra: Thank you Mrs. Jones, and as we leave the campus we can only hope that the Dean and the trustees can curb this growing unrest.

Now back to David Brinky in Washington.

No Machines Needed

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

During the time we have been students at Carolina, we have observed Student Government at work and have a few observations to make which perhaps other students share.

First, we are amazed at the power elected students have on this campus, and in light of this, appalled at the few number of students who bother to voice a vote in the student elections.

We are not saying the power is good or bad; that is dependent upon the person who is elected of course. What is bad, besides the minority of students who vote, is the way political machines on campus manage to secure the votes and use them to their own end.

More power to students who have taken the trouble to take an interest in and work for Student Government. They should get some credit for having the foresignt and intelligence to find out what's going on and organizing themselves accordingly.

However, when these few, in the form of a machine, constantly run rampant over independent students who have no access to a machine, campus politics becomes a silly little game which only the "in crowd" know the rules to.

We're sick of this. We have no desire to be part of this "in crowd," but we do wish our votes would be worth something. We can't promise 30 votes to so and so; we can't afford steak dinners; we don't have the backing of a fraternity or a sorority, but we are students here. Unlike some, we realize what maneuvering does go on in a campus election.

So what? Here's so what. This maneuvering is not always to the advantage of this or the majority of students. Granted, many of you have long ago given up caring. "You can't beat the establishment." It is such as you that give strength and life to campus machines.

"Well, you've got to face political realities." No we don't. Not these kind of realities. We don't have to face political dynasties. This is a college campus, not Washington, D. C.

Isn't it possible for someone to win that has no more machine than the organization that is necessary to conduct any campaign? Perhaps it is not. But, if it isn't, we best change the name Student Government to "Student Manipulation."

Attendance Rules?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Is there any one on or off campus who can tell me what the attendance regulations are for UNC students? The Undergraduate Bulletin says, "Absences from class for valid reasons are excused only by the instructors. A student should present his explanation for any absences to his instructor at the next meeting of the class. If the student misses without excuse more classes than the instructor deems advisable, the instructor MAY request that the student's dean or General College adviser drop him from the course with grade F."

To my knowledge this is the only regulation of the college. If this be the case, and indeed it seems to be, then I have been given some misinformation by certain faculty members. I attribute this mininformation not to any intent on the part of any faculty member but to the "powers that be" over the faculty.

It appears that the administration or the party that has power over these matters has refused to put certain restrictions on the students and faculty in writing, but has felt it necessary to impose, under-the-board, restrictions and regulations upon the faculty.

The reason for this under-the-board dealing, I suspect, is that if the regulations (bans) were honestly stated they would hurt the image of the Free University. I am probably wrong and the rules are probably written, but I haven't seen them.

MRA Gets Qualified Endorsement

By JAMES A. DAIRE

To discount MRA as a threat to organized religion (Allen comments, DTH, 19 March), a freakish neo - religion" striving for dictatorship by appealing to an outmoded morality (Clay, DTH 24 March), and a misguided, Republican - indoctrinated, "Middle - of - the-Road" political movement (Rothman, DTH 24 March) would be an over - simplification and perhaps more than a little unfair.

The tenor of these comments sounds vaguely familiar; rather like that of the proponents of the Wilkinson - Aptheker ban from campus. Both share one element:fear of the "extreme", the unfamiliar, and a desire not to rock the boat. Guilt by implication and assumption, and thinly veiled name - calling are the techniques both groups of antagonists use, in my opinion, to the detriment of any worth their arguments might have. Now, for MRA. . .

WHY THE FUSS?

Personally, I can't see what all the fuss is about . . . and yet I can. MRA's "good news" is that anyone can know the difference between right and wrong by referring to four "absolute" criteria of goodness: "absolute" love, "absolute" honesty, "absolute" unselfishness, and "absolute" purity. If one is in doubt about the rightness of a particular motivation to action, he need only to put it to the test of these four "absolute" criteria to resolve his doubt. (Nothing startlingly new — if you can accept the existence of absolutes in our age of "enlightenment".)

But assurance in deciding the rightness or wrongness of a motivation is only part of the MRA "good news"; once a man decides in favor of rightness, he must 'stand up and be counted", act out his conviction, be visible evidence of God acting in the world — positively. "To do what is right will, more often than not, says MRA, "place the convinced man in opposition to most of his fellows."

The pragmatic solution to rigth - wrong decisions — favored by modern society — will not bring about the kind of world peace (and personal peace) that most of us seek today. What is needed is a rekindling of ardor for, and responsibility toward one's fellow men. (To me, this appears to be in the best Judeo-Crhistian tradition.)

The catch is that each one of us has to disavow the amorality of pragmatism and dedicate himself to the positive establishment of God - directed goodness in his sphere of activity.

(I suppose that one might construe this as a kind of "dictatorship", but then Christ never pretended that it was going to be otherwise. Come to think of it, neither did Moses, Buddha nor Mohammed maintain anything to the contrary. By committing himself to God's will, a man becomes His "slave" and God his "dictator". There's nothing particularly new in this notion — except that it is being preclaimed today and outside "organized religion".)

"Now," continues the MRA argument, "Communism is unswervingly devoted to the elimination of God in modern life. Its appeal is strong, its methods without scruple. Any effort to reify Godliness, must also be an efort to destroy communism and all it stands for."

(If this makes MRA a political movement, I guess it's unavoidable. If this makes it "rightist" and therefore wrong, I suppose that you'd have to put Christ and Moses and Buddha and Mohammed in the same camp, too. If to speak out for the use of moral conscience in our everyday dealings with others earns us the labels "activist" and "extremist", I guess that's one of the prices we have to pay for our convictions.)

Fr. Cuthbert Allen (DTH, 19 March) feels that MRA is a threat to organized religion. He's right. But I don't think that this qualifies Moral Re-Armament as "neo-religion", although the reeawakening of traditional morality is novel in today's world. Fr. Allen is right to be concerned — and most modern churchmen feel a similar uneasiness.

The crisis of modern "organized" religion was not precipitated by MRA, but rather by the inability of the traditional "spokesmen" of God to reach their congregations, to make the faith a living, acting force for goodness, a means of union with one's co - religionists and Maker. Contributing to this growing aversion to "organized" religion has been the secularization of society.

God is no longer fashionable and is, for all purposes and intents, "dead" for the man-in-the-street. In this light, it is easy to see why the Clay-Rothman-Basham trio (and most of today's society) regard MRA's "back-to-God" movement as suspicious, subversive, and unworthy of sophisticated consideration.

It's much more comfortable to be fasionable and sweep the whole affair under the carpet with a derisive chuckle. I do not think what MRA and the awakening conscience of the "organized" religions represent can be so facilely (or facetiously) dealt with.

MRA and every other God-oriented movement from the first historical records has sought strength in community. Mutual reinforcement of religious ardor is a sufficient — and laudable — motive for banding together. If one really wants to get sticky, he could point to the MRA movement and say that's what he should be doing within his denominational context to re-form the world for hunanity, if not for God.

Perhaps we make so much fuss because MRA has demonstrated the weakness of or religious commitment and we find it a bit uncomfortable. Considering the zeal of the MRAers, can we realistically blame them for saying to all who would listen: "Come, join us in our new - found sense of dedication and responsibility. You'll have to sacrifice many things; being right has its price, but the rewards are very great."?

Their enthusiasm alone is enough to make one feel a twinge of jealousy — and may-be guilt for one's inactivity. The point is that membership in MRA is not a prerequisite for moral and conscientious behavior; positive action, inspired by love of God — not jealousy — is within the capabilities of everyone: "all" it takes is decision followed by commitment followed by action. What could be simpler?

NOT SO SIMPLE

Actually, it isn't as simple as I'm making it seem. Unfortunately, as much as MRA wants to make it appear to the contrary, "absolutes" are rather difficult to define in nice, tidy formulae that everyone will agree to. MRA has given us four "absolute" criteria by which to judge our motivations, but leaves it up to each of us to define his own code "absolutes" — within limits and in communion with personally revealed directives from on High.

I won't deny that it is possible for God to speak to each of us; I'm just a little sceptical that it happens with as much frequency as MRA would have us believe is possible. At least this hasn't been my experience.

The "absolute" criteria posited by MRA, viewed in this light, tend to become arbitrary — but certainly no more so than those of modern denominational Christianity or Judaism. While arbitrariness makes me leery, these "absolute" criteria — personally interpreted in terms of my religious background — provide succinct, tidy reference points for action.

For this reason, if none other, MRA is valuable as a movement. If if further serves to shake a few people up, so much the better.

MRA has alternatively been called communistic and fascistic; if it is either it cannot be both. I personally don't see either as plausiable alternatives. Whether it is Republican or Democratic, conservative or liberal, doesn't seem to me to impair the effectivenss of its aims.

In rereading the several broadsides the DTH has recently published against MRA, I wonder what this movement has that is frightening the editorialists. Even with the limitations that inhere in MRA, it has my vote.

Sincerely,

Piano-Playing Pruetts Give Concert Tonight

Lilian and James Pruett will give a duo-piano concert tonight at 8 in Hill Hall. Their performance is part of the Festival of Contemporary Music, sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha.

The Pruett will play four compositions — all written especially for two pianos. They are "Aria and Toccata" by Norman Dello Joio, "Night Vision" by John Dibricks, "Sonata for Two Pianos" by Paul Hindemuth and "[illegible] for Two Pianos [illegible]" by Barber.

The Barber [illegible] feature of the concert. It is considered one of the composer's best, but it is rarely performed because of the difficulty of the percussion accompaniment. The percussion work tonight will be done by Keith McClelland and Wiliam Bolen, both UNC students.

Both Lilian and James Pruett recieved Ph.D. degrees in music from UNC. Mrs. Pruett is currently an assistant professor music at North Carolina College at Durham. She has appeared as a solist with the University Symphony Orchestra.

Pruett has made several appearances in this area as a singer as well as a pianist. He performed in the Opera Workshop production of Donizetti's "La Campanella."

North Carolina News Roundup

Another UFO Sighted

(AP)—The Charlotte Weather Bureau said yesterday that an unidentified flying object seen in the sky over North Carolina and South Carolina may have been a meteor or a rocket element burning up as it returned to the earth's atmosphere.

Reports of the object being seen came from Union, S. C., and the Western North Carolina towns of Newton, Conover, Lenoir, Hickory and Valdese.

Policemen in the towns reported seeing the object about 2 a.m. yesterday, traveling from east to west.

Union observers said it appeared to be a bright blue ball; giving off sparks. They reported it disappeared after they watched it for some time.

North Carolinians told of seeing a large bright blue ball with sparklers shooting from it. They said it had a tail eight feet to 10 feet long.

Voting Rights Bill Restricts

RALEIGH (AP)—Ten additional North Carolina counties, including populous Wake and Guilford, will come under restrictions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act which includes repeal of literacy tests.

The U. S. Census Bureau said yesterday that fewer than 50 per cent of the voting age population in the 10 counties cast ballots in the 1964 election.

Alex Brock, executive secretary of the North Carolina Elections Board, said other counties listed in the latest report are Beaufort, Bladen, Cleveland, Harnett, Lee, Rockingham and Union.

Four other counties, Camden, Martin, Perquimans and Washington, were informed earlier that they fell below the 50 per cent figure.

Brock said that 40 of North Carolina's 100 counties subject to the restrictions.

Brock added that the census takers failed to ask how long a person had been a resident of a country.

"This has been one of the most frustrating things we have faced," Brock said, "We feel it has a vital bearing to the census and should have been one of the questions asked."

Horse Likes Sugar

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Four-year-old Lee Jackson of Clemmons learned about women the hard way.

He was feeding sugar to a neighbor's lady poney with one hand Sunday. With the other hand he was eating cake with whtie icing.

The pony grabbed up the sugar, then she took a ladylike nibble at Lee's icing - coated lips.

At the hospital, doctors said Lee's face was only bruised. And, after all, he's the only boy in his set who can boast of being kissed by a pony.

Booze Stolen From Sheriff

SHELBY (AP) — Sheriff Haywood Allen said yesterday that an estimated 125 cases of confiscated liquor and another 30 cases of beer are missing from a vault at the sheriff's headquarters in Shelby.

Conservative estimates pegged the value of the whisky and beer at about $5,000. It was confiscated in raids made by the sheriff's department.

Allen told newsmen that the first hint he had of trouble was March 3 when he discovered 97 cases of liquor missing from the vault. He said the additional 27 cases of liquor and the beer was missing March 16.

No arrests have been made in the case, the sheriff said. He added that John Vanderford, State Bureau of Investigation agent in Cleveland County, and Chairman David Beam of the Cleveland County Board of Commissioners, were told in advance of the theft.

Suharto's Cabinet Draws Fire From Organizations

JAKARATA, Indonesia — (AP) — Opposition cropped up yesterday against Indonesia's new 79 - member cabinet. Students who sparked the ouster cabinet were reported planning to demonstrate against it.

Kostram, an amalgamation of various political, social, economic, educational and student organizations, issued a statement saying it could not support the cabinet announced by Sukarno Sunday to cure Indonesia's economic and political ills.

"The present cabinet basically does not undergo any change towards simplifying the structure of government," the statement said. It charged the cabinet still is not fully freed of Communist domination and "will not be capable of lowering prices to overcome the country's economic difficulties."

Kostram complained that Sukarno, now believed to be only a figurehead, did not appreciably reduce the cabinet membership from the 100 members he had in his old Pro - Communist Chinese cabinet.

LBJ Greets Visiting Mrs. Gandhi

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson greeted India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi yesterday and expressed his desire that India and Pakistan seek improvement in their relations.

Welcoming the petite Indian leader on the South Lawn of the White House, the President stressed that "The United States values deply the friendship of both India and Pakistan."

His statement appeared aimed at a meeting halfway around the world between Pakistan's President Ayub Khan and the visiting Chinese Communist Chief of State Liu Shao-Shi as well as at the Indian government leader.

Mrs. Gandhi, arriving for a two - day official visit, told Johnson that "India and the United States cannot and should not take each other for granted or allow their relations to drift."

She said the two countries together could make the world a better place in which to live.

The President outlined a five - point list of "very practical questions" he expects to dicsuss with the 48 - year - old widow, who heads the world's most populous democracy.

Johnson said also he hopes to announce an imagintive new program in the field of cultural exchange before his conversations with Mrs. Gandhi end.

He did not elaborate.

Following her reception with full military honors Mrs. Gandhi and the President met alone in his oval office for a while and then their advisers were called in. After this first session, which lasted an hour and a half, the President escorted his sari-clad visitor across Pennsylvania avenue on foot to Blair House, the Presidential guest residence.

Wilson Vows No Troops To Viet Nam

LONDON (AP) Prime Minister Harold Wilson, scenting a big national election victory, ruled out yesterday a role for British troops in Viet Nam.

Three days before the British people choose a new parliament, Wilson pledged anew that his Labor government will end the Rhodesian rebellion without the use of force. Dispatch of troops will be considered, he said, only if British Governor Sir Humphrey Gibbs wants them to preserve law and order.

At a jampacked news conference, the Prime Minister brushed aside as "tomfoolery" opposition Conservative claims that Britain, under Labor rule, has become an American satellite.

Speaking as if Labor's return to power after Thursday's vote is a mere formality, Wilson defined his government's aim on British membership of the European Common Market in this way:

"We shall continue to probe to find out what conditions will be available if we were to seek to join."

Earlier Edward Heath, Conservative leader, accused Wilson of evading a clearcut statement of attitude toward joining the six - nation market.

Answering questioners who drew attention to apparent Conservative party criticisms of the United States, Heath emphatically denied he is Anti-American.

"Criticism of dependence on America is quite different from critizing America herself," he said. "I have the utmost admiration for the United States."

Moscow Red Meet Begins

MOSCOW (AP) — The elite of the Red - ruled world — except China — assembled last night in damp, foggy Moscow to hear the latest Soviet policy lines on Stalin, Viet Nam and other Communist problems.

Policies of the Soviet Communist Party, which runs the Soviet Union, will be laid down at a Congress beginning in the Kremlin today. Approximately 5,000 party delegates, representing more than 12 million members in this nation of 232 million persons, are expected to approve without significant questioning the lines of their leaders.

Leonid I. Brezhnev, Party First Secretary, will make the main policy report at the opening session. Premier Alexei N. Kosygin will speak later on economic development plans for the next five years.

According to Communist sources, Brezhnev will mention briefly both Josef V. Stalnin and Nikita S. Khrushchev. A re-evaluation of the Stalin period in Soviet history has been under way in an effort to show that, despite Khrushchev's harsh criticism 10 years ago of the Stalin era, some good was achieved then. The present Soviet leaders have a personal interest in this since they were making their reputations at that time.

There are indications, however, that the re-evalutation will go beyond salvaging some good from the period, also quietly decreasing mention of the crimes Khrushchev charged to Stalin. But at home and abroad, some communists have raised voices in protest to any softening of criticism of the late dictator.

Informed quarters expect denunciation of U. S. policy in Viet Nam to be a drumbeat theme of the congress. Brezhnev probably will hit the subject hard and visiting delegations from foreign Communist parties, who speak as guests, are likely to mention it, too.

But there are no indications that the Moscow - Peking dispute, which involves Viet Nam and other issues, is scheduled for much discussion. The Soviet line has been one of calling for Communist unity.

China rejected an invitation to the congress. It accused the Russians of treating China as an enemy, so how can it "be expected to attend your congress?" Pro - Chinese Communist parties of Albania, Japan and New Zealand also rejected invitations. But the Chinese made no public attempt to restrict the freedom of those parties which have tried to balance between the two Communist giants.

Senate Committee Hears Bomb Pleas

WASHINGTON (AP)—A call for stepped-up bombing of North Viet Nam and warnings against recognition of Red China were heard by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday as it renewed its examination of U. S. policy in Asia.

And one witness told the committee that its hearings seem aimed at "softening our resistance to Chinese Communism."

Dr. Walter H. Judd, a former Republican Congressman from Minnesota and onetime medical missionary to China, urged the heavier bombing. He led off for the group of three witnesses summoned at the request to GOP committeemen who had complained that earlier witnesses expressed the views of Democratic members in counseling closer contacts with mainland China.

Judd asked bombings of "war plants, power plants, oil tanks" and whatever is important to North Viet Nam's war effort.

This hasn't been done, Judd said, "because an almost hysterical fear has been built up that, among other things, it might lead to war with Red China."

Judd has joined in opposing recognition of Red China and its admission to the United Nations by Dr. George E. Taylor, director of the University of Washington's Far Eastern and Russian Affairs Institute, and by Yale Prof. David N. Rowe.

It was Rowe who challenged the committee's aims and said the chairman himself, Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., "states that the main aim of his hearings is a political aim—namely to prevent a war with Communist China."

The China-born professor said the committee's course so far is to "align selected civilian propagandists uniformly against the main line of United States foreign policy in Asia" with the effect of depicting public experts "at odds with the administration."

Rowe said this has "a main effect of softening our resistance to Communist China."

Ky Facing Old Problems

SAIGON, (AP) — Premier Nguyen Cao Ky is sliding into his first major government crisis beset by the twin problems tnat plagued Ngo Dinh Diem and Lt. Gen. Nguyen Khanh, the two previous strongmen in Viet Nam.

How can he keep extremists off the streets and at the same time retain the full backing of the all - powerful military junta?

His survival will depend upon a judicious use of power, persuasion and tact, qualities that have never been prominent in Vietnamese politics.

For a time the powerful backing of the United States that Ky enjoys seemed sufficeint to shield him from the vagaries of local politics. But in this crisis, the United States can only stand self consciously aside, hopeful that the vague Anti - American overtones of recent demonstrations don't build up.

Ky and the handful of generals who share the pinnacle of power in Viet Nam brought much of the trouble upon themselves.

They exposed a crack in the ruling group by expelling one of the most powerful members, Lt. Gen. Nguyen Chanh Thi, commander of the 1st military corps, early this month.

The explosion and the controversy within the military that it caused, gave agitators and political opportunists the chance they wanted.

Long stifled by Premier Ky's stand against opposition, these student and Buddhist agitators took to the streets in Saigon, at Da Nang and at the Buddhist center of Hue.

The demonstrations are getting bigger, the cries for the ouster of Ky louder.

What does the opposition want? Premier Ky, as were his predecessors, must be puzzled. The Buddhists say they desire a civilian government and the implementation of a vague "four point" program, including the return to Viet Nam of all ousted generals.

They cry has been raised for early general elections in a country where at least as many people are under the control of the Communists as are under the control of the government.

Some agitators are complaining about U. S. bases along the coast and in the mountains, suggesting that the government has sold out to the Americans.

The list gets longer and the situation is beginning to look like the political turmoil of 1964 and early 1965.

So far Ky has concentrated on speeches calling for public unity.

B52's Devastate Swamp; Rattles Windows In Saigon

SAIGON (AP) Unlaoding 50 tons of explosives, U. S. B52 stratofortresses cut a mile - long path of devastation in a thick mangrove swamp yesterday in support of a Marine operation to make the Saigon River safe for shipping. The thunder of the attack echoed in the capital 8 miles away.

Other high - flying saturation bombers from Guam hit Viet Cong strongholds close to the Cambodian border, continuing the almost daily strikes against the Communist enemy ensconced in South Viet Nam's deep jungles. Two new strikes 70 miles northwest of Saigon were aimed at an area believed to house the Viet Cong's headquarters.

A ground U. S. and South Vietnamese forces pressed hunt and killed operations in the central highlands and central coastal plains but action was minimal.

On the political front, South Vietnamese military personnel were told to beware of becoming victims of enemy schemes to divided them. An armed forces order of the day issued in Saigon follows mounting political presure on South Viet Nam's military regime to turn power over to civilians.

A U. S. Air Force spokesman in Saigon, who witnessed the B52 strike southeast of the capital from an observation plane, said the eight-engine Strategic Air Command mammoths possibly obliterated a Viet Cong factory used for making mines to harass ships steaming up the Saigon river with vital supplies.

"The spokesman termed the bombardment "The most awesome and devastating thing I ever have seen."

Tar Heels Play Yale Here This Afternoon

GENE RECTOR
DTH Spts. Ed.

North Carolina's Tar Heels will try again this afternoon to find the answers to their baseball woes as they battle Yale at 3 p.m. on Emerson Field.

One win in four starts — including two losses at home — has dulled some of the pre-season optimism.

"Erratic, inconsistent pitching is responsible for the slow start," said Tar Heel coach Walter Rabb.

"I don't believe it will be that way all year long," he said. "We have good pitching ability. Danny Walker and Beattie Leonard have both been getting behind the hitters and throwing the ball too high — that's not like either of them."

Several performers could hold the answer to the pitching problem.

"Mike Flannigan and Mike McLaughlin are both big question marks," said Rabb.

McLaughlin started the season opener against East Carolina but could get no one out. Control was the big factor as it has been for most of his career.

"But McLaughlin struck out four in two innings in an exhibition game the other day," said Rabb. "Maybe he has found the answer."

The Florida trip — coming up April 7-9 — may help the pitching saff.

"If we have good weather, the pitchers will have a chance to find themselves. Against that type of competition — Florida State and Miami — they will have to be bearing down all the way."

The big problem now is to find a pitcher to beat N. C. State in the ACC opener on April 2. "We normally don't want to play a conference game before our Florida trip," said Rabb, "but it could not be avoided this year."

But even with the early - season pitching problems, Coach Rabb is definitely not pushing the panic button.

"We should have a sound defensive team," he said. "Butch Watts and Charlie Thomas at second base team well with shortstop Bruce Bolick to give us a strong double-play combination.

"If Charlie Carr can live up to his potential as a freshman, then he should be a fine center fielder.

"Cathcer John Shaw completes our middle strength."

Hitting, for the most part, has not been the major Tar Heel concern this season.

Danny Talbott has been burning with the bat — going seven for 12 in four games.

"Bob Bonczek has been hitting the ball well," said Rabb. "Bob Hume has been getting his hits although he hasn't been hitting the ball real hard."

But still the Tar Heels can not get that momentum they need. They have another chance today against Yale. Colby comes on Wednesday and Thursday before the big ACC opener against State here on Saturday.

Bass Leaves Gamecocks; Signs With Montreal Team

COLUMBIA (AP) — Marvin Bass, who led the South Carolina Gamecocks to their first conference football title in 71 years last year, has signed a $75,000, three-year contract as head coach of the professional Montreal Beavers.

Bass announced Monday his resignation as athletic director and head football coach at South Carolina, much to the surprise of university officials.

No successor to Bass apparently is in sight. An athletic committee of trustees will begin the search for a replacement.

However, Bass said, "I think that basketball coach Frank McGuire, who is presently the associate athletic director's job. I certainly will recommend him for the job."

Bass, 46, became head coach at South Carolina in 1961 and was named athletic director in 1962. His salary reportedly was about $15,000 annually.

He signed the contract to become general manager and head coach of the new Montreal Beavers, a member of the Continental Football League in Canada, in Clearwater, Fla., Sunday night.

Nicknamed "The Moose," Bass had a 17-29-4 record in five football seasons at South Carolina. He led the Gamecocks to their first football title in 71 years when the South Carolina was a co-champions with Duke in the Atlantic Coast Conference in 1965. The Gamecocks were 5-2 in the ACC and 5-5 overall.

Bass - coached South Carolina teams won three out of their five games with arch-rival Clemson.

Bass indicated Monday he would be willing to remain at South Carolina through the end of spring football practice on April 21 if university officials felt it necessary. But officials of the Montreal team say he is due in the Canada city later this week.

Bass said he had notified Sol Blatt Jr., a member of the trustees' athletic committee, before flying to Clearwater that he planned to sign the contract. He said he had wanted to discuss it with University President Thomas F. Jones and members of his coaching staff, "but things just happened too quickly."

"I hate to leave Columbia and South Carolina because I feel I have made many friends here," said Bass. "But this was too good an offer for me to turn down. It is the best offer I've ever had in coaching."

Rutledge Osborne of Orangeburg, chairman of the university's Board of Trusetes, said the first inkling he had of the deal was when he read a newspaper account.

Russ Scrim, vice president of the Beavers, confirmed in Montreal that the contract was signed but refused to disclose the amount or its length. Bass said it calls for $75,000 over a three-year period.

Bass signed the contract at the Clearwater winter home of John Newman, president of the Montreal club.

The Montreal Beavers team was based last year in Fort Wayne, Ind. Newman purchased the franchise and is moving the club to Montreal.

Scrim said he and Bass will meet Tuesday in Indianapolis or Fort Wayne with officials of the old organization to arrange a player takeover. They will join Newman in New York for meetings of the Continental League on Friday and Saturday.

A native of Norfolk, Va., Bass succeeded Warren Giese as head coach at South Carolina in January, 1961.

UNC'S DOUBLES team composed of Bronson Van Wyck and Gene Hamilton walked over their M.I.T. opponents yesterday 6-2, 6-4 to help the Tar Heels take the match easily 9-0.

Coach Hilton's trackmen gave a good account of themselves at the Florida Relays on Saturday at Gainesville.

Outstanding performances were registered by Co-Captain Jim Meade, Lecter Hyder, Tom Carpenter, and the frosh distance Medley relay team.

Meade met stiff competition in the two mile event. He ran the fastest two mile of his life, yet placed fifth a 9:15 clocking. The winner was Oscar Moore of Southern Illinois. Moore's winning time of 8:41.9 was a new meet record.

In the pole vault Carolina's Lecter Hyder cleared 13'6" which was a personal best for him. However, this effort was not good enough for a place in the top three.

Tom Carpenter ran the fastest half mile of his career as he led the distance medley relay contingent to a fifth place finish with his 1:54 for the 880.

The frosh distance medley team composed of Rick Davila, Jim Hotelling, Truitt Goodwin, and Joe Lasich finished second in the fine time of 10:19.

Other notable performances were registereed in the freshmen division of the high jump. Dave Lassiter and Steve Spencer gained third and fourth place respectively. They cleared 6'4"

Jon Levin, who was undefeated up until this meet, finished fifth in the 100 yd. dash with a 9.8 Kenny White of Florida State won this race in the time of 9.6.

Coach Hilton said, "the performances on the whole were not too bad. We did about as well as I figured. Carpenter did a fine job in the half, as did Ed Daw and Mike Williams in their two legs of the mile relay."

Carolina goes on the road again this Saturday. They will participate in the South Carolina Relays in Columbia. Then, they compete against South Carolina in a dual meet on Wednesday.

UNC Fencers Finish Eighth

North Carolina's fencers, with an eighth place finish in the NCAA Fencing Championships held at Duke University this past weekend placed higher than any ACC club has ever finished in that event.

The previous high was 34th place set last year by the same Tar Heel club.

The Tar Heel placement easily outdistanced the other ACC entries in the field. Host Duke University finished 20th. N. C. State, Clemson, and Virginia failed to place.

Tar Heel standouts were: Mark Emory, sabre; William Teague, epee; and Bill Benton, foil.

New York University placed first in the competition. The double-elimination affair saw the violets defeat five straight opponents.

Army was second with Wayne State Third.

Y Members Urged To Vote In Officer Elections Today

The YWCA executive officers for 1966-67 will be selected in an election to be held in Y Court today. A president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer will be picked.

All members of the YWCA, who have contributed financially or been active on one of the committees or projects, are eligible to vote.

The candidates picked by the present executive committee are Peggy Paul and Joan Archer for president, Terry George and Alice Graham for vice-president, Elder Witt and Birch Lipford for secretary, and Toni Cline for treasurer.

Peggy Paul is a junior from Jacksonville, Florida, who has served as co-chairman of the Y's International Gift Bazaar a member of the YWCA Hospital Committee, and has worked with the Symposium.

Miss Paul, in a statement, declared "As President I would attempt to make the Y-Cabinet a more conhesive organization while encouraging originality and initiative in each of the separate committees. With the asset of the newly-purchased lithograph machine, I hope to give the Y's activities more publicity in the dorms and sororities as part of an effort to encourage more interest and participation in the Y on our campus."

Joan Carol Archer is a junior from Chapel Hill who has served on the Campus Chest committee, the YWCA hospital committee, and on the Carolina Handbook committee.

"I believe that the YWCA could become more effective if a better system of communication with the campus could be set up. I propose that we have an elected delegate from each dorm and sorority to report "Y" news at each house meeting.

Vice - presidential candidate Terry George has served on the Carolina Handbook Staff, the Orientation Study Commission, and the Panhellenic tutorial program. Also nominated for the vice - presidency is Alice Graham who has been active on the Attorney General's staff, Women's Honor Council, Carolina Women's Counci, the Publications Board and has served as a dormitory social chairman for Spencer Hall.

Candidate Birch Lipford has worked with the Campus Chest Committee, the International Gilt Bazaar, the Orientation committee, the finance committee of the senior class, and has been elected president of the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

influential active body. Wilson writes in his book that the Student Council had failed to carry out competent investigation of hazing incidents because "it suffered at the time from a lack of adherence to the highest standards on the part of one of its members."

Because of this state-wide uproar, the hazing regulations at the University were henceforth enforced, the Student Council became an active force working with the administration and a state law was passed the following year against hazing.

In 1913 Article 9 of the N. C. General Statutes was added to the books. It not only forbid hazing in any colleges or schools in the state, but it also defined hazing — a problem which has long vexed those who tried to enforce the University law.

The law labeled the misdemeanor of hazing as "to annoy any student by playing abusive or ridiculous tricks upon him, to frighten, scold, beat or harass him, or to subject him to personal indignity."

The problem remains of the tree. Is the tree Dr. Hedgpeth wants to save the tree under which Rand died?

When former Chancellor R. B. House was asked if he could remember the spot on which Rand was killed, he replied, "It was down on the northwest corner of Emerson Field by Lenoir Hall."

This certainly would back up Hedgpeth's vicinity, but none of the alumni in the Chapel Hill area remember the exact spot or the fact that a tree was involved at all.

The only direct evidence of a tree being involved was included in the story carried by the "News and Observer" on September 14, 1912. "This morning about 1:30, these four students, who had attended a reception the night before, were seen sitting under a tree and something was said about a freshman sing and dance."

Some of the other alumni think Emerson was not cleared at that time. Consequently, if there was a tree, it is now gone. The maps of the University for 1912 are difficult to interpret because an athletic field ran from Cameron Ave. back to a wooded area.

Nonetheless, by age alone, if the tree still stands, it would have to be the large old poplar by Lenoir.

Will the tree be saved? Will it be positively identified? Tune in in 30 days at Emerson Field and see if Dr. Hedgpeth can solve the riddle and save the day (and the tree).

Little Of This; Lots Of That

From the election results which are in today's paper you can sure tell whether or not a little seasoning makes any difference in the fruits of victory.

THE NATURE of the female will never be understood. Paul Dickson ran for NSA delegate. He finished fifth among eight candidates. Where do you suppose he gained his strongest support? Would you believe Women's Residence Halls?

NOW THAT elections are over, and hopefully there won't be any protests, all the bulletin boards can return to their barren selves. And so, for that matter, can campus politicians.

HOW MUCH does one vote cost?

It was about 8 a.m. yesterday when the alarm clock wennt off. The sleepy fellow turned it off and squinted up at his roommate.

"Will you do me a favor?"

"Yes, if you will do one for me," the other fellow said.

"I want to go back to sleep. Will you put a nickel in the parking meter out by the car so I won't get a ticket?"

"Sure. Will you vote straight UP in the election?"

"Sure."

How much does one vote cost? Five cents.

So Who Cares – Anyway

Here we go again, at least for the moment. Wilkinson and Aptheker have been invited once more to share their immense knowledge with us.

THE CHANCELLOR should really put the squelch on the whole thing and let them appear. There would be no court case, no CFI meetings, no protests and probably no one would attend their speeches.

And no one would care about it anyway.

New Math

New math never fails to amaze you. Three times they counted the ballots for Student Legislature out in Ehringhaus.

1st Ballot		2nd Ballot		3rd Ballot
White	253	White	253	White	252
Richter	206	Goodfellow	197	Goodfellow	198
Dunivant	200	Aiken and		Aiken	197
Aiken	194	Richter	196	Richter	194
Goodfellow	193	Dunivant	194	Dunivant	188

About all that can be said is that White has a solid lead, but if they keep recounting the votes Goodfellow will overtake him sooner or later. Dunivant, once in third place, might as well forget it if the present trend continues.

But make them keep counting boys. Winners never quit, or get caught. — Andy Myers

Order Of Grail Inducts 16 New Members Today

Twelve juniors and four sophomores were initiated into the Order of the Grail in predawn rites today.

The Grail is the highest all-undergraduate honorary at the University.

New Sir Knights are: Arthur Travis Abbott, Asheville; Jeffrey Windsor Beaver, Charlotte; James Ballard Brame Jr., Durham; Franklin Taylor Branch, Atlanta, Ga.; Richard Marshall Forbis, Charlotte; John Lindsay Freeman, Charlotte; Jonathan Carl Gibson, Chattanooga, Tenn.; John Henry Hanan, Sacramento, Calif.

Also John Randle Hamilton, Charlotte; Steven Alan Hockfield, Durham; David Harris Kiel, High Point; Harry Lewis Macpherson, Wilmington, Del.; Thomas Jack Manley, Shreveport, La.; William Webster Tomford, Memphis, Tenn.; Eric Elton Van Loon, Nashville, Tenn.; and William Lane Verlenden III, Lookout Mountain, Tenn.

The Order of the Grail was founded in 1920 to recognize outstanding men of the University who exempllify the virtues of friendship, truth, courage, and service.

The specific problem which inspired the formation of the Order was the growning awareness on the part of the founders of a serious lack of unity on the Carolina campus.

It was felt that the antagonism between fraternity and residence hall men was impairing the effectiveness of united campus efforts.

The membership of the Order was thus divided between the two groups to provide a representative group qualified to discuss all aspects of University life. This year's Sir Knights include nine men from fraternities and seven from residence halls.

Powell Takes Presidency In SG Run-Off Elections

SP Wins Majority Of Legislative Seats

By GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

Bob Powell is the new president of the Student Body.

Powell won over Teddy O'Toole in the run-off election yesterday by 2,401 to 1,993 votes.

In protested legislative seats, the UP picked up only one of the six seats giving SP a majority of the seats in legislature for next year, 26 to 24 seats.

In the legislative elections in Morrison (MD XII) all four SP candidates carried by large margins over the UP candidates.

Frank Longest led the voting with 384 votes, Eric Van Loon, 361, Lacy Reaves, 350 Dick Levy, 341, Bob Wilbur, 189, and Frank Peterson 141.

In Men's District Five Bruce Jolly, SP, led the balloting with 140 votes and Artie Robinson, UP, collected 121 votes to get the other seat. Joe Chandler, SP, picked up 113 votes.

"I've never been happier in my life," Powell said following the completion of the vote counting last night.

"Without the Student Party organization from top to bottom this victory would not have been possible. This was one of the longest and hardest campaigns this campus has ever seen but it was one of the cleanest and I'm certainly happy about that.

"I want to commend my opponent for a most difficult fight and hope that he will be able to help me next year in making a successful Student Government.

"I am elated that the SP will be working with a majority in legislature," he said. "But I want to appeal to all students, not just the SP, to get together for next year in order to carry out our platform."

O'Toole congratulated Powell last night and commented, "The student body has expressed its opinion after a hard, but clean, campaign. The campaign is over. Now we must prepare with a united effort, to meet the challenges that face student government.

"My congratulations go to the winner, Bob Powell. My heartfelt thanks go to the students who voted for me today, and to the group of University Party workers, and friends, who made my campaign possible."

Powell will assume office in the first session of Student Legislature after the spring vaca-

Invitation Undecided

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson said yesterday he would not be able to reach a decision today on the new invitations to Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson to speak here.

"It will be the latter part of the week before I will have time to make my decision," Sitterson said. "Deciding which speakers will be allowed to talk here is only a small fraction of my work as acting chancellor and I cannot spend 90 per cent of my time considering that single problem."

The student-faculty committee on visiting speakers met Monday afternoon to discuss the recent invitations to Aptheker and Wilkinson. After meeting, the committee gave their recommendation to Sitterson.

Sitterson said Monday he would use their recommendation in making his decision by today. However, yesterday he felt he needs recommendations from several other sources before making a decision.

Student Body President Paul Dickson said if Sitterson permits Aptheker and Wilkinson to speak on campus there will be no need for a court case.

If Sitterson does not allow the controversial speakers to talk on campus, his decision will be used in the proposed court case to prove that the men were not barred from speaking for one specific date, but were banned from speaking on campus at any time.

The proposed court case would fight the speaker ban as being in violation of the First Amendment's guarantee of the right of free speech.

Ehringhaus Ballots Tallied Thrice; No Results Same

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Ehringhaus ballots from last Tuesday's election have been undergoing a metamorphosis ever since they were removed from the ballot box.

Of the five candidates running for legislative seats, not one has received the same number of votes each time the ballots were counted—and recounted.

First, they were counted the night of the election and winner of the most votes in MD X (Ehringhaus) was Ben White, Student Pary.

Ignoring the count in the infirmary, a piddling, here's how the vote went:

Ben White (SP) 253
Larry Richter (UP) 206
Noel Dunivant (UP) 200
Joel Aiken (SP) 194
Scott Goodfellow (SP) 193

The four top pollsters were to receive legislative seats, but since the vote was so close there was a request from Goodfellow, the low man, that the ballots be recounted.

Monday night Arthur Hays, chairman of the elections board, agreed a recount was in order. The original count was made with Al Richbourg calling out the vote and Fred Cryer and Harry Urich tallying them.

The first Monday night count was called out by Doug McKeowen and tallied by Hays. It was discovered the totals didn't jive with the first count.

Here were the new winners in the order of their scores:

White—253
Goodfellow—197
Aiken and Richter—196 each
Dunivant—194

Everyone but White took another place on the tally and Goodfellow came in second. Hays decided the count was too close to let it go at that so another count was decided upon.

He called in representatives from both political parties — Phil Kirstein from the UP and Bill Withrow from the SP.

The third count:

White—252
Goodfellow—198
Aiken—197
Richter—194
Dunivant—188

Hays scheduled another recount last night and said he will "keep counting" until the same results are reached twice.

'Leave Your Suitcases Half-Empty'

CAROL GALLANT
FIRST IN A SERIES

There's a small srteet in Paris called Rue Sommerard running parallel to Boulevard St. Germain on the Left Bank. It's a narrow, winding little street, completely overpowered by closely-knit, dignified seven story structures.

If anyone were to have told me three weeks before I walked into Hotel Home Latin on Rue Sommerard that I would ever see Paris, much less have my own room there, I would have been tempted to chuckle.

He would have had the last laugh, however, for one rainy evening I did indeed find myself surrounded by the sights and sounds of one of the most exciting cities in the world—Paris.

Like thousands of students turned loose in the summer for a short time I had packed a suit-case, smiled grimly at the Passport Photographer and headed for foreign shores.

"What about money? How would I get there? What about the language barrier?"

Sit back, relax and take advantage of the words of one who stumbled and fumbled her way around Europe last summer. Maybe I can save you a few bruises, and perhaps make you realize that a trip to Europe is not nearly as complicated or remote as you may think it is.

First, I offer you an address that will be invaluable to you in making tavel plans. Write, "Council on Student Travel"; 777 United Nations Plaza; New York 10017. The Council will give you rates and dates on student ships and student flights. You can reach Europe in nine days by student ship for $180 (one-way) or $225 at peak season.

I traveled on a student ship both ways and this was half the fun of the trip. For one thing, I made contacts. This is important when you reach a foreign city, find yourself in a dilemma and need to mooch off . . . I mean visit a friend.

Seriously, if you decide to travel alone as I did, you'll discover that no matter how much of an "independent, self-sufficient soul" you may think you are, a familiar face is a welcome sight.

Also, the foreign students you meet on a ship of plane, can give first-hand advice about things to see and places to stay. You may even get an invitation to stay in their home. This can give you an insight into a country you just can't gain from a hotel window or a walk down the main street.

One of the most meaningful parts of my trip was a stay in a German home in Hanau. I had made friends with a German girl on the boat. Perhaps she did not think I would take her seriously when she said, "Come to see me if you're in Germany." Surprise, Jutta! Here I am.

There was a small language barrier between her family and myself. (None of us could understand a word of what the other was saying) but we got along famously.

On one of my particularly "dramatic" days I decided to write an essay on life while sitting on the banks of the Seine—left bank, of course. There I was trying to look terribly wise and terribly un-touristy. A voice in the background, "Hey, there's that little Southern kid from the 'Aurelia'."

The student ship was also good for a lot of laughs; like sharing a cabin with eight, a storm at sea and seasickness. I nearly died laughing.

The crew on the boat was Italian and their English was as good as my Italian. Being a blond (only my hairdresser knows) the guys seemed especially interested in communication and it was nice, until I figured out what they were saying.

Meanwhile, back at the homestead, once you decide to leave the "home of the brave," count on a number of innoculations and a certain amount of paperwork leading to that invaluable ticket across borders called the American Passport.

Tune in tomorrow for information of passports and shots, plus the answer to such vital questions, as 'Will I starve to death?" "Will I have a place to stay?" "Will a hostile European insult me?"

STUDENTS BOUND for Europe enjoy the sun aboard the "Aurelia," a ship especially chartered for student travel.

MRC To Try Frat Problem After Easter

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The Men's Honor Council will try at least five individuals after the Easter holidays for campus code violations concerning the incidents which happened during German's weekend March 11-13.

Attorney General John Ingram said yesterday that no actual charges have been brought against the individuals yet and that investigations will continue into April.

Any individuals charged by the Attorney General will be tried by the Men's Honor Council. If any fraternity is charged with campus code violations as a group, it will be tried by the IFC Court.

The campus code violations responsible for the charges being made include public drunkenness, disorderly conduct and distruction of private property.

Over $300 damage was done to the Pi Lambda Phi house and contents alone between 6-8 a.m. Sunday morning March 13.

Dean of Men William G. Long said that the damage done to the Pi Lam house was only one example of the extensive amount of damage that was done to many fraternity houses during the weekend.

Long said he felt the campus code violations were the actions of individuals and not the group action of any fraternity.

Draft Quota Hits High Of 34,600

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department issued a call yesterday for a draft for 34,600 men in May, the highest monthly quota since January.

All of the May draftees will be assigned to the Army, the Pentagon said.

The April draft, also for the Army, totaled 21,700.

In January, a total of 38,280 men were summoned to service, 8,980 of them with the Marines.

In February, the quota dropped to 29,400, with 3,000 for the Marines.

The March quota originally was set at 32,900 but was cut to 22,400 when enlistments exceeded expectations.

The draft is normally used to bridge the gap between voluntary enlistments and the manpower requirements.

The draft has been at a relatively high level since last September as the United States pushed ahead with a major buildup of military manpower because of the Viet Nam war.

Homes Fill Rapidly As Jubilee Nears

By LYTT STAMPS

If you plan to invite a young lady to campus for Jubilee Weekend, it's time to find her a place to stay.

A survey yesterday of the 190 homes in Chapel Hill and Carrboro which have been approved by the Office of the Dean of Women show many homes are filled but a few are completely empty for the April 29-May 1 weekend.

Reactions from area motels and hotels vary when asked about the weekend.

Prices you will have to pay will depend on the place you choose. They are generally about $3 to $3.50 per night.

Typical reactions from the ladies who will serve as hostesses for your dates are something like this:

Mrs. I. W. Durham has room for eight for the weekend. None of her beds have been filled yet.

Mrs. Ira A. Ward has one of her four beds filled. That reservation was made at the same time someone made reservations for Germans.

Mrs. Jacob C. Hardee is full.

Mrs. G. A. Webb has "had people calling for about two months." Needless to say, she is full. She says her neighbor, Mrs. Yarborough Bridgers, is also filled.

Mrs. J. B. Ballentine can keep four. She says you'll need a car, though. The last person who stayed with her used a motorcycle and she was "worried all weekend."

Some of the people on the approved list do not plan to keep guests for the weekend and others have not decided how many they will keep.

The Carolina Inn has had reservations by a student since January 10. It still has some vacancies for the weekend.

Don't try the University Motel. They have been filled for "a couple of weeks."

Wait until the second week of April before you try to make reservations at Watts Motel. They will not accept them until then.

Al Hirt is headlining this year's Jubilee. He will appear on Saturday night April 30. The concert will begin at 7 p.m. so that there will be more time for parties afterwards.

The Friday night concert, which also begins at 7, features the Bitter End Singers.

Saturday afternoon at 3 David, della Rosa and Brooks and Jay and the Americans will play.

Sunday afternoon Charlie Byrd will appear.

Coeds must be in by 1 a.m. on Friday night, 2 a.m. on Saturday night and midnight on Sunday.

Confusion Is Caused By The Court System

Sixth In A Series

One of the major weaknesses of the Honor System is confusion surrounding the organization and functioning of the court system.

When a student commits an offense now he is unsure if he will be tried by the Honor Council or the Men's Residence Council Court or whether his offense violated the Honor Code or the Campus Code. This question is complicated even more for women students because they are subject to many more rules—more chances for mistakes.

One of the most meaningful attempts to end this confusion is contained in the Proposals for Judicial Reform, written by the Ad Hoc Commission on the Judiciary last fall.

The proposals, outlined below, have been endorsed by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline as "sound" and they "should be implemented."

A. SUPREME COURT OF THE STUDENT BODY — This court would take over all of the functions of the Constitutional Council as well as additional functions of hearing appeals only on procedural or constitutional violations. Its members would not be members of any other court and they will serve for as long as they are enrolled in the University. They would be appointed by the president of the student body upon the approval of the Student Legislature. The chief Justice shall be elected by the court each year.

B. HONOR COURT

1) This court will have original jurisdiction in all cases involving violations of the Honor Code.

2) The court will have one chairman and one vice-chairman who will be elected by the court from its own membership. These two positions shall not be filled by persons of the same sex. They shall not run in an election if their seats fall vacant during their term of office.

3) All vacancies on the court shall be filled by the president of the student body until the seats come up for election.

4) A council member shall be allowed two unexcused absences after which he shall automatically be off the court. He shall have the right to appeal his case to the court. This rule may be overturned by a two-thirds vote of the Council. A majority must be present for the vote. The chairman shall have the power to grant excuses.

5) All cases in which there is an Honor Code violation shall be tried by this court. It shall hear all violations that occur in connection with an honor code violation.

6) It shall have use of all penalties establshed by Student Legislature.

C. MEN'S COURT:

1) This court shall try only men's Campus Code offenses and Men's rule violations.

2) It shall have the same procedures and basic organizational structure as the Honor Court and these procedures shall be established by Student Letislature.

3) It shall be composed of male students elected from our existing districts. All vacancies shall be filled by the president of the student body until the next regular election for that seat.

4) A chairman shall be elected each year from the Court's membership. He shall not run in the general election if his seat falls vacant.

5) It shall have use of all penalties established by the Student Legislature.

D .WOMEN'S COURT:

1) This court shall try only women's Campus Code offenses and women's rule violations.

2) All other organizational and procedural matters concerning this court shall be the same as the Men's Court.

E. RESIDENCE COLLEGE COUNCILS:

1) These shall be established by the Student Legislature. In each Residence College there shall be a Council which shall be composed of five students elected from that college who shall hear all minor rule violations occurring in that college.

2) These Councils shall have the power to give a maximum penalty of probation and-or expulsion from the college living unit. They may also fine a student for damage to Residence Halls.

3) These councils may decide not to hear a case because they feel it is too serious in which case the Men's Court shall have jurisdiction.

F. HOUSE COUNCILS:

1) These shall be established by the Student Legislature in each women's residence hall that is not part of a college a council which shall be elected from that residence hall who shall hear all minor rule violations occurring in the residence hall.

2) These Councils shall have the power to give a maximum penalty of probation. They may also give campusment and fines.

3) These Councils may decide not to hear a case because of its seriousness. In this case the Women's Court shall hear the case.

G. APPEALS:

1) A student shall have the right of appeal to the Men's Court or the Women's Court on any grounds from the Residence College Councils or House Councils, respectively. These appeals shall be de novo.

2) A student shall have the right of appeal from the Men's Court, Women's Court, or the Honor Court to a higher court on the following grounds:

a. Unjust penalty
b. Reasonable doubt of guilt
c. Constitutional violation
d. Procedural violation.

3) The appeal must be made to the office of the attorney general in writing not more than 72 hours after the original hearing. He must state his grounds for appeal.

4) All apeals on constitutional or procedural violation shall be heard by the Supreme Court. All appeals on reasonable doubt of guilt or unjust penalty shall be heard by the Faculty Review Board.

a. A student who wishes to appeal on constitutional or procedural violations in the lower court must appeal on these grounds to the Supreme Court before he appeals to the Review Board on unjust penalty or reasonable doubt of guilt.

b. The Supreme Court shall hear only evidence related to the appeal. It may remand a case to the court of original jurisdiction or it may find that the violation did not seriously affect the verdice of the original court.

c. If a student forfeits his opportunity of first appeal to the Supreme Court and appeals directly to the Faculty Review Board, his opportunity of a retrial in the student courts is forever lost.

5) All appeals shall be handled by the student attorney General who shall notify the chairman of the appropriate court of appeals and the appropriate dean that an appeal has been filed.

Court Reverses Anti-Censorship Trend

Last week the Supreme Court took a step backward.

By a 5 to 4 decision it upheld the conviction of Ralph Ginzburg on the charge of violatin gthe Federal obscenity statute by sending through the mails "obscene material" and advertisements telling how such material might be obtained. Specifically, Mr. Ginzburg was the publisher and distributor of "Eros," a ten-dollar hard cover magazine; "Liaison," a newletter; and a book called "The Housewife's Handbook on Selective Promiscuity." These publications were judged obscene by a lower court because they dealt with sex.

This decision is a step backward because the Court added a new ground for obscenity. It ruled that a work which would be a borderline case under previous standards could be placed in the obscene category if it were advertised in a "titilating" or "erotically arousing" manner, or if its promotion deliberately emphasizes the "sexually provocative aspects" of the work. The effect of this is that regardless of the nature of a publication itself, the way it is advertised can make it obscene.

In an age when sex is used to sell everything from cars to liquor, this is ridiculous. But the humor of it may be lost on Mr. Ginzburg, who because of his overzealous advrtising, faces five years in prison.

The decision is surprising because up until now the Supreme Court seemed to be taking an anti-censorship position. In fact, the same day it handed down the Ginzburg decision it reversed the ruling that the book "Fanny Hill" was obscene. It is a mystery, therefore, why the Court should then reverse itself with Ginzburg and decide his case on such unusual grounds.

There could very well be a reversal of this ruling within the next two or three years or so. The confusion which will arise as to what constitutes titillating or provacative advertising, and the mass of cases which will be appealed to the Supreme Court concerning it, may convince the Court that it might have made a mistake. In addition, that four-justice minority has strong feelings on the matter and may win over another judge to form a majority in the next case.

In his dissent to the Ginzburg decision, Justice Potter Stewart said, "Neither the statute under which Ginzburg was convicted nor any other Federal statute I know of makes 'commercial exploitation' or 'pandering' or 'titillation' a criminal offense." In his dissent Justice William O. Douglas said, "I do not see how (sexy) advertisements add to or detract one whit from the legality of the book being distributed. A book should stand on its own, irrespective of . . . the wiles used in selling it." "However florid its cover, whatever the pitch of its advertisements, the contents remain the same," he said in concurring with the "Fanny Hill" ruling.

It seems to me that there are two important issues that transcend this particular case.

The first is the opinion of many, including, apparently, some members of the Supreme Court, that the appeal to sex just for the sake of sex is somehow wrong. This attitude was shown in the majority opinion in the Ginzburg case, when it was accusingly said, "The deliberate representation of (Ginzburg's) publications as erotically arousing . . . stimulated the reader to accept them as prurient; he looks for titillation, not for saving intellectual content."

So what? Who says that everything has to have "saving intellectual content?" We may not like erudity, but I deny that we have the right to outlaw it.

And what exactly is wrong with sex for its own sake? Why should "titillation" (a rather stupid word) be so much feared? The attitude that it is improper to be interested in things dealing with sex is as contrary to human nature as it is unrealistic, and it is a holdover from the absurdly idealistic Victorian code of morality, a doctrine much professed but rarely practiced.

Sex is natural; it is part of life. Why is writing about it obscenity? Where does the law come off making such rules? Think about it. The whole idea is preposterous.

The second issue is the whole question of censorship itself. Thomas Jefferson once said, "I am mortified to be told that in the United States of America, the sale of a book can become a subject of inquiry, and of criminal inquiry too, as an offense against religion; that a question like this can be carried before the civil magistrate." Think how much Mr. Jefferson would have to be mortified about if he were alive today.

Most censorship laws originally arose from the desire of religious legislators and organized religious groups to make their idea of a "proper" code of morality a matter of public and civil law. As such, nearly all of them deal primarily with matters prtaining to sex or to ideas which may possibly conflict with organized religion.

But we live in a secular society. Our Constitution guarantees the principle of the separation of Church and State by declaring that the government may not pass laws respecting an establishment of religion. But censorship laws are designed to enforce the "morality" supported by organized religion, and so they are an establishment of religion.

"Is this, then, our freedom of religion?" Jefferson asked. "Are we to have a censor whose imprimatur shall say what books may be sold and what we may buy? Whose foot is to be the measure to which ours are all to be cut or stretched?"

Justice Stewart said, ". . . if the First Amendment means anything, it means that a man cannot be sent to prison merely for distributing publications which offend a judge's esthetic sensibilities, mine or any other's. Censorship reflects a society's lack of confidence in itself. It is a hallmark of an authoritarian regime. Long ago those who wrote our First Amendment charted a different course. They believed a society can be truly strong only when it is truly free. In the realm of expression they put their faith, for better or for worse, in the enlightened choice of the people, free from the interference of a policeman's intrusive thumb or a judge's heavy hand. So it is that the Constitution protects course expression as well as refined, and vulgarity no less than elegance. A book worthless to me may convey something of value to my neighbor. In the free society to which our Constitution has committed us, it is for each to choose for himself."

When we lose sight of the Bill of Rights, "we lose our way. For then we forsake a government of law and are left with a government by big brother."

Finally, concerning censorship and our constitutional system, Justice Douglas said, "Publications and utterances were made immune from majoritarian control by the First Amendment, applicable to the states by reason of the Fourteenth. No exceptions were made, not even for obscenity."

I'm sure Mr. Ginzburg will be glad to hear this. He will have five years to reflect upon it.

Maybe the day will come when the entire Supreme Court realizes that all censorship of material dealing with sex is unconstitutional. Until then, we can consider these lines by William Blake:

"Children of the future age
Reading this indignant page
Know that in a former time
Love, sweet love, was thought a crime."

Sing-Out Coverage Hit

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

There are some standards of integrity which differentiate responsibile newspaper from tabloids. The Daily Tar Heel seems more and more to be adopting the standards of the latter category.

A prime case in point is the Tar Heel's "coverage" of the pacifist sing-out, printed in the Sunday edition. Guest reporter Pam Saylor writes of "beards, sandals, dirty hair, and protest songs sung (poorly) with out-of-tune guitars . . . The immediate watchword of this group was 'make love not war' ".

An examination of the picture that accompanied Miss Saylor's remarks reveals only two beards. There are no sandals. There are four people in tie and jacket. It is our hunch that the standards of dress of SDS-SPU members would compare favorably to those of any random sample of UNC undergraduates.

Consultation among the peaceniks in attendance has revealed that one person indeed wore sandals. But Miss Saylor probably didn't see him. No doubt she had previously worked out the formula: sandals, beards and dirty hair equals a peacenik.

While our music was indeed provided by the "Make Love Not War Jug Band," that title hardly represents the "watchword's' of the rally. A number of statements were included in the messages offered by Chuck Schunior, all of which are more to the point than the one phrase seized upon by Miss Saylor.

What, indeed, did Mr. Schunior say? (One would never know from the Tar Heel story.) Primarily, he concerned himself with the "peace draft," an attempt to offer constructive alternatives to the draft in the form of public service. (Thus, if you must derive a catch phrase from all of this, you might try "Build, not Burn".)

The wire services had picked up the idea of the peace draft, and thus, WTVD and other news sources picked it up as well and covered the sing out because of it. They had no trouble in seeing this as the main theme of the rally; but the Tar Heel confined itself to the dirty-hair clinches.

The Tar Heel did not report the sing-out in any accepted sense of the word. Rather, it indulged in cheap stereotyping, attempting to fit the participants into crude categories, thus avoiding the responsibility of writing an informatve report of the proceedings. It is no better to stereotype a "peacenik" to avoid seriously listening to him, than it is to stereotype a scholar as a "communist" and thus bar him from the podium a priori, because he lacks "educational value."

Finally, the picture caption requires some comment . . . ". . . to sing about freedom and how they don't want to fight about it in Viet Nam." It should not be necessary for the public to remind journalists that such comments belong on the editorial page, rather than masquerading as news-coverage.

There is considerable argument as to whether support of the regime of General Ky, a man who has expressed open admiration of Adolf Hitler, is indeed "fighting for freedom." It would seem that the Vietnamese people are faced only with a choice between two tyrannies. Thus, support of freedom in Viet Nam requires entirely different strategies.

The reporters, and implicitly, the editors of the Tar Heel, have resolved this issue for themselves and see it as settled. That is their right, but it is also a question of opinion. Such questions are properly dealth with in editorial expressions, not as purportedly objective reporting.

We have no objection to Miss Saylor's expressing her mind, but her reporting leaves a lot to be desired. The editors have severely abdicated their jobs in allowing this misuse of their pages.

Only a hundred or so persons attended the sing out, and the rest of the thousands in the University community are dependent on the Tar Heel for information about it. Instead of information, they have received calculated distortion.

We can only hope that the new administration of Mr. Thomas will remedy these miscarriages, and restore reportorial integrity.

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I have become greatly concerned with the tendency of the majority of people on this campus to be led astray by argumentum ad hominem, or "to revile a man is to prove him wrong." It seems all the rage to call people whose ideas you find disconcerting by all possible socially acceptable "dirty" names while at the same time overlooking any possible content in what they have to say.

It is too easy to dismiss a "bearded, be-sandaled, pot-smoking, protest-marching beatnik (or somethingelsenik)" without giving a moment of though to his ideas. It is obvious to most persons of intelligence that the significance of the "Peace—freedom Sing Out" held last Saturday is not to be found in the list of the participants, nor in a description of their mode of dress but rather in the reason for their presence.

Is it totally inconceivable to the American people that we as a nation might be wrong in pursuing our current course in Southeast Asia? Is it inconceivable that a person could find the concept of war abhorrent, especially when it has never been declared? Is it unbelievable that a student should be concerned about the quality of his education, about poverty, about ignorance?

If it is not totally inconceivable, then the people who are concerned should be allowed to speak without being reviled by others as social misfits and hence of no importance. It strikes me that if "the element" which supports apathy and beer is pushed to ask itself a few self-insightful questions, then the "Peace—freedom Sing Out" has accomplished a major victory.

The tradition of the university as a "marketplace" for ideas requires that someone occasionally contribute an idea. To dismiss all these ideas via ad hominem arguments is to deprive the mill of its grist and to deny yourselves the experience of self-doubt.

Ladies In Men's Rooms

Carolina Visitation Rules Interfere With Socializing

(Ed. Note: Written by a member of the Honor System Commission, this segment of a four-part series describes the visitation rules at Carolina and compares them with those at other schools.)

By ALAN BANOV
Special to the DTH

The ideal situation for a Carolina Gentleman is to belong to a fraternity, live in an apartment, and own a car. Many men in dormitories do not belong to fraternities, they obviously don't live in apartment, and probably well under half own cars.

The Residence College System is affording men more social opportunities, but one basic, important barrier blocks maximum usage of dormitory rooms for entertaining parents or dates — Carolina's archaic visitation rules.

Dates, mothers, and sisters are prohibited from visiting men's residence rooms, except during the spring Parent's Day and on the first day or so of Freshman Orientation in the fall. Men may see such guests only in their dormitory or residence college social rooms, which are often dingy and drab, as well as closed to coeds at various times. They are not conducive to the private entertainment one could enjoy if he weren't a student.

Women's rules specify certain times for coeds to visit these rooms — from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Fridays. 2 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturdays, and 2 p.m. to 11 p.m. on Sundays in Avery - Parker - Teague's social rooms, for example. Why aren't these rooms open all the time?

I don't know. Why not ask the Deans of Men and Women for an answer?

Women's rules (Article IF, Section 1c) state, "Women students are not permitted to visit men in their (dormitory) rooms." Violations of this rule "are considered Campus Code violations, not because they necessarily involve unladylike conduct, but because they fall under the broad scope of social conduct offenses."

VIOLATIONS OCCUR

Violations of these rules, as well as those limiting visitation of men's apartments and fraternities, do occur. That these violations occur and that local motels' are frequented by Carolina students reflect changes in moral values that visitations rules have failed to consider.

Several other conditions suggest review of and changes in the present rules:

1) There are very few opportunities for parents and relatives to see men's and women's rules during the academic year.

2) Students here have long operated an efficient, generally just Honor System, which most students adhere to. The rising College Board scores of incoming freshmen is but one small indication of the increasing maturity on the part of UNC students.

3) The fact that there are no visiting privileges compounds dating problems for men in a school with a disproportionately small number of women.

4) Those who do date find an unpleasant number of alternatives available for entertainment. On most Saturday nights a couple seemingly has only one place to go — to a rock and roll party, whether fraternity or independent.

There is little alternative to this form of entertainment: There are some concerts — mostly during the week and rarely folk or jazz, for example. Opportunities for mature behavior in a semi - private social sphere would prevent the continuous and often oppressive group focus.

5) The presence of female guests during certain house would result in neater and more attractive rooms, better hall conduct, and a general improvement in dormitory atmosphere — on the whole saving the University funds for repairing usual weekend damages.

6) Allowing men to have women in their rooms would prevent some of them from moving off campus to apartments, where their social life is less structured — also saving the University money during the latter months of the academic year.

7) The encouragement of communal responsibility would strengthen the residence college system. Members of a living unit feel little sense of responsibility toward the living unit itself. If visitation privileges were enacted, the individual would recognize that increased social freedom demands increased individual and corporate responsibility.

UNC LAGS BEHIND

Examination of rules at other institutions, even in the South, shows that Carolina lags far behind the nation's leading universities in adopting more reasonable visitation rules.

Duke students aren't training all their attention to their basketball team; recently they proposed reforms in their visitation rules, and the administration accepted them. The details aren't clear right now, but it is known that men were allowed to visit women's rooms several times this year and women were allowed to visit men's rooms also — on a trial basis.

There was only one minor violation of the rules, proving to the administration that students were mature enough to accept such privileges. Next year visitation allowances for both men and women will be increased, as a result.

Tulane University and Newcomb of New Orleans had visitation privileges for a while, and the University of Virginia's students have been petitioning for "parietal" hours for some time. U. Va.'s efforts will be discussed in depth in a later part of this column.

The University of Minnesota has two types of open houses — every Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. and "specials" on Fridays or Saturdays for any continuous four - hour period between 7 p.m. and 1 p.m. Doors must be left open at least one inch when guests are in rooms, and guests must register with a house host.

Certain exits are specified for guest use, and counselors conduct five checks, about one each hour, during the open houses. A house may apply for special open houses if at least 25 per cent of the occupants will participate with dates and a majority vote of the house sanctions it.

Brown University of Rhode Island allows women in men's rooms during the following hours: 3 to 6 p.m. from Monday through Thursdays, 3 p.m. to 12 midnight on Fridays, 1 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturdays, and 1 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Sundays and holidays.

Living units may, at their discretion, limit these hours. Registration of guests is required, but the open door requirement was found "impractical and unnecessary."

(The next part of this four-part series will continue a study of visitation rules on other campuses.)

Bill McFadden Wins Fulbright

Charles W. (Bill) McFadden has been awarded a Fulbright Scholarship to the University of Antioquia in Medellin, Colombia.

The grant is for 12 months. It provides for international travel, maintenance, allowance for books and tuition and authorized travel within the country.

McFadden said he will use the grant for study in South American colonial history. At UNC he is majoring in history and Spanish. He plans to do some special work in South American history soon.

McFadden was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year. He is president of Phi Alpha Theta, honorary history fraternity. He is also chairman of the Student Government Department of Education and Cultural Affairs.

Constitutional Council Explains Rulings

Ed. note: The following is a statement by Bill Robinson, chairman of the Constitutional Council, concerning the Council's actions on the protests of the March 22 election.

On March 25, 1966, the Constitutional Council heard two protests concerning the March 22 spring election. In the first case, Joe Chandler, SP candidate for Student Legislature in Men's District V (BVP), asked that the legislative election be invalidated because the name of Bruce Jolly, UP candidate had the SP endorsement beside it.

The Council decided that this error constituted a major violation of the General Elections law (specifically Article XI, Section 1). It was misleading to voters and could have greatly affected the election results. Therefore the election should be invalidated regardless of the vote return.

In the second hearing, Joe Ford and Bob Wilbut, both legislative candidates in MD XII (Morrison), appealed the election for the four seats to Legislature. Ford protested that his name had been misrepresented on the ballot (as George Ford).

Ford listed George Joseph Ford as the only name appearing on the index card, which is used to make up the names appearing on the ballot.

The Elections Board had no way of knowing how Ford wanted his name to appear, so they used his first name (George) and his last name (Ford). The election laws say that the names have to be listed alphabetically by last name, but no mention is made of first and middle names.

The Council found this to violate no statues of the Elections Law and therefore denied his appeal.

Wilbur desired invalidation of the election due to a discrepancy on the ballot, namely that Bob Pittard's name appeared on the ballot. Wilbur claimed that Pittard was not a candidate since he had not attended the Compulsory Candidates Meeting on Monday, March 7, nor had he filed a late excuse, and furthermore that he had actually withdrawn from the election at 11:55 a.m., March 22.

Pittard had, however, been nominated by the UP on Thursday, March 10. Pittard polled 196 votes while Wilbur had 249 votes and was fifth - highest. The fourth-highest candidate received 308 votes and won a seat.

The Council invalidated the election because Pittard asked Arthur Hays, chairman of the Elections Board, that his name be withdrawn. Since this request was made at noon the day of the election, Pittard's name could not be removed from the ballot. Obviously there is an inherent contradiction in that the election is automatically invalidated when a candidate so withdraws.

The Council found no provisions whatsoever governing the withdrawal of a candidate. Since Pittard was bound by no statute to withdraw before a certain deadline, he could withdraw at any time until the election was over.

There were many other issues involved, on which the Council did not base its decision but which pointed to gross inefficiencies in the Elections Law: The Elections Law provides that candidates may be nominated by political parties by selections boards, and by petition. These nominations may be submitted to the Elections Board up until 12 days prior to the election — in this case, Thursday, March 10.

Then a Compulsory Candidates Meeting is held to confirm each individual's candidacy and to explain the Election Law; this must be held at least nine class days before the election — also on Thursday, March 10. In the Spring Election the Candidates Meeting fell on Monday, March 7 — before nominations from the UP, the SP, the Honors System Commission, and certain petition candidates were entered.

Since the Candidates Meeting must come after these nominations are submitted, there actually never was such a meeting this spring and the candidacies of most nominees, under the Elections Law, remain uncertain. Obviously both the situation and the result are ridiculous when considering the spirit of the law and of the election.

But when specific infractions do arise the Council must consider the violation as it deprives an individual his rights and as it affects the election as a whole. The two have here conflicted, and the dividing line is not clear.

The Council recommends that Student Legislature immediately rectify the General Elections Law in the areas of withdrawals and of the date of the Compulsory Candidates Meeting. The Council also voices concern and disappointment over the petty and partisan attitudes surrounding many of these hearings and the lack of true concern for Student Government

Rise In Cost Of Living Highest Since Korean War

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government reported yesterday the steepest February rise in living costs since the Korean War. The upswing was led by soaring food prices which in the case of meat climbed off the top of Labor Department charts.

The rise of one-half of one per cent in the consumer price index measuring typical family living costs put the index at 11.6, meaning it took $11.16 last month to buy items that cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period.

Long rising meat prices went up another 2 per cent to 19 per cent above a year ago, edging off the top of the chart at 115.7 per cent of 1957-to prices.

Pork alone was 37 per cent higher than a year ago.

Fresh vegetables soarded 10.5 per cent, poultry 8 per cent and eggs nearly 4 per cent to lead the rise in food prices that made up 75 per cent of the February increase.

The rest of the rise was in housing, clothing, medical care and virtually all consumer services.

The only major item in the index that dropped was transportation, which edged down one-tenth of one per cent largely because of lower auto prices. The decline in transportation costs was less than usual for February.

Transportation Department Hearings Begin In Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate hearings on President Johnson's plan to bring all modes of U. S. transportation under a single new cabinet department began yesterday with a warning that some forms of transport are "in shocking decline."

That came from Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., sponsor of the bill, who spoke of a 50 per cent decline since 1950 in railroad passenger miles and declared "our merchant marine is in dire need of improvement if it is to survive."

Magnuson was the first witness before the Senate Government Operations Committee on what he described as "a very major, complex piece of legislation."

He agreed with Chairman John L. McClellan, D-Ark., who opened the hearing with the comment that "no one need expect us to report out this bill in half a dozen days" and Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., who said "it looks as if it will take weeks and weeks of study."

The new department which Johnson proposed in a special message to Congress March 2 would weld together various independent agencies which now employ almost 100,000 persons with annual budgets that total $6 billion. His main focus was on the need for one agency to promote travel safety.

Magnuson, veteran chairman of the Commerce Committee which has handled transportation problems for many years, said the administration "has no particular pride of authorship" in its plan but submitted the bill as a starting point for drafting a final product. As matter of fact, he said he has offered several amendments himself.

But Magnuson said he is convinced the committee will be sold on the need for the federal government to bring all transportation activities under one coordinated agency.

Ky Warns He Will Curb Buddhists

SAIGON, (AP) — Buddhist political agitators drew a warning from Premier Nguyen Cao Ky yesterday. He threatened "very strong measures" if necessary to curb the organized unrest that has clouded the Vietnamese war effort for nearly three weeks.

The aim would be "not for the survival of the government, but for the survival of Viet Nam," the chief of the Saigon military regime told a group of foreign newsmen.

In a situation which has taken on some Anti - American overtones, Deputy Defense Secretary Cyrus R. Vance was flying to visit U. S. and allied forces. He left Washington Monday night on this military mission.

However, the unrest led White House Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers and Presidential Assistant Robert Komer, who had been expected to go along, to put off their trip at least temporarily.

American armed forces carried on, plaguing Viet Cong hideouts with air power, naval gunfire and ground patrols.

U. S. Marines sought fresh contact with North Vietnamese regulars in the Quang Ngai area, 330 miles northeast of Saigon, after a battle Monday in which they estimated they killed 150. South Vietnamese troops in the same action said they accounted for 67 te of the enemy, reported to be elements of North Viet Nam's 1st regiment.

Other Marines, with Naval and air support, plodded through mangrove swamps 18 miles southeast of Saigon in the fourth day of Operation Jackstay. Few of the guerrillas who have been harassing shipping to and from the capital chose to oppose that drive to clear the Saigon River and its tributaries. Only eight have been reported killed. Backing up the Marines were the U. S. destroyer Robinson, Coast Guard cutters, Navy Patrol boats and carrier - based planes of the 7th fleet.

LBJ Sees Tax Hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson indicated yesterday he may ask Congress to increase taxes by $5 billion "more or less," perhaps as early as next month, if prices continue to rise.

Johnson emphasized, however, that he has not yet made any final decision on whether such action will be necessary.

The Chief Executive, fielding questions put to him by young people who have been serving one year in government posts, said no one likes to call for a tax increase—especially in an election year.

But he said he felt sure "Congress would rather have a modest tax increase of 5, 6 or 7 per cent of the tax bill, corporate and persona, than see inflation and the value of the dollar go down."

Johnson said most of his advisers seem to feel that measures taken so far to curb inflationary trends will not prove strong enough.

He said they are talking of three alternatives: government controls, a federal spending cut of $5-$10 billion or a tax increase of roughly $5 billion.

The president said no one likes controls. And he said he does not believe federal spending can be cut very much without hurting "necessary or popular programs that Congress wouldn't go along with."

That left the option of a possible tax increase.

Johnson said each federal agency will report to the budget bureau next month on possible economies. He said he will see how much those add up to and, if they are not substantial and "if prices are still going up, we will have to have a tax bill."

Johnson held what amounted to an impromptu news conference in the White House State dining room where he attended a reception for White House fellows — outstanding young people selected to aid government officials.

fellows — outstanding young people selected to aid government officials.

Inviting questions, he was asked about topics ranging from the state of the economy to prospects for more open dealings with Communist China.

The Chief Executive said the question of open dealing with Red China would have to be answered in Peking, not Washington.

So far, he said, Communist China has responded to every American proposal for exchanges and other contacts by demanding surrender of Taiwan "and when we say no, she hangs up the phone."

"We'll just have to go on trying and hoping," he said.

Discussing his talks this week with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, Johnson said they were producing "complete agreement" and "some big plans and some big programs." He suggested the United States this year might ship as much wheat to India as is consumed in this country, in order to avert famine there.

Asked to assess the results of Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings on Viet Nam policy, Johnson said they apparently took away some strength from the ranks of those supporting what he described as his moderate policy and increased the ranks of the "more hawkish."

He said he thought this wouldn't have happened had the administration felt free to loosen secrecy and detail its Viet Nam war plans.

For example, he said, more troops are being sent there—though the number remains secret—and air fire power has been increased three times since the December-January pause in bombings of North Viet Nam.

Soviet Congress Hears Brezhnev

MOSCOW (AP) — Communist Party Leader Leonid I. Brezhnev said yesterday the Soviet Union wants better relations with the United States and Red China. But he set conditions both nations have rejected.

On the home front, Brezhnev told the opening session of the Soviet Communist Party's 23rd Congress that the name of the all-powerful party Presidium has been changed back to Politburo—the name used in Joseph Stalin's time.

On the international front, he had this to say about the Soviet Union's chief antagonists —the United States and China:

—The Soviet Union is ready to develop relations with the United States if the United States abandons its war in Viet Nam.

—The Mowcow - Peking dispute will be overcome eventually if China gives up many present policies. The dispute can be discussed either in Moscow or Peking.

Brezhnev spoke for more than four hours to almost 5,000 delegates representing the party's 12,471,000 members and 1,000 guests from 86 other Communist and Marxist parties in the Kremlin Palace of Congresses.

His remarks on the United States and Viet Nam repeated comments he made last September about better relations with Washington being blocked by the war. The remarks yesterday were milder than previous Soviet criticism of the U. S. role in Viet Nam.

"Our relations with the United States have deteriorated in connection with American aggression in Viet Nam and other aggressive actions by U. S. imperialism," Brezhnev charged. "The responsibility for this rests with ruling quarters of the United States."

Ecuador's Ruling Junta Overthrown

QUITO, ECUADOR (AP)—Bowing to mounting public clamor, the military high command yesterday announced Ecuador's junta is being disbanded and power will be turned over to a civilian as head of a provisional government.

Students who had been demonstrating against the military junta immediately took to the streets of Quito and Guayaquil crying "the junta has fallen." Some students in their exhuberance tried to enter the national palace but military guards slammed the gates.

All stuents taken into custody during demonstrations against the junta were freed by military officials. Originally, about 600 students and professors had been arrested in an army raid but several hundred had been rleased. Central University, closed by the junta, reopened.

The junta, Rear Adm. Ramon Castro Jijon, Gen. Marcos Gandara and Gen. Luis Cabrera Sevilla, had indicated through a spokesman earlier, however, that it was ready to step aside if a civilian could be agreed upon.

At least seven persons had been killed in student demonstrations against the junta, in power since 1963

Labor Win Seems Certain

LONDON (AP) — Britain's three dueling political parties pledged yesterday to lead the nation into Europe's Common Market, but a Labor government leader said: "I don't want to lick De Gaulle's boots."

The issue of British entry built up as the major international topic of the three-week election campaign ending Thursday with a national ballot.

Two days before the vote Prime Minister Harold Wilson's Laborites were made easy frontrunners by pollsters, pundits and most politicians outside Edward Heath's challenging Conservative party. Bookmakers drastically shortened the price on a Labor win from 12-1 on to 20-1 on, meaning gamblers must put down $20 to win $1.

Daylight Savings Time Bill Passed By Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate passed yesterday a compromise version of legislation to set up a uniform system for dealing with Daylight Saving Time in the United States.

The Senate sent the measure to the House shortly after Senate-House conferees agreed to drop a Senate amendment which was the only item in dispute.

The House is expected to clear the measure to President Johnson today. In its final form, it would:

—For this year, provide that any area of the country wishing to use Daylight Saving must operate on it from the last Sunday in April, April 24, to the last Sunday in October, Oct. 30.

—Starting in 1967, put the entire country on Daylight Saving Time for the same six-month period except that a state legislature could decide to retain standard time.

Mural Finals Held Tonight

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

ATO I and Kappa Alpha Blue will meet at 8 p.m. tonight for the fraternity division intramural basketball championship. The residence hall title game will be played at 7 between the Graham Bells and Mangum Mugs.

ATO I squeaked by DKE Blue Monday night, 41-39. Johnson and Tennille had 10 points each and Estes added 9 for ATO. John Edgerton had 15 and Hap Stewart 12 for the DKE's. ATO took a 24-19 halftime lead and held on for the victory. The game was won at the foul line, where ATO sank 19 of 30 and DKE hit 7 of 11. The DKE's outscored ATO from the floor, 16-11.

Cliff Butler and Billy Travis scored 14 points each to lead KA over Phi Delt Blue, 51-40. Craig Allison chipped in with 10 more points. Tom Parrish had 18 and Ed Williams 10 for the losing Phi Delts. KA took a 26-23 halftime lead and pulled away in the second half to win. KA also had a big advantage at the foul line, hitting 19 to Phi Delt's 10.

The Graham Bells gained the finals of the residence hall tournament with a 43-27 win over the BVP 76'ers. Lee Clower hit 22 points and Steve Balcolm 15 to provide 37 of Graham's 43 points. BVP was stymied by the Graham defense and hit only eight field goals. Vance Furr led with nine points. Graham had gained the semifinals when they protested a loss to the Connor Animals and it was upheld.

The Mangum Mugs got into the finals by the protest route. They were beaten by Ehringhaus B-2, 47-42, but protested and were awarded the victory. Earlier in the tournament they lost to Teague, protested that game, and won it also. Both protests were valid ones because each of their opponents used an ineligible player.

Also on Monday, the Fellowship of Christian Athletes gained the semifinals of the graduate tournament with a 68-44 win over the Navy Dolphins. Gibbs led the way with 22 points, while Bouton had 14, Sutton 12 and Edwards 10. Keber had 12, Bellman 11 and Boal 10 for Navy. FCA led at the half, 33-18, and outscored Navy in the second half, 35-26.

Law III Blue moved into the quarterfinals against Law IV with a 38-28 victory over the Med Mooses.

Monday softball scores: Manly Riverrats 7, Ruffin Roadrunners 6; Craige C Clowns 11, Craige C Spazos 8; Craige C Killers 11, Craige B Wetbacks 7; Stacy Studs 26, Everett Hagor 3; Lewis White 18, Graham Crackers 9; Aycock Aardvarks 5, Stacy Lizards 1.

First Day Smooth For 'Ace' Parker

By BOB QUINCY

Ace Parker's first day as a North Carolina coach went smoothly. He dressed in the proper gear, met the football squad and observed a rugged scrimmage.

"They hit awfully hard," said Ace, keeping his remarks general. He will get to meet the players individually over the next few weeks. Everyone was friendly and eager to meet Parker personally. Especially Morris Mason.

Mason is the equipment custodian at Kenan Fieldhouse. He owns a phenomenal memory and he spotted Parker right off.

"I'll tell you one thing," said Morris to the ex-Duke star. "I never figured I'd be shaking the hand of a fellow that plowed up Kenan Stadium like you used to do."

Morris had particular reference to the 1936 season. Ace took a Carolina kick-off in the second half and sailed 105 yards for a touchdown, one of many in a 27-7 Blue Devil victory.

Ace will be looking at the Tar Heel squad objectively. He is the first outsidr to be hired since 1961, when Vito Ragazzo, the man he replaced, suited up. Two other assistants were added, but both George Boutselis and Chris Carpenter were Carolina men familiar with the system.

"I'll make an observation," said Ace as he strolled into Kenan Stadium. "This blue I'm wearing certainly has faded." The Duke royal blue has now become Carolina blue.

There are some things which should be cleared up on Parker's new citiznship papers. He is at Carolina for one chief factor: he is regarged by most football critics as an excellent coach. The Tar Heels were in the market and Ace fitted the job qualifications.

Ace didn't come to coach baseball or to be associated with the baseball program. He didn't come to make a special issue of the Duke game next November.

Some say it doesn't seem right that Duke's all-time athletic whiz should switch loyalties. Ace never will do that. He has a deep love for his alma mater. But he is a business man and football is his business.

How will Ace Parker fit the Carolina football scheme? He will lean toward the offensive backfield, according to present structure. This is what Ace does best. It is one reason why Duke backs have long been consistent and able.

Joe Mark owns the title of heading Carolina's offense and he will continue in such a capacity. Bob Thalman is his counterpart on defense. Hickey said he will visit all stations during the season, but that he, Mark and Ace will deal chiefly in offensive movement.

One of the first men to congratulate Ace on his new setup was Bill Cox, sports editor emeritus for the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. He long has championed Parker — and Bill is a Carolina man. Said Cox: "I gave him his nickname, 'Ace.' I love the guy. He'd make anyone a good man. I congratulate the Tar Heels on a fine addition."

UNC Raps Yale, 15-6; Colby Is Here Today

TAR HEEL center fielder Charlie Carr rounds first base after one of his two singles in yesterday's big win over touring Yale. Carr, a sophomore from Virginia Beach, Va., who is also a starting football end, had two runs-batted-in and scored three times. — DTH Photo by Jerry Lambert

By BILL ROLLINS
Assistant Sports Editor

North Carolina raked a pair of Yale pitchers over the coals on Emerson Field yesterday, pounding out 14 hits and taking advantage of shoddy Bulldog fielding to belt the Bulldogs 15-6.

The Tar Heels, forced to score big to overcome a considerably slack performance in the field themselves, built up an 8-4 lead in the first five innings and then poured across seven more in the sixth to put their lead out of reach. The UNC record now is 2-3.

After picking up all their runs and hits off Yale starter and loser Joe Wolcin and reliever Don Koch, the Tar Heels were retired in order over the final two frames by Eli lefty Jim Nowak. But it was too late.

Winning pitcher Mike Flannagan (1-0) held Yale at bay while UNC built a 6-0 lead.

Carolina scored its first run in the second when Charlie Carr singled, went to third on Bob Hume's double, and scored as John Shaw hit into a double play.

Right fielder Bob Bonczek, who powered a two-run home run in the big UNC sixth, drove across two others with a single in the third, as Carolina scored five more runs. Bob Hume and Butch Watts, who had three hits each for the day, also had RBI singles in the rally, and Shaw plated another with a slicing triple to left.

Yale scored two unearned runs in the fourth. With a runner at first, shortstop Don Terry drilled a single to right Bonczek's throw to third had the runner beat, but the ball got through L. E. Sawyer. Pitcher Flannagan, backing up the play, then threw wildly to the plate, as Terry completed the circuit.

Yale gave the two unearned runs back in the home half of the fifth, and then two more Heel errors in the top of the sixth returned the compliment, to make it 8-4, UNC's lead.

Then came the big sixth.

Butch Watts opened with a soft liner to right, which Yale man Jack Walsh dropped for a one-base boot.

Then Danny Talbott, who continued his .500-plus hitting (9-17) with another pair yesterday, slugged a drive between the fielders in left-center which bounced through an open gate. Talbott circled the bases with Watts ahead of him, but was sent back to second—and Watts to third—when umpires ruled a ground-rule double.

Charlie Carr promptly singled to center to score the two runs, and a few minutes later, Bonczek clubbed his homer through left-center to the hedgewall in left.

Another pair of Yale errors put Sawyer and new pitcher Buddy Cahoon on base, and a looping single down the right field line by John Baylin (hitting for Bolick) scored both. Baylin went to second on the hit and scored when Watts singled to center to complete the inning.

The Tar Heels play Colby this afternoon at 3 on Emerson Field.

Golfers Rout M.I.T.

The UNC golf team, led by Dick Van Leuvan and Skip Jones, took an easy 20-1 win over MIT at Finley Golf Course Monday afternoon.

Cold weather and gusty winds took their tolls as scores scored into the mid 80's.

Van Leuvan and Jones were the only ones to come close to par as each of them shot 74 to take medal honors for the day.

Two interesting scores for Carolina were John Baldwin's 77 and Steve Robbins's 82. Steve's hand is still bothering him and he said "It still hurts on certain shots, but I hope to have it back in top shape with some more practice. I should be back to top form by the end of the week."

Everybody had their own little excuse for why their scores were higher than they should have been, but Baldwin came up with the prize of the day. He said, "I had a terrible caddy on the front nine and shot a 43. Really it was all his fault." The caddy of course denied the accusation.

Noted Southern Historian To Speak At Symposium

By ANNE TILGHMAN
Special to the DTH

C. Vann Woodward, a speaker at the 1966 Carolina Symposium, can easily be recognized as the spokesman and interpretor of the old and new South. As the "dean" of Southern historians, he conveys the burdens of the South to the rest of the nation. Woodward is unique in his feeling that these burdens, such as defeat, poverty and the unstable race relations of the past are useful experiences in dealing with the burdens of today.

The Strange Career of Jim Crow, his most significant book, is referred to as the "bible" of the Negro revolution. In it he supports the theory that segregation was not a natural result of the Civil War. He feels it was an economic and political accident of the 1890's.

Woodward was born on November 13, 1908 in Vanndale, Ark. and was raised as a planter. He attended Emory University, receiving his degree in 1930. After earning an M.A. from Columbia in 1932, he continued his education at the University of North Carolina where he received his Ph.D. in 1937. He is well remembered as a student who spent most of his time in the Southern Historical Library doing research. While he was here he wrote Tom Watson: An Agrarian Rebel.

He received an M. A. degree from Oxford University, as well as a law degree from the University of North Carolina.

His teaching experiences include positions at the Georgia School of Technology, University of Florida, University of Virginia, Johns Hopkins, Harvard, University of London, Oxford University. He is now a professor at Yale University.

Woodward has received numerous awards in his field, cluding the National Institute of Arts and Sciences Literary Award in 1954. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. At this time he is President of the Southern Historical Association.

BRIGHT GREEN budding leaves of the Tulip Poplar are beginning to pop out around campus. The first of the trees to bloom, the poplar seem to know when it's time for them to poke their leaves out. It is fitting that one of the first trees to bloom is the Davie Poplar, the tree under which, it is said the University of North Carolina had its beginnings.

They 'Were Alive'

Saucers 'Are With Us'

BOISE, IDAHO (AP) — Kenneth D. Arnold, who ushered America into the age of the flying saucer 19 years ago, said today he still is confident the things are real — and he thinks they may even be alive.

Commenting on new sightings of mysterious lighted objects over Michigan, California, Wisconsin and Nevada, Arnold declared in an interview:

"I think these people are reporting exactly what they saw. Let's face it, there are a great many things in the world we don't understand. Calling these things swamp gases is completely idotic."

Arnold, a Boise business man, made his saucer sighting on June 24, 1947, while flying his light plane near Mt. Rainier, Wash.

He said he spotted nine objects swerving in and out of peaks and canyons "like geese in a diagonal chain - like line."

Arnold estimated the length of the line as at least five miles and described the objects as "saucer -like."

And so the name flying saucer was born.

In the years since, there have been reports of flying saucer sightings from all around the world, rising to a peak of 1,501 in the United States alone in 1952.

Nervous people feared the earth was being scouted by beings from outer space. Skeptics suggested that military designers were trying out exotic new aircraft.

The U. S. Air Force set up "Project Blue Book," with headquarters at Dayton, Ohio to analyze the sighting reports. So far it has dealt with just over 10,000. Prosaic explanations were found for all but a handful.

No evidence was forthcoming that any of the objects seen came from anywhere but the earth itself.

A project investigator concluded last week that new sightings in the Ann Arbor, Mich., area were caused by ignited swamp gas, produced by vegetation rotting in wet ground.

Arnold said there could be no such explanation for the things he saw in 1947 and four other sightings he made from airplanes during the next five years.

"I came within a half a mile or two of them in 1952," he said. "I felt they were aware of me. I had the feeling these were alive, not machines. It seemed to me they had the ability to change density.

These things are with us whether we like it or not."

The Air Force investigators, however, have attributed virtually all sightings to high flying balloons or conventional aircraft, mirages, searchlights glinting off cloud layers or such bright heavenly bodies as Venus and Jupiter.

Election Board Chairman Arthur Hays commented, "I'm happy it's over.

"I want to commend the members of the elections board, residence hall presidents and fraternities that helped us out in the elections."

He said the final tabulations have not been made of the vote in Ehringhaus but the votes will be recounted when representatives of both political parties are present. He said the recount will probably be made this afternoon.

Hays said there were other vote totals in last Tuesday's election that will probably be recounted where there was only a small difference in the vote total.

Hays said there was only a small difficulty in the election yesterday. "I over-slept," he said.

Lifeguard At Walden Pond... First Wife Became A Nun?

By BILL TOMFORD
Special to the DTH

"I was once a life guard at Walden Pond, and my first wife became a nun. I collaborated with Sigmund Freud on the invention of Vienna Sausage, and I wore the yellow beret proudly through Viet Nam. I have a wooden lunchbox with poems written on it."

These were the extracurricular activities one applicant listed in applying to the Intercollegiate Seminar. Applications have been received from over 30 different schools, but none has been able to list activities like these.

The Seminar was originated with the 1960 Symposium to give the opportunity of hearing Symposium speakers to students at schools throughout the country. Admission is by application only, and this year 40 students will be chosen from a field of over 60 applicants.

Chairman of this year's Seminar is Bill Tomford. Secretary is Liz Nieuwenhuis. Committee members include Travis Abbott, Beauchamp Carr, David Crockett, Louise Fuller, Max Jones and Chris Land.

The seminar is an integral part of the Symposium. It gives to selected students an opportunity to meet speakers personally and exchange ideas with them in small, informal discussions, thereby enabling the participants to explore the topic in depth.

Three seminars are planned on consecutive mornings (April 18, 19, 20) during the week of the Symposium. Students will spend the morning examining the previous night's program in a closed seminar featuring informal discussion and debate with the main speaker of the previous night.

The seminars are moderated by UNC faculty members. During the afternoons and evenings, the participants will attend panels and the featured Symposium lecturer of the day.

Students participating this year are from schools such as Harvard, Columbia, Pennsylvania, Bucknell, Illinois, Sewanee, Agnes Scott, Florida, Virginia, Hollins, Goucher and a number of instate scools including UNC-G, UNC-C, UNC-R, Lenoir Rhyne and Belmont Abbey.

Over 100 schools were contacted in the search for participants. Over 200 professors were written requesting recommendations of students who would be qualified and interested in the seminar. School newspapers at approximately 40 schools were sent announcements of the seminar openings. The response this year was better than it has ever been.

Ivy Planted Along Fence

The UNC Buildings and Grounds Department planted ivy along the cyclone fence surrounding the intramural field next to Carmichael Auditorium on Monday morning.

It is expected to take six years for the ivy to cover the fence. The decision to plant ivy was made after the Department of Athletics was besieged by protests over the starkness of the fence.

No Majority Seen In SL

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Th Student Legislature split down the middle this spring with both the University Party and the Student Party placing 25 legislators in office.

There were no independent candidates elected.

According to Arthur Hays, Chairman of the Elections Board, it was the final recount of M. D X (Ehringhaus) which divided the SL evenly.

After more than three recounts it was decided yesterday that winners in Ehringhaus were Ben White (SP), Larry Richter (UP), and Neel Dunivant (UP).

SP WINNER

Student Party members seated in the legislature were:

UP WINNERS

University Party members elected were:

Roberts Crowder, Bill Gordon, Dave Crockett, David Keil, Rick Miller, Ed Wilson, Hank Hankins, Steve Salmony, Randy Worth, Bruce Jolly, Art Robinson, Tim McKeithan, Tommy Cannon, George Isherwood, Noel Dunivant, Larry Richter, Charlie Mercer, Chase Saunders, Bob Sheppard, Marian Johnson, Holly Williams, Birch Lipford, Julie Jones, Linda Bernasek and Pam Nielson.

Hays said yesterday that all counts are final, with the possible exception of Women's District I. There is a difference of only three votes between the lowest scoring winner and the highest scoring loser, he said.

FINAL TALLIES

Tuesday's run - off vote gave the student body presidency to SP candidate Bob Powell. He defeated Teddy O'Toole, UP, candidate in a vote of 2,401 to 1,993.

Run-offs were also held in Morrison Residence Hall and in the BVP, Old East, Old West, Carr district. SP candidate Joe Chandler had protested the election there since a UP candidate, Bruce Jolly, had been listed as an SP member.

Jolly was elected in the run-off. In Morrison a run - off was held because it was learned on election day that one candidate had withdrawn his name earlier.

In Old East there was a first in the residence hall vice presidential race. Write - in candidate Noel Free tied during the first election last week with the candidate on the ballot Bill Wick.

A run-off was held Tuesday and they tied again, each receiving 36 votes. Another run - off will have to be held there.

Are You Farkling Me?

Some guys were sitting around in Peabody Hall Tuesday night in the office of a psychology professor listening to the Chuvalo-Clay fight.

The professor was wearing a sweatshirt that said, "2% Olympic Farkling Team."

One of the guys asked the prof what a "Farkling Team" was.

"Well, I'm not real sure," he said. "Three years after I joined I found out I was the only member. But it has something to do with picking berries. The 2% stands for the alcoholic content."

"But the important question," the prof said, "is after farkling do you say "thank you" or "excuse me"?

WE DECIDED TO look farkling up in Webster's. We didn't find the word farkling. But we did find that the prof wasn't giving us any berries.

Webster's New International Dictionary, on page 919, has a farkleberry. It is a shrub or small tree (Batodendron arboreum), family Vacciniaceae, of the southeastern United States.

The origin of which is uncertain. How would you like to catch that on a Trivia question?

Join Or Die

Somebody needs to look into a possible monopoly situation.

Bob Spearman, now in England on a Rhodes Scholarship, was president of the Student Body last year. He was also a member of Chi Psi Fraternity .

Paul Dickson this year's Student Body president is a member of Chi Psi.

Bob Powell student body president-elect is a Chi Psi .

Fred Thomas editor-elect of The Daily Tar Heel is a member of Chi Psi.

Fred Seely, co-editor of The Daily Tar Heel last year, was a Chi Psi here.

Bob Wilson, orientation chairman and presidential assistant, is a Chi Psi.

The list could be extended much longer. It could include cheerleaders, etc., etc.,

LOOK FELLOWS, why don't you move the Lodge down here to GM and stop Chi Psi-in' us?

And In True Love

"Hi. Yeah, I'm fine and you."

"Beach, what beach."

"Oh. That's in Florida isn't it?"

"No. I'm afraid not. I have something else in mind."

"Well I thought I'd stay here over the break and catch up on my studying. But the real reason is I hear that Commi might come here during that time and I really want to hear him."

"Yes, that's right. I believe in the Easter Rabbit, Santa Claus, Good Fairies and Carolina athletic teams, too."

Ruling On Legality Of Dickson's Order Planned For Today

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The Constitutional Council will meet today at 3 p.m. in 311 Peabody Hall to rule on the appeal which has been made challenging an executive order by Student Body President Paul Dickson.

The executive order prohibits fraternities and sororities with discriminatory clauses in their constitutions from receiving Student Government funds for the purchase of televisions.

The appeal concerns whether or not the President of the Student Body has power, beyound that of a veto of a legislative bill, which grants him the authority to unilaterally block the execution or alter the provisions of any legislative enactments.

The case rests on an article of the UNC Student Constitution which states, "The President of the Student Body shall have powers to enforce and administer laws enacted by the Student Legislature."

Steve Salmony and Hugh Blackwell in appealing to the Constitutional Council said, "The president has neither the power nor the authority to choose which laws he will enforce nor may he establish conditions under which he will enforce particular laws if such conditions conflict with existing legislation or with the provisions of the Student Constitution.

"Finally, the President may not, through executive action, presume to act for the Constitutional Council by interpreting the Constitution with regard to legislative enactments."

The Student Legislature on March 24 disregarded Dickson's executive order of March 17 and ordered the immediate implementation of the television act.

After the television bill was passed March 3, the Legislature amended its by-laws and the constitutions reviewed by the legislature's Rules Committee.

Dickson's executive order attached the following provision to the original television act:

1. Any organization wishing to purchase a television through Student Government should submit a statement of its willingness to submit its by-laws upon request to the Student Body Treasurer and the Director of the Student Activities Fund office for reviewal.

2. Any organization with a "discriminatory clause in its by-laws or constitution should not be eligible for Student Government funds.

A representative of the Student Activities Fund office said yesterday that no fraternities have made application for a television since Dickson made his executive order.

Granite Memorial Will Honor Wolfe

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Senior Class President John Harmon and Vice President Armistead Maupin said yesterday the proposed gift to the University from the Class of '66 is a memorial to Thomas Wolfe. The memorial would be a large granite medallion to be inlaid in the circular brick area in Polk Place.

Before installing such a memorial, plans must be approved by the Buildings and Grounds Committee. Maupin said the plan was submitted last week to Dr. Stoudemire and his committee and they are now considering the proposal.

The decision is pending submission of the design which is being made by the Art Department. It will be submitted shortly after Spring vacation.

"We have been looking into the possibility of such a plan all year," said Harmon. "There is a serious need for a memorial to UNC's most celebrated alumnus. Short of the Thomas Wolfe collection in Wilson Library, there is no tangible evidence that Wolfe was ever a student here.

"We feel the proposed plan would fill this memorial need and would not destroy the present topography of Polk Place."

The circular granite slab would be flush with the walk. It would read, "In Memory of Thomas Wolfe — Class of 1920."

Around the rim of the stone in circular fashion would be one of two quotes from Wolfe — "A stone, a leaf, an unfound door, and the lost Lane-End into Heaven," . . . "O lest, and by the wind grieved, ghosts came back again."

On the stone, in addition to the inscription, would be some sort of relief such as an angel, or a stone, leaf and a door. Made of Mount Airy Granite, the memorial would possibly be 4-5 feet in diameter.

Harmon said the Buildings and Grounds Committee "has been most co-operative in considering the plan thus far. We hope we can arrive at a design that will be satisfactory to all. If approved, we would like to have the memorial installed by graduation, if at all possible."

Maupin pointed out that there is enough money in the class treasury to pay for the stone as well as the annual senior festivities.

"The Senior Class will be handling concessions at Jubilee and did quite well on the Homecoming Mum sale. Also, we inherited some money from last year's Junior Class."

The year 1966 marks the 50th anniversary of Wolfe's arrival at UNC. The two calss officers agreed that "it would be fitting for our class to undertake this project. After 50 years we think it's time to show that Thomas Wolfe can come home again."

Sitterson Chooses Three New Deans

Three new University deans were named today by Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson following approval by the University board of trustees.

The three new deans are Dr. Carl Wilson Anderson, School of Social Work; Dr. Norton Lewis Beach, School of Education and Dr. James W. Bawden, School of Dentistry.

There are now only three dean's positions which are not filled on what seems to be a permanent basis. Dr. Frank M. Duffy is the acting dean of the School of Arts and Sciences and Dr. Earle Wallace is the acting dean of the Graduate School. Miss Margaret Kalp has been the acting dean of the School of Library Science for the past several years.

The appointments of Anderson and Beach become effective June 1 while Bawden will become dean on July 1.

In making the announcement, Sitterson underscored the importance of strong leadership at this particular period in the University's history.

He emphasized the "substantial progress being made in securing necessary administrative leadership to enable the university to meet the educational challenges of the next decade.

Anderson is presently commissioner of the Office of Children and Youth, Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare, Harrisburg, Pa.

Notable among his accomplishments is his revision and modernization of the public child welfare laws of Pennsylvania.

Beach who will become dean of the UNC School of Education is currently a professor of education at Columbia University. He holds two degrees from Boston University and the Ed.D. from Columbia.

Bawden, a member of the dental faculty here since 1961, will become the second dean of the school. He is currently a professor of children's dentistry, assistant dean and coordinator of dental research here.

Freshmen Hurt On Motorbike

Two freshmen from Winston-Salem were injured last night when their motorbike collided with the car of Jesse Murphy near Avery Dorm.

Murphy, a junior from Leaksville, has been charged with driving on the wrong side of the road, according to Police Chief William D. Blake.

The accident occurred about 7:20 p.m. between Avery Dorm and the entrance to the Ramshead Parking Lot.

Mark Morgan, the operator of the motorbike, suffered minor cuts and bruises. The second passenger, Allen Moser, was taken to the emergency room of Memorial Hospital and X-rayed for a leg injury. Both students live in Morrison Dorm.

Murphy was unhurt.

An ambulance was called by several DTH staffers who arrived at the scene of the accident minutes after it occurred.

Travel In Europe For $5 A Day?

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer
Second In A Series

One of the more difficult parts of traveling to Europe is getting out of your own back-yard. It's easy to say "someday I'll go," and leave the details to be arranged sometime in the hazy future. Then one day you do make the decision and announce it proudly to your family and friends.

After everyone has gotten a good chuckle you let them know you are serious, and then you head for the doctor's office.

Doctor's office? Well, the kindly gentleman in white will tell you what shots you'll need before leaving the country. If you are only going to be in Western Europe, a smallpox and typhoid shot will probably suffice.

Take the attractive yellow vaccination card he will give you to the local health department to be stamped. After this, hang on to this card as if it were your ticket or passport. It's just as important. In fact, keep them all together as I did, so when you lose one, you lose all.

You get passport information and forms at the Post Office or the courthouse. Before going to fill out the appropriate forms, have your passport photograph taken. This, along with your birth certificate, is necessary before your passport forms can be sent.

My plans for going to Europe were rather spur-of-the-moment. I was able to receive my passport in five days only because of a high contact in the State Department (My neighbor's cousin's brother-in-law is the janitor there). To be on the safe side, you best apply four weeks ahead of departure time.

Your next move is to visit your local travel agency to secure information on the countries you will be visiting. Get a currency book, and information on the weather in the countries you'll be in.

Pack lightly! Take clothes suitable to the weather. Yours truly did not do this and got a cold the first week (I didn't know the French word for nose-drops either) and 20-inch biceps from lugging two, not one, but two heavy suitcases around.

The bags may not feel heavy on the trip from your room to the car, or when Uncle Harvey is carrying them, but you will be the one carrying them in the Metro (Paris subway) to save taxi fare in reaching the train station, or up those seven flights of stairs in the hotel. This also is the weary voice of experience speaking.

Now, let's say you have arrived safely. If you traveled by ship you are now in Southampton or Le Havre probably waiting for a train to London or Paris. The ship arranges such "boat-trains" for you.

Yes, here you are in Europe. Hope you remembered to make reservations for a place to stay before you left home or else you may end up sitting on your suitcase in Gare St. Lazarre in Paris for an hour calling hotels (The operators here speak French incidentally. Somehow I had expected them to speak English since I was in town.)

If you didn't make reservations you can still manage. My first night I got a lovely little room with a bathtub in it, and a bed. That's all. I found out this was the "Bain" or bath for the whole hotel. Luckily no one felt dirty that night.

Europe On Five Dollars A Day is the book to use in finding a place. The book gives addresses, telephone numbers, descriptions and rates of hotels and restaurants all over Europe.

Let's Go To Europe is written especially for students by students. It suggests places in line with student budgets, as well as places where young people hang out, uh, frequent.

At the airport in London, a housing bureau will aid you in finding a place. In a neat little building across the street from the train station in Am-

Hot Spot On Campus

The pressure is on in South Building.

Particularly for Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson.

Once again he must rule on whether or not Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson may speak on campus. There is a chance that his first refusal could be interpreted to have been made on the grounds of opposition to the dates requested, rather than the speakers themselves. A decision on the new invitation should carry no such ambiguity.

Sitterson's position is especially precarious because of that little prefix to his title — "Acting." He would like to see it shortened to "Chancellor," and his handling of this problem will undoubtedly have a great bearing on his chances of getting the job permanently.

For that reason, he is proceeding with extreme caution — perhaps too extreme.

An extended delay in reaching his verdict could easily have the same effect as an immediate denial of the requests.

What is wrong with the Honor System?

Witness it in action.

A defendant in a Men's Honor Council trial Tuesday night asked for an open trial. Four trials were scheduled — his was to be third, starting at 9:30.

The first trial was handled without difficulty.

Two of the Council members had to leave then, however, (to be tapped into the Order of the Grail) and a quorum had to be recruited from Council members attending the Roger Miller show in Carmichael Auditoirum.

A Daily Tar Heel reporter was present at 9:15 to cover the open trial. He and about a dozen people—the defendant, witnesses and investigators — waited in the hall outside the Council room while the delayed second case was tried.

And they stood there waiting until 12:45 a.m., when they were finally told that the third defendant would not be tried that night after all.

"We can't start a case after midnight. It'll have to be tried after the holidays," a Council member said.

He neglected the fact that those waiting had been reassured — even after midnight — that the case would be heard that night.

At least one of the witnesses kept waiting all night had a quiz the next day. This might not be tragic, but it emphasizes the inconvenience and frustrations caused by the trial system.

Despite their attempts at professionalization, the Honor Councils could yet use some lessons in courtesy.

Drugs Are Dangerous

Dr. Ed Hedgpeth, director of the UNC Health Service, has asked the DTH to print the following letter:

In the issue of The Daily Tar Heel for March 29, 1966, a front page article entitled, "Notice For Physical Prompts Suicide Try," I notice the following statement: "Beaumont said a nurse in the emergency room told him that even if the boy took all the tablets in both bottles it would not have killed him. The number of tablets in a small bottle of the sleeping pills is 20."

This kind of statement strikes me as representing very careless conversation and thoughtless reporting. Lest someone reading this article gain the impression that the indiscriminate use of drugs may have no harmful effects, I hasten to state, and state emphatically, that the indiscriminate use of drugs on the part of anyone is a very dangerous procedure to follow and may in a given individual be life-threatening. Drugs should be used only upon the recommendation of one who thoroughly understands their actions, dosages and indications.

Johnson's Electoral Plan Doesn't Really Do Much

Almost since the day it was written into the Constitution, the electoral college has been the subject of much abuse. Nobody really seems to like it; but, except for the change wrought by the 12th Amendment in 1804, nobody has been able to do anything about it.

The authors of the Constitution, unwilling to trust the people with the election of the President, devised the electoral college as a sort of middle-man in the procedure. Thus as originally conceived, the electors would actually have a free choice in casting their votes. The growth of political parties, however, soon made this choice a mere formality.

Electors were pledged to support the nominee of their party. They generally did as they were supposed to; and in 1800, when electors simply voted for two men, strict party voting resulted in a deadlock between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr. Following this near-fiasco, the one and only reform in the electoral college was made: separate ballots were required for president and vice president.

In the 12 years since the 12th Amendment was ratified, the system of electing the president has come under almost continual fire. Basically, there have been three major criticisms: a candidate can get a majority of the popular vote and still lose; the process is undemocratic, and the people should be able to vote directly for the president; a candidate who gets 49 per cent of the votes in a state gets none of the electoral vote. In 1964, another criticism was voiced when Alabama Democrats voted to have unpledged electors, rather than electors pledged to vote for President Johnson. The people of Alabama, it was charged, were denied the right to vote for the President.

Johnson has now joined the ranks of the opposition; and, in keeping with his character, he proposes to do something about it. He has offered a constitutional amendment which would keep the electoral college, but do away with the electors. Each state's entire electoral vote would go to the candidate with the highest popular vote

Johnson's plan solves only part of one of the three problems mentioned earlier The people will, in effect, be able to vote directly for President. However, the election would still be undemocratic since votes in different states would have different weights. The Johnson scheme obviously does nothing to remove the other two objections: a candidate can still win the popular election and lose the Presidency, and a candidate with 49 per cent of a state's vote still gets nothing.

Since Johnson's proposed changes really don't get at the heart of the electoral inequities, it is hard to escape the conclusion that politics is behind them. The major effect of such changes would be to make unpledged elector movements difficult, if not impossible. Groups dissatisfied with both major candidates would have to put up a third candidate as an alternative, rather than simply running a slate of unpledged electors.

It will be much easier for the two major parties to attack a third candidate, such as Gov. George Wallace, than to attack the idea of unpledged, or independent, electors It will be harder for the dissidents to convince the people to vote for someone than it would be to convince them to vote against both candidates by voting for independent electors.

There are certainly many things wrong with the present electoral system. It can be unfair, and it has resulted in some strange elections. Any changes, however, should correct the evils and produced a better system. The President's proposed changes are not worth the trouble.

Holy Galoshes! Why Was Batman 'In'?

Now that the "Bat-craze" has subsided, perhaps an analysis of its origin is in order. "Batman" is a unique combination of comic fiction, science fiction and fiction-fiction. This combination yields a grammar school adventure series as childish as "Superman" and as technologically exciting as "Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea." Before the drama, millions of Americans sat — from 8 to 80, from idiots to intellectuals and from all socio-economic strata.

No TV show this winter attracted so much attention as "Batman." It was the time when every dorm television room was full and alive with inmates in this stupid captivity. Within weeks, the idea was popularized. Records, sweatshirts, "pin-ups," caps and pennants proclaimed that "Batman" was the new national hero — in a way not unlike James Bond.

A moratorium on common sense was declared so that such nonsensicals as "leaping lizards" and "holy golashes" could sneak into our already cliched vocabulary. But what was behind this facade? Why did this form of escapism attract so much more broad-based popularity than traditional soap-operas or adventure-fiction programs. More particularly, why did my fellow Carolina Gentlemen become so caught in this craze?

First, "Batman" is a modern man of high technical skill and constant heterosexual intrigue. This is in contrast to traditional heroes whose instruments are archiac and who seldom include women in the tragedy the way "Batman' does.

In one moment, Batman may make love to a woman and when the momentary utility is over, he will dispose of her like a Kleenex tissue. This is consistent with the college-man model as epitomized in "Playboy." The women in "Batman" are not innocent, noble or loyal like Lois Lane in "Superman," but they are intriguing and more important, expendable.

Another consistency between the "Batman" model and the Carolina Gentlemen model is the idea of the technical over the supernatural. Superman would be disregarded by the Carolina Gentlemen. Superman's modes are angelic, his mores are Puritan, and he is technologically archaic. To the contrary, Batman is a genius.

On another level, Batman is a typical "organization man." He embodies the traits that any successful executive might have. He is well organized, resourceful, pragmatic, amoral and insensitive to any social echelon but his own. Those who get in his way must be done way with — without gore and without remorse ("What a way to go-go.")

Without the extra added characteristics i.e. "Bat-cave," "Bat-ray," and "Bat-mobile", there are a lot of "Batmen" on this campus and in this country. They may be described as bright, amoral, apolitical, insensitive, lustfully heterosexual, loyal, handsome and physically fit. So it is no wonder that Carolina Gentlemen were crazed by "Batman." They saw a little of what there is in America. Gotham City could be any American city.

But alas, the craze has subsided. Why did it happen in the first place. Was it because it disturbed the viewers? Was it because spring turned the mind of the Carolina Gentlemen to his own adventures? Was it because a few weeks of this madness was enough? One doubts that any of these was the real reason. It rather seems that the whole thing was so ridiculous as to cover up the disturbing dilemma that a craze for such nonsense indicates.

Letters To The Editor

Critic Criticized

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Mr. Ludwig's review of "The Importance of Being Earnest" was incompetent and irresponsible.

One might find it amusing that he should with a toss of the hand dismiss Oscar Wilde at this late date and excuse him due to his youth and lack of experience. But I question his right to indulge in little cleverneses (and in his own words, "camp") at the expense of those concerned with the production. And to say that the Playmakers should not have at all produced this play is absurd and unconsidered.

A newspaper review should in some way reflect the total effect of the play upon the audience. This review would have one believe that the play was not worth seeing—hardly an accurate appraisal, judging from the generous laughter which actually occurred throughout the evening, and the enthusiastic applause following. It is, of course, a right of the reviewer to disagree with the general audience, but only if we are made aware of the credentials of the reviewer and only if he has stated his criteria. I question the credentials of this critic; his criteria were neither expressed nor implied.

I hope that before Mr. Ludwig undertakes to review another play he will first gain some small understanding of theatre, and most important, some idea of the role of the reviewer, which is to instruct and to inform, not to ridicule.

Save The Trees

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I find the article concerning trees adjacent to the proposed Student Union at Emerson Field amazing. The administration has lost all perspective on trees and it is appalling that the campus planner and the buildings architects have perpetrated or permitted this to happen.

As a graduate architect I find the statement that if the tree ". . . is in a workable place, it could be saved." The statement should be if the tree is in a workable place it will be saved regardless of who died under it. Way back in the dark ages —three or four yeas ago they were teaching architects that buildings should be planned around trees — I never dreamed my education would be obsolete quite so soon.

Granted it may be wonderful to plant a whole group of trees and have them all mature at once — a hundred years from now — when no one even remembers who built the building, but what about the present generation?

For the convenience of the contractors and the architects the UNC campus may be soon divided into two well defined areas — the new buildings with their new saplings and the old buildings set in a grove of trees and for the next twenty years never the twain shall meet. Seems to me I learned something about integrating the old with the new too.

Great Society Goes Too Far

Okay — I'm for the Great Scoeity, but this is ridiculous.

Uncle Sam will foot a $2,550 bill so that 200 Oregon high school students can listen to lectures by columnist Walter Lippmann, United Auto Workers president Walter Reuther and civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King.

It's not that these three men won't be educational — far from this. But the federal government underwriting lectures by them?

I'm a staunch Democrat, yet something within me says that the government paying for these talks is just as bad as financing the students' exposure to Barry Goldwater, Ronald Reagan and Sen. John Tower.

The whole affair has has a nasty smell to it, especially considering Lippmann, Reuther and King's political affiliations.

This is all part of Project Prometheus, a $100,500 farce named after the mythical Greek who brought fire to mankind.

Only $6,000 comes from Southern Oregon College, where the students will room, and the Jackson County intermediate education district. Uncle Sam pays the rest.

The program will feature classes in 28 subjects (including "human manipulation in the 20th century"—whatever that means, besides politicians' pulling strings)—in addition to Shakespearean plays, visits to a music festival and six "cultural" movies So it can't be entirely bad.

Nevertheless, Republican criticism, at least for the moment, seems well justified.

"It would be nice if my boys could get this kind of expense-paid cultural enrichment," said Rep. John Byrnes of Wisconsin, the father of six children.

He suggested that "a private foundation should be paying for this kind of thing.

"It really doesn't make sense to spend taxpayers' funds on such frills while the nation is fighting a war in Viet Nam."

The Great Society can continue despite the war, but it's quite obvious that a lot of states could make much better use of the funds — like North Carolina or, indeed, Mississippi (think what a splash Dr. King could make down there!)

Meanwhile, one can easily discover the Herald Tribune's policy by reading between the lines:

"Judging by the initial reaction on Capitol Hill, Project Prometheus is likely to draw white-hot Republican fire against the Johnson administration."

An obvious understatement.

Hopefully, though, the educational experiences provided the students will sooth Project Prometheus' critics.

But if the students don't come out ahead at least one group will:

Their 14 teachers, who are each to be paid $200 a week.

Campus Visitation Rules

Liberal Policy Spreading

By ALAN BANOV
Special to the DTH

(Ed. note: In the first part of this four - part series on visitation rules, this member of the Honor System Commission describes the rules at Carolina, comparing them with other schools'. Here he continues his study of "parietal" privileges on other campuses.)

Student movements for liberalizing vistation rules are spreading all over the country.

Duke students, who do more than cheer basketball teams, recently persuaded their administration to reform their visitation privileges.

After conducting three successful open house experiments this year, the Men's Student Government Association effected two major innovations to previous "open - open " house regulations:

1. Living groups may hold open houses on any weekend, subject to their discretion and preference.

2. The stipulation requiring the presence of chaperones has been eliminated from open house policy (due to the inconvenience both to sudents and adults in obtaining chaperones). (from the Duke Chronicle)

Previous rules allowed open houses from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday, but doors were to be left open, and the open house registered with the dean.

MORE FREEDOM

Duke's dean asserted, "The responsible way in which the men's living groups have planned these Saturday afternoons leads us to believe that more freedom can now be given to the Host Committees of the residences and to representatives of the IFC, Association of Independent Houses, and Freshman house for the supervision of these events."

Dartmouth, in New Hampshire, where all students seem to do is ski and drink, has had perhaps the most liberal rules studied.

In dormitories 68 hours of visitation are permitteed each week, divided thusly: 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. from Sunday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 12 midnight on Saturday. Fraternities are allowed 93 hours of "parietals" each week, from 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. from Sunday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturday.

There are no liquor regulations or "open door" policies.

The University of Pennsylvanis, another Ivy League school, allows dormitories 29 hours of visitation: from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Fridays, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. on Saturdays, and 11 alm. to 6 p.m. on Sundays.

FRATERNITY HOURS

Fraternities may have women visit the men's rooms from 12 noon to 7 p.m. from Sunday through Thursday, from 12 non to 8p.m. on Friday, and from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Saturdays, for a total of 52 hours.

Harvard allows women visitors in men's dormitory rooms on Monday through Thursday from 4 to 8 p.m. On weekends hours are 12 to 12 on Fridays and Saturdays, and 12 to 8 p.m. on Sundays.

A woman entering men's houses must sign a "parietal book" in the lobbies, indicating her name, her school, her date's name, the time checked in and time checked out. The occasional violations of these rules generally result in expulsion, according to a student there. But the rules are so liberal that no student wants to jeopardize removal of such privileges or has any need to violate them.

At Radcliffe, the women's counterpart of Harvard, women may entertain male guests in their rooms up to 25 hours per week, which are determined by each house and must range etween 12 noon and 10 p.m.

OPEN DOORS

Columbia University's tall Carman Hall is similar in some ways to Carolina's high - rise dormitories: Suites containing two rooms open onto indoor halls. The suite doors are self-locking, so matchbooks, "Fanny Hill," or other obstructions are required to keep them ajar, although men may lock their individual rooms' doors. Rules there are similar to Harvard's.

At Douglass, New Jersey's state women's college, relatives are allowed in girls rooms from 2 to 5 every Sunday afternoon. Girls may take a vote several times a year to determine which weekends they want "open - open - house." This is on a Saturday afternoon, when men are allowed in the rooms from 2 to 5 p.m.

Even schools farther south have more liberal rules than UNC's. At Goucher College, a girls' school outside Baltimore, women's rooms are "inbounds" for men to visit on Sundays from 2 to 5 p.m. Hollins College in Virginia allows men to visit women's rooms during two formal weekends each year, but they must keep the doors open and their feet on the floor.

Students at the University of Virginia have recently proposed new rules to allow female guests to be entertained in students' rooms at certain times and under certain regulations. Their proposals will be discussed in the next part of this four - part series.

Physicists Meeting In Area

Chapel Hill and Durham are bulging with physicists this week attending one of the biggest meetings ever held in the Research Triangle area.

Over 1,800 members of the American Physical Society are jamming into hotels, motels, homes and dorms at both Duke University and the University here for the annual meeting now being held at Duke in co - operation with UNC and the Army Research Office.

Almost 700 scientific papers will be delivered by physicists from Los Angeles to Boston, specializing in high - polymer, solid state and chemical physics.

This meeting was held once before in Durham - Chapel Hill in 1953.

"We asked to bring it here again," said Dr. Eugen Merzbacher, chairman of the UNC physics department and one of the members of the organizing committee for the meeting, "because the last meeting did the Triangle area so much good.

"At the many meetings the society has, North Carolina is more frequently mentioned now as a place of scientific and industrial competence," he said.

The meeting began on Monday and will continue through Thursday with conference, atomic - age "bull sessions" and even a special program for the wives.

Tuesday night there was also a banquet which featured Harry Golden, author of Only In America, as speaker.

With these physicists scattered throughout Durham, Chapel Hill and even Raleigh, one of the biggest obstacles to a smoothly run meeting is transportation. This problem went to Sherwood Githens, an ex-physicist i nthe School of Education at Duke.

"He has organized the equivalent of a Washington, D. C. Transit Bureau," said Dr. Merzbacher, "and with his schedule anyone should be able to find any meeting at any time."

Dr. Githens was a little less excited about his schedule. "I just hope it works" he said.

Besides an intricate bus service, there are several UNC graduate students who are operating a taxi service between Duke and UNC.

Chairman of the meeting committee is Henry A. Fairbank of Duke. Other committee members are Dr. Merzbacher, Dr. Githens, Marvin Silver of UNC and the Army Research office, Horst Meyer of Duke, Robert Lontz of Duke and the Army Research Office, and Lawrence Slifkin of UNC.

Nine papers will be presented by UNC physicists.

Russia Will Not Return To Stalin Or Khrushchev

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union will never return to Stalinism or Khrushchevhevism because the viles of both "have been resolutely thrown away," party leader declared yesterday.

Nikolai G. Yegorychev, head of the Moscow Party Organization, gave the assurances at the second day's session of the Soviet Communist Party's 23rd Congress.

Holding one of the highest positions in the Soviet power complex, Yegorychev obviously was laying down the official Kremlin line.

His mention of Joseph Stalin and Nikita S. Khrushchev could be the beginning of a re-evaluation of the two leaders during the Congress. Communist sources had said this would happen.

"The cult of personality, violations of Leninist norms an the principles of party life, socialist law — all that which hindered our movement forward — have been resolutely thrown away by the party and it will never return to that past," Yegorychev said.

The terms are those which have been used here to label both Stalin and Khrushchev. Yegorychev specifically mentioned "Stalinism" but avoided direct references to Khrushchev.

The appraisal of the two Soviet leaders appeared to be one of the major issues before the Congress, the first to be held since Khrushchev's ouster in October 1964.

Yegorychev was careful to distinguish between Stalin and Khrushchev and the achievements made during their rule. These were credited to the Communist party.

"The party also resolutely rejects any attempts to cross out the heroic history of our people who, under the guidance of the party, for almost a half-century have passed a difficult but glorious way of struggle and victories," Yegorychev said.

"Now we see that something could have been done better, since 50 years have taught us much. But what has been done fills the hearts of the Soviet people with pride and amazes our friends in the entire world."

Trying to distinguish etween the party and the two men who dominated it for 40 years could be a tricky business. Both Stalin and Khrushchev both undoubtedly still have their defenders within the Communist Party.

Leonid I. Brezhnev, Soviet Communist Party Chief, avoided the issue altogehter Tuesday in his long opening speech to the Congress, which is being attended by 6,000 prominent Communists. Laying down the line was delegated to a subordinate, on whom the blame can be put if powerful elements in the country are offended.

U.S. Aid To Viet Nam Nears $5 Billion Figure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Total U. S. economic and military aid to South Viet Nam since 1954 is headed toward $5 billion this summer and may reach $6 billion by mid-1967.

The Agency for International Development reports that by the end of fiscal 1966 on June 30, U.S. economic aid to the Southeastern Asian nation will total more than $3 billion, with another $650 million in nonmilitary aid earmarked for fiscal 1967.

The exact amount of arms aid is not available because of a 1962 Defense Department secrecy edict that is still in effect. But informed sources estimate that the United States spent $1.65 billion on arms for Viet Nam from 1954 through this year. U. S. arms aid for Saigon in the coming year is estimated at some $600 million.

The total also does not include much larger sums spent directly to support the American forces helping South Viet Nam fight the Communists.

France Officially Informs U.S. Of NATO Withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP)— France has officially told the United States it will withdraw its forces from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's integrated military structure by July 1, 1966.

Simultaneously, France denounced the Headquarters agreement affecting the Supreme Headquarters Allied Forces in Europe (SHAPE) and the Central European Command (AFCENT), and requested that the American headquarters and "several" U. S. Army and Air Force installations be transferred out of France by April 1, 1967.

The French notice was delivered to the U. S. embassy in Paris Tuesday night, Robert J. McCloskey, State Department press officers, told a news conference.

McCloskey commented only that the note is being studied carefully and "it may be assumed that there will be a reply."

Other officials restated the long - standing U. S. position that such changes must be discussed with the other 13 members of NATO.

Officials said the French note did not make clear whether the requested transfer affects all American and NATO installations in France or not.

Officials said the French note did not make clear whether the requested transfer affects all American and NATO installations in France or not. Further clarification is needed, they said.

It was noted, however, that NATO's political headquarters in Paris is not mentioned in the French note and is apparently not affected. France wants to remain a member of the Atlantic alliance, but does not want to participate in its present military strcture.

U. S. officials listed these requests in the French note —Termination of assignment of French ground and air-force to the allied command in Germany, effective July 1, 1966. Those represent two French divisions and two air wings.

—Withdrawal on the same day (July 1) of French military personnel assigned to the following integrated NATO commands: SHAPE, AFCENT, AFSOUTH (the Southern European Command), and subsidiary commands.

Incompetency On Bench Investigated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U. S. Judicial Conference is circulating among the nation's federal judges two proposed laws to deal with the problem of incompetent U. S. judges.

Designed as alternate approaches, they would set up new procedures for examining a judge's fitness. If he was found incompetent, a new judge would be appointed to take over his duties.

The proposed laws were framed last month by the conference's committee on court administration. The conference decided at its closed meetings to circulate them on a confidential basis among the federal judges, but withheld approval or disapproval until the conference meets again in September.

The proposals are certain to generate controversy. There now is only one constitutional way to remove a federal judge — through the cumbersome process of impeachment by the House and conviction by the Senate. Otherwise, under the Constitution, federal judges serve for life unless they choose to retire.

There is a belief in some judicial circles that if any change in removal procedures is to be made it will have to come through constitutional amendment rather than through federal law.

Both proposed laws would empower the Chief Justice to appoint a seven - member commission to investigate complaints that a federal judge is unfit.

Britain's Wilson Expects Comfortable Victory Today

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Harold Wilson is seeking a vote of confidence in today's national election. People who should know say he will get it, bolstered by an election - eve report that his government has cut in two the country's deficit in foreign exchange.

At breakfast tables Britons could read that the deficit, the excess of spending abroad over earnings, was brought down from 1964's $2.15 billion to $991 million last year. Wilson has pledged that the country will be paying its way completely by the end of this year.

The treasury report showed that foreign earnings topped spending by $70 million in the last three months of 1965, a period normally helped by seasonal factors. This was more than $280 million better than in the last quarter of 1964.

Wilson himself picked the day for the ballot — the nation's second in 17 months — in the hope of strengthening his frail control of the 630-member House of Commons. A victory would give him a five - year mandate.

In the 630 electoral districts, Labor, Conservative and Liberal contenders made final appeals to their followers to vote.

Wilson made no claim of certain victory but he had the look of a man who knows he's going to win.

"It's up to you," he told 6,000 workers at the gates of a Manchester factory. "All you have to do is get out and vote".

Conservative Leader Edward Heath showed no sign of depression.

"My prediction," he said with a broad smile, "is we shall win".

Draft-Dodge Ring Smashed In New York By Federals

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal government claimed yesterday to have smashed a draft - dodging racket, which flourished in the metropolitan area even as young Americans in uniform died in Viet Nam.

Thirty - eight persons, including several sets of fathers and sons, were named in federal indictments. Most of them were rounded up by FBI raiding parties.

The arrests came on the very day the defense department issued a May draft quota of 34,600 — the highest since January.

The racket involved fake Air Force reserve enlistment papers, which sold for up to $5,000. With these on record with his draft board, an eligible youth was immune to induction.

A chance alteration in the standard reserve enlistment form led to an FBI investigation. Two men accused of operating the scheme were said to have netted $80,0000 in three years.

In Cleveland, meanwhile, four young salesmen and a National Guardsman were accused in an unrelated draft evasion scheme. The Guardsman and one of the salesmen were charged with accepting $500 to $600 to provide the other three men with fake National Guard memberships, which gave them draft deferment.

In the swift daybreak roundup, the FBI arrested 31 persons here. Among them were several fathers accused of bank-rolling the draft deferrals of their sons. All pleaded innocent and were released without bail. No trial date was set.

Seven others were named in indictments unsealed by Federal Judge Leo F. Rayfiel in Brooklyn, but were not in court.

Vietnamese Demonstration Incited By Traffic Accident

DA NANG, VIET NAM (AP) —A traffic incident set off an Anti - American demonstration by 2,000 Vietnamese yesterday at a U. S. Marine billet in this city, keyed up by three weeks of political agitation. Ramifications may involve the White House.

"Down with the Americans" said English - language placards carried by some of the jeering demonstrators.

Others bore Vietnamese slogans interpreted also as derogatory to the United States, which has been criticized here before for its support of Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military government.

The outcry stemmed from a collision of a Marine vehicle, carrying eight leathernecks, and a bus loaded with members of a Vietnamese Drivers' Union who were staging a parade. A Marine security guard told newsmen the only damage to the bus was a bent license plate.

There was some commotion in the street before the Marines drove off and one Vietnamese charged that they had beaten him with rifle butts. This was denied by various witnesses, including a U. S. Army captain.

But a spokesman for the demonstrators said they were pressing the charge and would telegraph a demand to President Johnson for an apology. He said they wanted a reply within 48 hours.

If Johnson's answer is not agreeable, he said, "We will do something." He did not say what.

The focal point of the demonstration was a two - story yellow stucco building on a side street that houses 35 Marines. One Marine stood guard outside throughout.

Clay Has Respect For 'Cement Jaw'

By JACK HAND

TORONTO (AP) — Cassius Clay left town Wednesday with new respect for George Chuvalo's cement jaw and a bruised right hand to remind him of his unexpectedly tough fight with the plodding Canadian heavyweight champion.

"I knew we'd have a rough fight," said Angelo Dundee, manager of the unbeaten world heavyweight champ. "But I thought he would get him out of there in the late rounds. That Chuvalo has a great chin."

Dundee said Clay left in early morning for Chicago after an examination of the swollen middle knuckle of his right hand showed the injury to be only a bruise and nothing serious.

Clay's immediate future was in the hands of his Louisville draft board which had reclassified him 1-A. Ed Jacko, Clay's personal lawyer, said he understood a registrant who has been out of the country had an extended period of time — 30 to 60 days — to appeal his case.

Arthur Grafton, attorney for Clay's sponsoring group in Louisville, said the champ hoped to get in another fight in the next 60 days. Henry Cooper, the British champion; Ernie Terrell, the World Boxing Association champ, and Chuvalo were possibilities for bouts in Toronto. Nothing was definite. The next fight probably will be on home television on a Saturday afternoon.

"We haven't got anything set," Clay said before he left. "Cooper might be a good one. He knocked me down once."

Chuvalo's chin and his blood-and-guts spirit transformed a mismatch into an interesting, if one-sided, spectacle Tuesday night at the Maple Leaf Gardens. Clay must have rained 1,000 punches on the bully boy's head but never wobbled him once.

Some thought it it was a little closer than the lopsided score of the officials, who had Clay the winner 73-65; 74-63, and 73-62 unde the five-point must system. That broke down in rounds of 9-2-4, 12-1-2 and 13-1-1. The AP had it 13-2.

But nobody figures Chuvalo was close to winning, except his own manager, who thought a draw would have been fair. To call Chuvalo a winner would have been like giving the catcher credit for a no-hit ball game by Sandy Koufax. The Canadian charged in and mauled all night but he proved only that he can take it.

A crowd of about 13,900 paid a gross of $165,000 and small turnouts at the closed circuit television outlets plus other ancillary rights may add up to a total take of $350,000. Clay's 50 per cent would be about $175,000 and Chuvalo's 20 per cent $70,000.

Many of Chuvalo's digs to the body landed low but none seemed to hurt Clay. It was a fine testimonial for the foul-proof cup.

"Any time you have a body puncher like Chuvalo," said referee Jackie Silvers, "you're going to have low blows. But they weren't bad."

Carolina Edges Colby Mules 4-3 Walker Saves Tar Heel Victory

By BILL ROLLINS
Assistant Sports Editor

Bob Hume singled across the winning run in the seventh inning, and Danny Walker pitched 3 2-3 perfect innings in relief as Carolina (3-3) came from behind to capture its second straight win, beating Colby 14-3 yesterday on Emerson Field.

The struggle, which saw Carolina fight back from a 3-0 deficit, was tied 3-all with one out in the seventh when Danny Talbott reached second on an infield throwing error.

One out later, Hume picked on a 1-1 pitch from Colby starter and loser Ed Phillips, and bounced it between first and second to score Talbott for the lead run which proved to be the clincher.

The Mules kicked off to a 2-0 lead in the first inning when 6-4, 210-pound catcher Pete Haigis bombed a two-out home run to left off UNC starter Mike McLaughlin.

Back-to-back ground ball errors by Carolina gave Colby its third run in the second inning, and with Phillips pitching one-hit ball through the front four innings, the Tar Heels faced a deficit of no small proportions.

They started on the road back with a run in the fourth without a hit. John Shaw walked and Rodney Thompson reached first on an error by Mule shortstop Sal Manforte. A balk moved the runners to third and second, and right fielder Larry Mills drove in Shaw has he grounded out to second.

Bruce Bolick drilled a double past third leading off the home fifth, and one out later Danny Talbott lined a long single to right-center which scored Bolick. Talbott advanced to second on the throw-in, and scored the tying run as Charlie Carr "clutched" a ground single through the middle.

Right - hander Walker took over for McLaughlin in the sixth with one out and runners at first and second. He retired the side on a pop fly and an infield out and then blew down batters in 1-2-3 fashion in the final three innings to hold Colby while his mates rallied. Walker's record now is 1-0.

The same two teams meet here today at 3.

Golfers Drop Ohio

BY JIM FIELDS

The UNC golf team paced by three sub-par rounds was extended to its full limit Tuesday afternoon before defeating a tough Ohio University team 15-6 at Finley Golf Course.

Brooks Carey was the medalist for the day as he shot a four under par 68. Three other players bettered par for the day. They were John Baldwin with a fine 69, shooting a six under par 30, on the back nine, and Steve Robbins with a 70. Gary Goecke shot a 69 for Ohio to be the fourth player to bust par.

"It was by far their best match of the season," said Coach Ed Kenny after the match. "Everybody played real well, and I was real pleased with Brooks (Garey), John (Baldwin) and Steve (Robbins), especially Brooks. We have been making good improvement the past two weeks but we still have a long way to go before the tournament."

The highlight of the day was that the Tar Heels, as a team, played the back nine in 13 under par and three eagles (A score of two under par for a hole) were scored on 1 .

"I played real good golf, today," said Carey after shooting his 68. "I hit all my clubs good and made some good putts."

Baldwin's 30 on the back nine, including an eagle on the 18th hole, caused a great deal of excitement. "It was the best single nine holes I've ever played," said Baldwin. "I was five down for the first nine holes so I gave it everything I had on the back nine to try and catch up."

John almost did catch up, and only an eagle by his opponent on the last hole to match Baldwin's eagle, saved the match for him.

The Tar Heel linksmen now take a break for Easter. They will play at the Country Club of North Carolina at Pinehurst over Spring Vacation.

Carolina Scores:
Carey 68
Baldwin 69
Robbins 70
Skip Jones 73
David Owen 74
David Robinson 74
Dick Van Leuvan 75

Moore Coaches Frosh Netters

Bill Moore, 26 - year - old graduate of the United States Naval Academy, is coaching the freshman tennis team at Carolina this year. Moore, taking graduate work in the School of Business Administration, has the kind of team that will win big.

"With luck we could go unbeaten," explains Moore, who is from Goldsboro and played No. 1 at Annapolis. "We have good strength down the line and we would like to duplicate last year's record." The Tar Babies of the court won them all in 1965, as did the varsity.

Moore, who served as plebe and assistant varsity coach for two years at Navy, labels Cam Kicklighter of Sarasota, Fla., and Bill Shivar of Newport News, Va., as his two top early season pupils.

Chi Phi Blue struck for 11 runs in the second inning to beat Sigma Nu, B 15-10. Quick and Martin homered for Sigma Nu.

Frat Paper Makes Debut On Campus

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Greek News and Views made its first appearance on campus last week. The small four page paper is concerned with social fraternities.

The publication, edited by John D. Haywood, was financed by the Interfraternity Council and through the sale of ads. This first issue is a "trial balloon" to see if there is sufficient enthusiasm for such a paper.

One of the functions of the publication is to "inform those inside the Greek system as well as those outside the system, about what Greek organizations on this campus are doing."

Secondly, the paper will discuss matters of "general concern to Carolina brotherhoods."

The paper has three main objectives: to encourage members of the fraternities to increase social contact with each other and thereby establish friendly relations; to increase friendly competition between the fraternities with the idea that such competition would lead to more numerous achievements by all social fraternities.

Finally, the paper aims to help the members of Greek organizations "come to realize that they comprise a community bound together by many common interests, and that this realization will result in a closer co-operation between them in protecting and furthering their interests."

The first issue contains an article by Lindsay Freeman, recently elected president of IFC and an article on changes in rush techniques by Sterling Phillips, new IFC Rush Chairman.

In addition the paper contains a story on the founding of the Greek system; the standings of the fraternities on Intramural Activities; Intramural Scoreboard, and a listing of academic averages of the individual fraternities and the number of new pledges.

Members of the IFC are interested in the response to such a publication from people both in and outside the fraternity system.

TWO CAMPUS medical organizations present a check for over $400 collected outside the Varsity Theatre to the North Carolina Heart Fund. Dwight Wait, president of AED; Judy Bartlett, coordinator of the drive for the Student Nurses Association and Pat Dodson, president of the SNA handed the check to Hubert Leonard, chairman of the N. C. Heart Association's State Public Relations Advisory Committee.

New Program Here

College Credit, No Classes

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

What does it take to be among the students at UNC who receive credit for work done without classes or quizzes?

These students are part of the experimental program of independent study being conducted here to let superior students strike out alone and forge their own programs of study.

Dean Frank Duffey of the College of Arts and Sciences, which oversees the work of all upperclassmen except those in the professional schools, said that there are no rigid rules about who may try independent study or as to what sort of program they may undertake.

"Almost anyone whose performance has been consistently superior and who wants to will be offered the opportunity," he said. "We're willing for any student who feels himself qualified to apply and we'll do all we can to arrange it for him."

UNC is permitting credit for reading, study and papers done without participation in any classes and without "checkups" via examinations.

Hubert Wooten of Raeford, William Graham of Chapel Hill and Charles McFadden of Hickory, all members of Phi Beta Kappa, are three of the students now trying the new program of independent study here.

Wooten, a history major, is taking four regular courses in addition to his individual work in North Carolina history. He is concerning himself mainly with a paper on internal improvements in education.

"I think individual study relieves a lot of pressure," he said. "In most courses, you read one book, but you read it three or four times. I've already read 13 books this semester for my independent work, but I only have to read them once."

Graham attends no classes and takes no quizzes except for a regular course in Greek.

A comparative literature major, Graham has divided his program of study between modern German literature and Greek literature.

"I wanted to work independently on things which I hadn't had the opportunity to do earlier," he said. "I picked things I thought I should have read and worked them into a program of study."

McFadden, a Whitaker Scholar, is enrolled in three regular courses and does two on his own.

He has been balancing his individual work between his major courses of study in history and Spanish.

The stamps were auctioned in London for $20,000. An additional $2,000 is expected from the collection.

Morrison Project

The Morrison sponsored clothing drive for needy families will be held immediately after spring vacation according to Bill Braswell, president of House A, Morrison Residence College.

Braswell is in the process of contacting the presidents of all residence halls, fraternities and sororities to solicit their aid in gathering the clothing.

The clothing, all styles and sizes, will be given to the Interchurch Council and the Red Cross for distribution to families in the Chapel Hill area.

Any presidents wishing to participate in the drive may contact Braswell at 929-3033.

On Thursday at 4 p.m. he will speak on "The Education of Thomas Jefferson" in the faculty lounge of Dey Hall.

More Book Thieves

One more student has been caught selling stolen books to the Book Exchange. He was identified and caught even before he could cash the voucher the Book Exchange issued him for the three books he had taken from Lenoir Hall.

He is the second student to be caught since an aritcle in The Daily Tar Heel March 22 on the procedure for locating stolen books.

Go to the Booketeria and look through the shelves if you have lost a book.

Schochet was named best novice debator in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Hearing Today On KKK Rally

LUMBERTON, N. C. (AP) —A hearing on whether to make permanent a March 17 temporary injunction blocking a Ku Klux Klan rally in the land of the Lumbee Indians opens today in Robeson County Superior Court.

The Klan was prevented by the court order from meeting in the same area where eight years ago Klansmen and gunfiring Lumbees clashed.

The legal question today will be whether it is within a state's power to prevent a gathering of Klansmen when violence is expected as a result; or is it a violation of the right to assemble.

Speaker Ban Suit Filed In Federal Court

Beware Of Roman Men!

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer
Last In A Series

We students are a hardy lot. We are also a poor lot, so we tend to congregate together in less than exclusive clubs and restaurants in Europe. Let the "rich American tourists" (we start thinking like the natives) have the Champs Elysees area. We have Boulevard St. Michel.

You'll find half the joy of traveling comes from the other students you meet, foreign students (of course you are the one that is foreign now) and the older people also. This is nice because who wants to travel some 6,000 miles to meet a kid from N. C. State, or an insurance man from Poughkeepsie.

By following your guide book for students, Let's Go To Europe, you can go to the popular clubs and restaurants.

Better still. Don't be bashful. Talk to those students sitting next to you in the cafe or restaurant. Start a conversation over breakfast in your hotel.

If you are alone, other students in groups often will see you and ask you to join them. Girls as well as boys hitchhike around Europe. However, groups only is a safe policy. And since we American girls may be a little rusty at hitchhiking, I suggest the train.

Travel by train in Europe is not luxury, but it's easy and cheap. You can secure a "Eurailpass" (check Europe On Five Dollars A Day for addresses) for $180 for two and one-half months. This serves as your ticket anywhere.

The train ride may be long, but this gives you valuable time to study your currency book and learn a few important vocabulary words you may need, like — "Help . . . I'm starving . . . I want my mommie."

Sometimes your compartment companions speak in foreign tongues, so you sit and smile at each other for several hundred miles. If they do speak English you may be beseiged with questions. "I have a cousin in New York. Do you know him?

Sometimes the response may not be favorable.

On a train leaving France, I heard the word "Ameri-

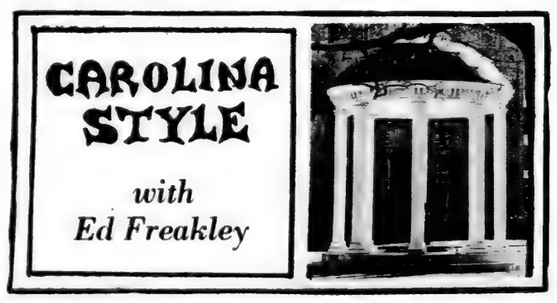
Constitutional Council Meet Put Off Until After Easter

The meeting of the Constitutional Council planned for ysterday at 3 p.m. was postponed until after the Easter holidays because of the lack of adequate preparation by one of the involved parties.

Bill Robinson, chairman of the Council said some of the parties involved in the appeal challenging an executive order by Student Body President Paul Dickson did not learn of the meeting until Wednesday night.

Dickson's executive order prohibits fraternities and sororities with discriminatory clauses in their constitutions from receiving Student Government funds for the purchase of televisions.

The appeal being brought before the Council by Hugh Blackwell and Steve Salmony is based on whether the President of the Student Body has power which grants him the authority to unilaterally block the execution of legislative enactments. —Steve Bennett



Got You Faunts

I've been waiting for this moment.

It is now time to reveal FAUNTLEROY!

To tell the truth he is not one person. He has been many.

As you know he began during the football season. At that time he was Gene Rector, the DTH Assistant Sports Editor.

After the football season Sandy Treadwell, manager of the UNC baseball team and sports writer, took the column over. It was during Treadwell's reign that Faunts had his roughest time. Like picking Duke over Kentucky, etc.

Carol Gallant even wrote the column once.

Now SEBASTIAN is taking over. VICTORY. Faunts is dead.

Check The Date

What a day for news.

—Beatniks, peacniks and otherniks announced today that they are in support of the U. S. stand in Viet Nam . . . as long as someone else is standing there.

—The KKK asked the NAACP to join them in their fight against the Lumbee Indians.

Carolina coeds were granted unlimited hours, while Carolina gentlemen have to be in by 7:30 every night. Liquor has been barred from the state and the University lost 11,000 in enrollment.

—Chapel Hill Police solved two cases yesterday.

—Chapel Hill merchants have slashed all their prices 50 per cent. They are now only 23.2 per cent higher than elsewhere.

—Lenoir Hall had a good meal.

—Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson's title has been changed to Permanent Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson.

—"Silent Sam" fired a 21-gun salute when Otelia walked by.

—The UNC band had an excellent performance—Somewhere.

—UNC cheerleaders where awarded trophies for being in the best of cheer at football games.

—The Daily Tar Heel lost a million dollar libel suit because of a certain column.

It's All Over

The last time around.

Next time you open The Daily Tar Heel a new editor will be at the helm along with new staff members. It will be a different paper, for papers reflect the personalities of those who run them.

I think that you will all agree that The Daily Tar Heel has had its "downs" this year. You probably won't all agree that we have also had our "ups."

But we hope we have done a good job of bringing you the news and providing each reader with something extra—even if it was only the crossword puzzle.

It has been a lot of fun and those of us who are leaving wouldn't trade a moment, well maybe only one or two.

I hope Carolina Style has been a success. Perhaps it will be carried on. This column was originally the idea of our managing editor, Pat Stith. If it is a success the credit belongs to the whole staff. It was their ideas and observations that made the column whatever it was.

IF IT has not been a success then I'll take the credit for that.

Thanks should also go to all the groups (cheerleaders, coaches, banks, etc.) for providing material, unknowingly of course.

You can't win them all. But we think The Daily Tar Heel has had its share of victories.

Goodbye Carolina—we will miss you.

You have a lot of Style.

Med School To Renovate Eight Village Apartments

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

The eight Victory Village apartments on Mason Farm Rd. near Pittsboro Road — vacant since Sept. of 1964 — will be renovated by the Department of Pharmacology and Toxicology beginning in May.

Jim Turner, assistant dean of the UNC Medical School, said yesterday that plans for the renovation have been in the making since Jan. 3.

He explained the long wait during which no students could live in the units by saying that the University had planned to demolish all the units. In fact, demolition had begun when the medical school saw a possible use for the structure and requested that they be saved.

By the time the request was approved al the plumbing and wiring had been torn out of the eight apartments. Students living in other Victory Village apartments had been authorized to take the old water heaters and fixtures from the apartments and had done so.

The result of the demolition is that the apartments have been standing, but uninhabitable since Sept., 1965. There were two alternatives open to the medical school: replace the units with trailers or renovate the existing structures. The latter choice was made because of the temporary nature of the facilities.

The pressure exerted by the medical school for the destruction of Victory Vilage apartments stems from the fact that the Federal government and the National Institute of Health have given the medical school $17 million over the next seven years — all for research facilities in the fields of pharmacology and toxicology. The most logical place for the toxicology complex to be located was to the south of the present medical buildings, thus some of Victory Village had to go.

Renovation contracts for the units have been approved and construction should begin by May 1 and be completed approximately four months later.

All but $1,500 of the renovation costs will be shouldered by the NIH. Since their grant does not provide for exterior improvements, the roof will have to be replaced by other-unrestricted grants. No state appropriated funds will be used in the work.

Bids Reviewed By Pub Board

The Publications Board yesterday reviewed bids for printing the 1967 YACK.

Hugh Blackwell, board chairman, said all bids have not been submitted to the board but the chairman and editors of the YACK will open any others which are received during the holidays to consider them.

The awarding of the contract will be made after the spring vacation.

Motorcycle Owners May Be Restricted

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Don't be surprised to find a new set of motorcycle regulations when you get back from Easter vacation. One of the new rules may be NO motorcycles allowed for freshmen.

Dean of Men William Long said yesterday that the Student-Faculty Committee on Traffic and Safety will meet the Tuesday after vacation to discuss a report compiled by the School of Public Health.

Lanny Shuff, the only student representative, said he had some proposals to submit to the committee concerning additional student parking spaces, a change in the time student cars are allowed on campus turing the day, the extension of partial parking privileges to T Sticker holders, and the possibility of requiring faculty members to pay for their parking stickers.

Presently, faculty members receive stickers free, while students pay $5, and T Sticker holders, who cannot park on campus, must pay $2.50.

Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont indicated yesterday that when Shuff had attempted to present his proposals at the last meeting of the committee, Dean Long had asked him to wait until the next meeting, at which time they would be the main topic of discussion.

However, Dean Long stressed yesterday that only the study from the School of Public Health would be discussed at the next meeting.

The study says that "although 55 per cent of the accidents involved freshmen, this reflects only that this was the largest group at risk," since more freshmen own motorcycles.

Freshmen are not allowed cars.

Most motorcycle accidents per 100 owners, the study says, involve seniors, with freshmen coming in second.

Chief Beaumont feels the motorcycle problem would be alleviated by reducing the number of motorcycles at Carolina. He did not mention any single group of cycle owners.

Long declined to say whether the committee would take action on motorcycle owners, saying only that the committee was an advisory body.

Chancellor Holds Firm; Speakers Barred Again

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Student leaders filed suit in Greensboro Federal Court yesterday against North Carolina speaker restrictions governing state supported institutions.

Their action came immediately after Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson denied a request that Communist Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson be allowed to speak on campus.

Sitterson, Consolidated University President William C. Friday and the UNC Board of Trustees were named as defendants in the suit.

The complaint, filed in the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina, named 14 plaintiffs. They are Paul Dickson, president of the Student Body, Bob Powell, president-elect of the Student Body, George Nicholson, chairman of the Carolina Forum, Jim Medford and Eunice Milton, presidents of the YM-YWCA.

Also, Eric Van Loon, president of the Carolina Political Union, Ernie McCrary, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, Gary Waller, and Stu Matthews, members of Students for a Democratic Society, John Greenbacker, president of the Di-Phi, Aptheker, Wilkinson, and two students, John McSween and Henry N. Patterson Jr.

The suit was filed about 5 p.m. Sitterson announced his decision about 4:30.

In a letter to Dickson, Sitterson said that when he made his decision March 2 concerning the two speakers he hoped that the matter would be closed for this academic year.

"I wish to make it clear that this action does not preclude later consideration of either or both of these individuals or any other proposed invitation by any authorized student group," Sitterson said.

In his letter to Dickson, Sitterson said that his decision was "in accord with the virtually unanimous advice of both (advisory) committees."

Sitterson also said that his original decision to ban Aptheker and Wilkinson March 2 was endorsed by both the Student-Faculty Committee on Visiting Speakers and the Faculty Advisory Committee.

Sitterson explained his reasons for refusing speaking privileges to the two in this manner:

"The two speakers in question have appeared and spoken in Chapel Hill this spring, although under special circumstances, of which we are all aware.

"Nevertheless, students did

His right leg was broken in the accident.

NCSU Head Ok's Gus Hall, Jones

RALEIGH (AP) — Communist party chairman Gus Hall and Klan grand dragon J. Robert Jones will receive invitations to speak at N. C. State University this spring.

Announcement that State Chancelor John T. Caldwell had given the university's Young Democratic Club permission to invite the speakers, both of whom would be covered by the state's amended Speaker Ban Law, was MADE Thursday.

It also was revealed that the Young Democratic Club plans to issue invitations to speak to Yale University professor Staughton Lynd, who recently went on an unauthorized peace mission to North Viet Nam, and Robert Welch, head of the John Birch Society. The club does not need permission to invite Lynd and Welch, who are not covered by the Speaker Ban Law.

But official permission is necessary for both Hall and Jones since they pleaded the Fifth Amendment in congressional hearings. Hall also is a member of the Communitst party, the university said. Under the amended Speaker Ban Law and regulations adopted by the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees, invitations for such speakers must come through the university administration.

Caldwell notified J. Leonai Farris, president of the Young Democratic Club Wednesday, that he was approving the issuance of invitations to Hall and Jones on the recommendation of the university's joint student - faculty standing committee on visiting speakers.

Draft Board Lists Official Data On Deferment Tests

G. O. Reitzel, Chairman of Local Board No. 69, Orange County, has just received information concerning the Selective Service College Qualification Test.

Reitzel said the Director of Selective Service, Lt. General Lewis B. Hershey, has announced that additional criteria will be provided for use by local boards in their determination as to the retention or reclassification of students in Class II-S.

Science Research Associates of Chicago has been awarded a contract to prepare and administer the Selective Service College Qualification Test and to forward scores made to the local boards of registrants who are college students and high school seniors or any potential II-S registrants.

The test will consist of 150 multiple choice items with 3 hours permitted for completion. Generally, the test will be divided into four basic categories: reading comprehension, verbal relations, arithmetic reasoning, and data interpretation. It is described as a general aptitude type test.

Three dates have been set for giving the examination: May 14, May 21, and June 3 at 37 locations in North Carolina. Mr. Reitzel says that applications to take the test are available at all local boards, and a registrant may procure one from any local board.

The test will provide an additional criterion for making reclassifications from the II-S pool in addition to the two which are now provided. At present, the two criteria are: (1) The registrant is a full-time student, and (2) He is making satisfactory progress. The test will in addition provide an indication as to his aptitude with respect to other college students.

What's Right And Wrong?

LAST IN A SERIES

How important is honor to you?

Throughout this series of editorials on the Honor System the emphasis has been on pointing out weaknesses in the rules under which we live as students and the manner in which they are enforced.

But we can re-organize our court system, we can change the women's rules and we can make pretty speeches forever without really correcting anything.

There is something wrong with the Honor System at UNC. Either the expectations are too high or our performance is too low. When this disparity exists some rules are going to be broken, and when some are ignored the respect for all others is pitifully damaged.

How important is honor? Undoubtedly there is nearly unanimous feeling that it is vital if we are to live as human beings, instead of animals.

Our job, then, is to decide just what "honor" is, and then stick to our beliefs. The Honor System today is in trouble because it is unrealistic. Just as the rules students lived under in 1900 are out of date, the standards of condtuct accepted by students and University officials as ethical do not necessarily coincide with what the rules say in writing.

It has been too long since we stopped to ask ourselves just what is right and wrong.

Is it wrong to drink in residence halls?

Is it wrong to keep a girl out on a date after closing hours if she wants to stay out?

Is it right to lie to protect another student hours if she wants to stay out?

Is it right to lie to protect another student?

Is is right to report someone suspected of cheating?

There are no simple answers to this kind of questions, but unless we make an honest attempt to evaluate them and set some sort of standard which can be upheld with consistency, the Honor System will never be anything more than a farce and we might just as well let the administration guide us through a University kindergarten.

Honor System Emphasis Week will be held later this semester. With enthusiastic student response it could provide a spingboard for airing and resolving these problems.

Exit Editor, Unburdened

It's a little like giving up a child for adoption.

For a year now, The Daily Tar Heel has been my baby. At one time or another, I've loved it, cursed it, been proud of it and been ashamed of it. But if nothing else—through some 170 issues and a couple hundred or more editorials—I've been devoted to it.

This year the DTH grew to its largest size in history, and it has had the largest, hardest-working staff ever. Those staff members are The Daily Tar Heel, and they are devoted to it too—or they all would have been driven to despair long ago by the demands made on them.

Aside from "When are you leaving," the question I've been asked most often recently is, "How do you feel about leaving?"

Undoubtedly most DTH readers couldn't give less of a damn about how I feel, but since this is the last editorial I'll give myself permission to get personal.

I am relieved. No student knows the burden created by having the responsibility of producing a newspaper six days a week unless he has had the job. And not only must the newspaper be produced, but it must withstand the daily scrutiny of more than 12,000 intelligent, critical readers.

I am tired and ready to rest. The demands of the job are unceasing—60 hours a week in the office are not enough, because every waking moment has to be lived as Ernie McCrary, DTH Editor. For at least this last month and a half, I would like to live as Ernie McCrary, UNC student.

Yet I'm still not exactly running out the door. For all its headaches and inducements to ulcers, the job is fun and I would never deny that I haven't enjoyed it. Part of my reluctance comes from the fact that there is so much still undone—so many ideas that haven't been tried yet—so many goals yet to be reached—so many things left to be said.

It's a sorry excuse, but any DTH editor can trace most of his problems to a lack of time. The hasty proofreading of an editorial which failed to note a verb which gave a wrong implication . . . The hidden fact that wasn't included because there wasn't enough time to search deeper . . . The meeting that lasted almost until deadline, causing a thrown-together effort.

I look back on the year now, undoubtedly with a total lack of perspective, and see the mistakes more clearly than anything. I see where I have eben arrogant, presumptuous, stupid, too forceful and not forceful enough. And again I'll be presumptuous enough to think I did some things right. And it doesn't really matter whether they all turned out to be right. The important thing is that every decision made during a year that has been controversial even by Chapel Hill standards was made only after open-minded examination indicated that decision to be right.

If readers expect any more from their editor, they better stop electing mortals.

Fred Thomas is the next mortal in whose charge the paper has been placed. He has my best wishes and my confidence in his ability to do a good job.

As my last editorial suggestion, let me urge you to give him the same.

Dixiecrats Get One Last Try

For Southerners who feel that both major parties are bent on oppressing them, a Presidential election thrown into the House of Representatives has been a kind of Holy Grail sought with more or less fervor for many years.

The plan as expressed by many Southern leaders is to throw enough Southern votes to a third candidate or to unpledged electors to prevent either of the major candidates from getting a majority. The election would then go to the House of Representatives where each state has one vote. There, presumably, the Southern states would be able to trade their votes for concessions on such things as civil rights legislation.

The Southern mavericks reached their peak with the Dixiecrat movement of 1948. Strom Thurmond Carried some Southern states but was unable to prevent Harry S. Truman from winning reelection. Lately, the bolters have concentrated on an independent elector movement, rather than a third candidate.

If President Johnson's electoral changes are adopted, independent electors will become a thing of the past. Dissatisfied Southerns will hen have to return to the tactics of 1948. They will then have to campaign for a man as much as for an idea, and their task will be more difficult. The electoral changes and the increased Negro registration will make it impossible for any independent movement to succeed after 1968.

The next Presidential election will probably be the last one in which there will be even a remote chance of deadlocking the contest. The independent elector movement was blunted by circumstances in 1960 and 1964.

In 1960, the Democrats angered a large part of the South by nominating John F. Kennedy, a Catholic. However, the hatred for Kennedy was tempered by the nomination of Lyndon Johnson for Vice President. (At that time, most Southerns still considered Johnson to be one of them.) Southern opinions on Republican nominee Richard Nixon were mixed. Thus many unhappy Southerns could still find a reason to vote for one of the major parties.

Two years ago, Johnson had been read out of Dixie. Hubert Humphrey was no more popular. The Republicans, however, stole the thunder from a growing boom for George Wallace by nominating Barry Goldwater. The darling of the conservatives then almost swept the Deep South.

In 1968, circumstances may be more favorable for an independent movement than at any time since 1948. Johnson is not likely to be any more popular with Southerners than now. The Republicans, having tried and failed with a conservative, are certain to turn to a more liberal candidate in 1968. Many Southerners will feel alienated from both parties and may be ready to turn to an independent movement.

It is doubtful, however, that an independent elector movement can succeed. Time has dulled the effect of the segregationists' arguments. The increasing Negro vote can hardly help the independents. 1968 will be their last try, but they seem doomed to failure.

Letters To The Editor

Ludwig Missed Point

Editor: The Daily Tar Heel:

I feel prompted to strongly disagree with Myles Eric Ludwig, who reviewed the playmakers production of 'The Importance of Being Errnest' in your columns last week.

My first thought is that he seems to have missed the essential point of the play. Certainly, the nine characters share 'no common humanity'; that was the last thing Wilde intended them to share. Rather, they live out their double standards with as little interaction as possible, and only circumstance is allowed finally to bring the characters together. The play was written as a parody of Victorian life and it survives as a classic of English satire, wit, and rhetoric.

The Playmakers staging may not have appealed to all, as it obviously did not to Mr. Ludwig, but judging from the response of a packed auditorium most people appeared to find considerable enjoyment in it. Indeed, intended or not, Mr. Ludwig's comment describing Tommy Rezzuto's direction as rivalling for slickness 'du Pont's invention of greasless cookery' can only be taken as a compliment when applied to 'The Importance of Being Earnest'. Even Wilde would have enjoyed such a turn of phrase!

Expert Direction

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Let me congratulate you on your wisdom in allowing your reporter, Mr. Ludwig, to cover "The Importance of Being Earnest" as he did in Saturday's paper, for I can only believe that in doing so you are inaugurating a new Department of Humor. The report (not criticism) is so abysmally bad and ignorant, it is funny. (see Camp.)

My husband was a dramatic critic in New York and Boston, and I know what I am talking about, and while there may be a few flaws, not many, in the performances and in Oscar Wilde—though the rest of the world for more than a half century would not agree with you in re the epigrams—there were no errors in the direction, which was as expert a job as I ever saw on an amateur stage—and I have seen plenty.

I am a devoted daily reader of the Tar Heel; but evidently it, too, has flaws, and this one I find hard to excuse.

Not Protesters

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I wish to clarify an article in The Daily Tar Heel, March 27. The article, written by Andy Myers, headed "Latin Students Parade on Hill," stated that we put on a demonstration carrying signs and placards.

I am sorry that your reporter didn't come close enough to see what was on the signs nor to ask any of the Latin students what was going on. Therefore, the article left the impression that we were objecting to something. The students, from high schools all over the state met at our University of North Carolina for their Junior Classical League Annual State Convention. Those signs and placards your reporter mentioned were proclaiming the various candidates for North Carolina Junior Classical League officers for 1966-1967.

We would have appreciated an article about our meeting and will appreciate your clarifying the one on March 27.

Please send me a copy of the Tar Heel with correction of impression. You might see Miss Nancy Honeycutt, in the office of the Classics Department or Dr. Kenneth Reckford, our convention speaker on information for your article about the convention.

Thank you.

'Factless, Tactless'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Regarding the article in your March 27 issue on Lati nstudents "demonstrating" in front of Memorial Auditorium, I am indeed shocked that a newspaper of such calibre as the DTH would print such a factless, tactless article.

The Latin students involved were attending their annual state Junior Classical League convention, which incidentally was dedicated to your own late Drs. Ullman and Suskin, and were minding their own business in enthusiastically but peacefully campaigning for state officers of the League.

If that article is any reflection of your standard brand of journalism, I cannot help but feel that this organization of high school students has more leadership ability and sense of dedication to a worthwhile cause than do the reporters of my own state's University newspaper.

Discussion Recommended

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Last month I wrote a letter (which you published) in which I expressed some of my opinions for the entertainment of one and all. Judging by the response I have gotten, from high and low alike, there must have been something in what I said; no one at all has bothered to deny my charges, much less tried to refute them.

I charged that the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is mis-named, inasmuch as there is widespread agreement that the institution ought not to be a university at all. I charged that the curriculum is being managed (carefully and closely) according to political, rather than intellectual, decisions and demands.

And I charged that all of this has come about because of the deep-seated feeling that any disagreement in opinion is nothing less than madness.

This may account for the fact that there was as little response to my letter as there was; it may well be that we are all so well trained that we can dismiss any criticism as irrational. But I would not say this; it seems to me that a lot of people have been thinking about the issues and are simply not yet ready to express themselves. This possibility brings me joy.

I have long since recovered from the fiction that anyone who disagrees with me is either stupid or vicious or mad. Some of my best friends are very disagreeable people. And I would hope for everyone to adopt this attitude; because then we could all join in discussing the problems we face, and investigating the evidence, without the burning passion our parents often had for taking stands and assuming positions.

Hell's bells, my stomach is just like everyone else's; some things sooth it and some things upset it. But I lack the faith that my stomach is always right; and perhaps this, more than anything else, is what I am recommending. I recommend to anyone that he reconsider, the next time something (perhaps this letter; who knows?) turns his stomach, whether his stomach might not be right. Maybe it's right, and maybe it's wrong, but it certainly is not the final judge.

If I were convinced that discussion and discovery had become the primary aims of this institution I would then have an apology and an announcement to make; the apology would be to everyone connected with the University, and the announcement, of course, would be to everyone else. For discussion and discovery please my stomach, and, after a number of years of trying every alternative I could think of, I have decided that they ought to. I recommend them.

Yours sincerely,
James F. Perry

Indian Prime Minister

Ed. note: The following letter was written by the Prime Minister of India to the Indian students in the United States.

Dear young friends,

I am soon coming to the United States to meet President Johnson and other U. S. leaders. This will be a very brief visit — less than a week. Much as I should have liked to do, I shall not be able to meet Indian students studying in American institutions.

However, I should like to take this opportunity to tell you that you are all very much in my thoughts. India is passing through a critical phase, perhaps this is the most difficult year since the first year of Independence. But there is neither need nor room for discouragement. We make mistakes but we also have considerable achievements to our credit. Many of our problems are the problems of development. How can one wake a huge sleeping giant and get it to move ahead without creating disturbance?

May I also remind you that the country expects a great deal from the young men and women who have had the opportunity of studying at institutions of international repute and of acquainting themselves with the latest trends in human thought and modern technology. We can all in our own way contribute to the national good.

With greeting and good wishes.

Yours sincerely,
Indira Gandhi

Campus Visitation Rules

Virginia Seeks Privileges

By ALAN BANOV
Special to the DTH

(Ed. note: In the first part of this series by a member of the Honor System Commission, visitation rules at Carolina were described and compared to those at other colleges. Part III discusses the recent attempts of students at the University of Virginia to change their visitation rules.)

The University of Virginia presently has no provisons for allowing female guests to be entertained in students' rooms in University housing. In December, however, the Student Council initiated an attempt, the third since 1956, to persuade the administration to allow such visitations.

The freshman dormitories there each contain lounges convenient to the front entrance, where dates may be present at any time during the day until midnight, seven days a week.

In a new dorm complex (the Alderman Road dormitories) there is a lounge for entertaining dates, but it is not centrally located, and is as far as 400 yards from some of the dorms. In these new dormitories each floor has four suites, each containing five rooms, housing two students in each room, and a bathroom, all opening onto a large, comfortably furnished lounge.

LARGE WINDOWS

One side of the lounge is walled in by large plate glass windows, which face onto the outside balcony. Access to the suites is by way of the balconies, which, like those at Carolina's high - rise dorms, are reached by exterior stairways.

The University of Virginia's Board of visitors previously had approved an open house policy for the dormitories at Mary Washington College, which is part of the University. Beginning last fall, girls were allowed to bring their fathers or dates up to their rooms between 2 and 5 p.m. Sundays after signing a guest book.

"This was not established as a dating privilege," says Mary Washington's student government president, "but simply in case a boy wants to see the room or visit a while." She told Virginia's Cavalier Daily that the plan Works very well" and "there has been very little criticism of it."

The December proposals of the U. Va. student council were overwhelmingly supported by students in a referendum, 1428 to 271. Much of the opposition, according to The Cavalier Daily, was probably due to the plan itself, not the idea of entertaining dates in lounges, because there were many controls and restrictions on the proposed plan.

PROPOSED RULES

The proposals would allow women to visit the suites of the seven Alderman Road dorms between 4 and 7 p.m. on Saturdays and 2 and 5 p.m. on Sundays of all home football weekends and "big" weekends. Although all bedroom doors opening onto the central lounge and all lounge curtains must be open during these hours, the visitors could not enter an individual room under any circumstances.

A resident wishing to have a female in his suite would first have to go to a woman stationed in the main lounge of one of the dorms, sign in his guest, and pay a proposed $.50 " DATE FEE." He would then be issued a card which he would place in the front window of his suite and would return to the registrar when his date leaves.

Checkers hired by the housing office would walk by each suite regularly to see that all doors and curtains are open and that the number of visitors inside corresponds to the number of cards in the window. Any discrepancy would be investigated immediately, with violations reported to the dean of men or the "Executive Committee of Councelors" depending on who has jurisdiction.

LOSE PRIVILEGES

Failure to check a date in or out properly would result in the suite losing its privilege of having women visitors for the rest of the year. The individual involved would come before the Executive Committee.

Since residents would have to be dressed during the visiting hours, each suite would vote before each weekend on whether it wanted the privilege, and the Housing Office would be notified. Women could visit only they suite they signed out for. Responsibility for the actions of people in these suites would lie with the checkers, who will be paid by the "date fees."

The plan would have been tried on an experimental basis, and any infraction could result in its being abandoned. At last check, the University's dean of men had not announced acceptance or rejection of the proposals.

These proposals should be studied by Carolina students, since they may be a model for similar plans here. (The Honor System Commission's proposals will be discussed in Part IV of this series.)

Americans Must Limit Family Size

If Americans are to escape the consequences of overpopulation, they must learn to accept a three - child family as too large.

This, said a Yale University sociologist, is the price of population stability.

"It (popoulation control) is a matter of the quality of life, a matter of the kind of life one can lead in terms of diet, health, education, housing, work, play and personal freedom."

Speaking at a Seminar on Population Policy at UNC, Dr. Lincoln H. Day said that three children "is a substantially larger average than that needed to keep our population at a stable size.

"With the marriage and death rates prevailing today, the difference between a typical family of two children and a typical family of three is the difference between a population that is stabilized and a population that is doubling itself every 40 to 45 years."

LIMIT FAMILIES

The only way out of the population predicament for the U. S., Dr. Day believes, is for couples who would ordinarily have three or more children to limit their childbearing to two or, at the most, three children.

"This is not, I think, as impossible a task as it may at first appear," he said.

Dr. Day pointed out that every segment of the U. S. population is contributing to the people problem. Knowing that certain segments contribute a disproportionate share to excess child - bearing helps in designing population control programs, he said, but it can be misleading by itself.

"We find," he said, "that nonwhites, while producing a proportionately larger share of the excess, still account for but one - fifth of the total, whereas whites account for four-fifths."

CAUTION

Day cautioned his audience not to be blinded by the immediately disasterous consequences of population growth in other parts of the world.

"Man's multiplication at historically unprecedented rates has very important consequences for life right here in the U. S.," he said.

Because population has "a sleeper effect," he warned that the achievement of population stability at home must begin now, not 10 ot 20 years from now.

"Even if, tomorrow, we managed somehow to cut our rate of growth in half," he said, "we would still be increasing by over a million people each year.

"There is no chance whatever of keeping our population at its present size.

"Another surge of growth threatens just ahead as girls born in the 'baby boom' of 1945-1960 begin coming of age, increasing the population of potential mothers by some 75 per cent in the 30 years between 1960 and 1990."

Dr. Day said Americans have not lost control yet over their "demographic destiny," but he said they must change some of their behavior.

"These changes," he said, "are minor compared with those that would be forced upon us if our population continued growing for another 20 or 30 years at its present rate."

Doctor Says Auto Accidents Are Often Suicide Attempts

A psychiatrist who has studied the peculiar circumstances of fatal and near - fatal traffic accidents has reached the conclusion that automobiles offer an easy - to - conceal way to commit suicide and homicide.

Dr. John M. MacDonald said during an interview at the UNC Psychiatric Center, "It's very easy to commit suicide and homicide with an automobile and avoid detection.

"Suicides by automobile are commonly overlooked by the police. And even when recognized, they are extremely difficult to prove."

Dr. Macdonald, here for an academic lecture, is associate director of the Inpatient Service at Colorado Psychopathic Hospital and associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Colorado School of Medicine.

His interest in intentional deaths on the highway was aroused after he talked with patients who admitted their injuries resulted from attempted suicides.

He found in a three - month period in Colorado that 62 drivers were blamed for their own deaths or the deaths of others but none of the deaths were listed as suicide. Among the dead Dr. Macdonald recognized three former patients who died under circumstances which suggested suicide.

"Too many fatal traffic accidents are quickly dismissed as being due to alcohol, falling asleep at the wheel or loss of control at high speed," he said.

MANY ATTEMPTS

He cited numerous cases from his investigations to support his belief that suicide and homicide by automobile are attempted much more often than is generally recognized.

"It's relatively easy for a physician to learn from patients about suicide attempts on the highway," Dr. Macdonald said.

"The police are usually solicitous to these people because of their injuries, but they should be more sensitive to the possiblity of suicide.

"Often, however, the police are aware of suicide or homicide, but they can't do much about it."

Surgeons who treat the victims also tend to overlook the sometimes obvious nature of attempted suicides.

Dr. Macdonald has found that those who survive suicide situations often want to confess. "If the setting is right," he said, "they will talk about it."

TREATMENT NEEDED

His pleas for police and surgeons to be more alert to "deliberate intent in automobile wrecks" is based on the need to evaluate and treat these patients psychiatrically.

Hamlet Affected By Strike

HAMLET (AP)—A calm of inactivity overhung the vast yards of the Seaboard Airline Railway in the Hamlet area yesterday as members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firement and Enginemen joined in a national strike of eight roads.

Picketing continued into midafternoon despite an announcement from Washington that a federal judge had ordered a halt to the strike and picketing by union members.

ABC Will Crack Down On Minors

RALEIGH (AP)—State ABC officers have been instructed to crack down on miniors who purchase alcoholic beverages.

Director Ray B. Brady of the State ABC Board, said he has issued orders for charges to be brought against underage purchasers in "Clear-cut cases."

Brady's directive is a departure from past practice under which enforcement officers frequently charged the seller but not the underage purchaser of alcoholic beverages.

Brady said he hopes the new policy will help stem a mounting number of cases of retailers accused of selling beer to minors. He added that at least one-third of the retailers who appear befor the board in license cases are charged with selling beer to minors.

Moore Speaks On Banking Comm.

RALEIGH (AP)—Gov. Dan Moore said yesterday he thought not only members of the State Banking Commission but commission employes should be required to file reports of their holdings of bank stock.

Such reports, Moore told his news conference, should be kept up to date and should be "public information."

Moore told newsmen he would recommend to the commission at its meeting today that it adopt a regulation to require any member holding stock in a bank to abstain from voting, from taking part in discussion and from making motions when matters pertaining to that particular bank are under consideration.

The proposed regulations resulted from disclosure that a recent meeting of the Banking Commission, Lewis R. Holding, President of First Citizens Bank and Trust Co. of Smithfield, had participated in discussion and had voted on matters dealing with the Waccamaw Bank and Trust Co. in which Holding owned stock. Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton ruled that Holding's vote was illegal.

Lumbee-Klan Decision Delayed

LUMBERTON (AP)—Superior Court Judge William A. Johnson yesterday delayed until April 18 a final decision on whether the Ku Klux Klan should be permanently banned from holding rallies in the Lumbee Indian country of Southeastern North Carolina.

After listening to two hours of arguments in Robeson County Superior Court, Judge Johnson said attorneys for the Klan should have additional time to answer the 170 affidavits put into evidence by the State.

These affidavits all warned of possible violence and bloodshed should the Klan hold one of its cross-burning rallies near any of the Lumbee Indian Communities.

The Lumbees have long been bitter enemies of the KKK. In 1958, a group of Lumbees broke up a Klan rally near Maxton with warwhoops and gunfire.

District Solicitor John Regan, aided by Malcolm Seawell, head of a special governor's watchdog committee for the Klan, requested that the temporary injunction against Klan rallies in Robeson County be made permanent.

Seawell said there was no doubt that if the Klan met in this area "there will be bloodshed, there will be loss of life, and there will be damage to property."

First Returns Show Wilson Leading By Wide Margin

LONDON (AP) — First returns in the British general election showed Prime Minister Harold Wilson's Laborites forging ahead and swinging votes away from the opposition Conservatives.

The early swing to Labor was calculated by computers at more than 4 per cent. If this is reflected in voting across the whole nation, it would give Wilson a margin of more than 150 seats in the 630-member House of Commons.

The computers were operated by the British Broadcasting Corp., the independent television network and the British Press Association.

Final outcome of the vote will emerge today after 29 million or so ballot papers are totaled up in the 630 electoral districts being contested in this packed island kingdom.

Despite a stubborn fight by Edward Heath's Conservatives, the pollsters, bookmakers, pundits and most politicans made Wilson's socialistic party a racing certainty to win.

Betting odds at the bookmakers on a Wilson triumph zoomed to the staggering level of one to 66 (stake 66 pounds to win one).

Balloting quickened after a quiet start.

It climaxed what seemed the most predictable—and in some ways the most cruicial—election of the century, with Britain's solvency and world standing at stake.

An 80 per cent turnout of the country's 36 million eligible voters was forecast.

cano!" muttered in disgust as I entered the compartment. Were my feelings hurt? You're darn right they were, and I was smoldering at such an automatic negative response to one of Uncle Sam's own. However, you can't stop an American, even an unpopular one. I smiled and offered them some cookies. (Who can resist cookies and a crooked grin, and so, we were friends) After this I kept a supply of cookies handy. At my size I can't afford to have enemies.

Get one of your newly acquired friends to help you learn the currency of the country you're heading towards. My first taxi-driver in London taught me my lesson well. I realized as he drove off into the sunset that he had my five pound note, worth $14, instead of a one pound note, valued at $2.80.

I'll round out this definite article on travel with a few miscellaneous hints and a number of dramatic closing remarks.

Girls, beware in Rome. The men may not be dangerous, but they are certainly not bashful. If you find yourself followed by a mob of them, ignore them or find a local policeman.

Paris was my favorite city. Spend time just walking around in obscure little sections. One thing that stands out in my memory is visiting "Les Halles," (Market-Place) at 4:30 a.m. It's fascinating, but it looks about the same at 6:30 a.m. as it did at 4:30 a.m. Onion soup and wine at 5 a.m. is a specialty.

You may be in a cafe in Paris one day soon, or on a canal in Amsterdam, a park in Germany, or a museum in London. The move is yours to make.

Do you want to experience a completely different environment, enlarge your world, your horizons? Do you want to discover facets of your own "self" you never knew existed? Or, do you just want to get out of the country real quick? Try a trip to Europe. You'll never forget it. Europe may never forget you either. Bon Voyage!

Firemen's Strike Paralyzes Eight Of Nation's Railroads

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP)

A surprise strike of 8,000 firemen stranded passengers and piled up frieight on eight major railroads yesterday. About 14 hours after the walkout began, the carriers got a federal court order that it be ended.

H. E. Gilbert, President of the striking AFL-CIO Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, was on his way to Washington when the court order was granted in the capital by U. S. District Judge Alexander Holtzoff. Gilbert said President Johnson had invited him to Washington.

In Gilbert's absence it could not be learned from the union's headquarters here if or how soon the strikers would be told to comply with the court order.

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz had a meeting scheduled at 4 p.m. (EST) with railroad representatives and at 6 p.m. with union representatives.

In issuing the order, Judge Holtzoff said the strike involved the public interest.

"We have a war, and also the entire public is affected entirely aside from the war," the judge said.

The strike, called shortly after midnight, disrupted service on some of the eight struck lines and halted it completely on others. The struck roads have a 43,000-mile spiderweb of tracks spread across 38 states. They are:

The Pennsylvania, east of Harrisburg; the Union Pacific, the Missouri Pacific, Illinois Central, Central of Georgia, Seaboard Air Line, Grand Truck Western and Boston & Maine.

Missouri Pacific was first to announce it was shutting down its operations which extend over 12,000 miles and into 12 states. A MOPAC spokesman said the strike "would have a serious effect on the national defense."

By early afternoon the Pennsylvania halted all passenger service and said freight service was "grinding to a halt."

The Union Pacific, the nation's longest rail line, had only three passenger trains operating with supervisory help in mid-morning and reported 70 trains idle between the Missouri River and Ogden, Utah.

Gilbert haad maintained the walkout "cannot represent a national emergency" because it was limited to the eight carriers, with about 12.2 per cent of the nation's railroad track mileage. He said the carriers struck were selected in a pattern that would leave all major population with some rail service from parallel lines of non-struck carriers.

The firemen's president also instructed the strikers to "han-

Transit authorities made emergency bus arrangements to help 12,000 commuters in Boston and 35,000 in Chicago. The Boston commuters use the Boston and Maine, the Chicagoans the Illinois Central.

The issues revolve around arbitration awards under which more than 17,000 firemen's jobs were eliminated since May, 1964.

Ford: Republicans Resist Tax Hike

WASHINGTON (AP)—House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan said yesterday the American people would resent and resist a new tax increase this year. He added that would help GOP contenders in the November elections.

"I think it will hurt Democrats and help Republicans in November," Ford told a news conference.

President Johnson has said that if necessary, he will call for new economic restraints to stem inflation.

Ford and Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois hit Johnson's tax hints with a renewed Republica complaint that the administration has not moved to trim back domestic spending.

"I think the public will resist a second wartime tax increase if the President recommends it," Ford said.

GOP leaders have formally called for a new, cut down version of Johnson's $112.8 billion budget, and for cuts in domestic outlays—instead of increased taxes—to balance the cost of war in South Viet Nam.

But neither Dirksen nor Ford would flatly rule out possible Republican support of an income tax increase. They said that decision will have to await action on spending.

"If we're unable to achieve these reductions we will have to take a hard look at the problems of inflation and make out decision at that time," Ford said.

The house GOP leader said the voters will resent a tax increase unless Johnson and the Democrats first make "an honest effort" to slice the budget.

Johnson 'Touching Brake' On Inflating U.S. Economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson said yesterday that he won't let spiraling costs wreck the national prosperity but he emphasized he has made no decision to seek an anti-inflationary tax increase.

Instead Johnson called on industry leaders to postpone some $6 billion of plant expansion, mayors to cut back public works and buildings, and housewives to shun the higher priced groceries.

Prices have been climbing "much too fast for comfort . . . and if I haven't done enough about it, I will," Johnson told the National League of Cities.

But the economy is not "shooting off into outer space" in a wage-price spiral, he told the city leaders, and the effect of major anti-inflation measures already taken remains to be measured. So the proper course now is caution, he said, adding:

"We are touching the brakes, not clamping them on, not risking a skid into recession or depression."

Johnson thus sought to clam some business nerves that had been jangled into a stock market sag by his disclosure on Tuesday that a 15 billion to 17 billion tax increase was being considered, if there is need to douse inflationary fires.

But his "light touch" on the brake was being applied with typical Johnson splash and commotion, in this series of developments:

1. In an hour-long closed-doors address to the business council at a White House dinner last night, Johnson asked and obtained assurances that a number of front-rank industrialists will cut back their postponable outlays for new plant and equipment.

2. In a quick follow-up of his appeal to businessmen, Johnson delivered to the Mayors' Organization this morning his strongest blast to date against rising costs.

3. The President urged housewives to pass up high priced vegetables in favor of something cheaper—to "say goodbye to those products that keep going up."

have a chance to hear and, indeed, did hear these speakers. Therefore, I believe that no additional educational purpose would be served by their return during this semester."

Sitterson pointed out that already under the present speaker regulations, two speakers who would have been prohibited under the 1963 Speaker Ban have been allowed to talk here.

The two are Dr. Vladimir Alexandrov, who spoke to several classes and a student group, and Dr. Hanus Papousek, who is scheduled to speak here in May. Both men are Communists.

The complaint, which is 25 pages long, says the student plaintiffs individually, and on behalf of the student organizations represented by them and students at the University have met all conditions and "have done all things reasonable and constitutionally proper and required, as a prerequisite to an invitation" to Wilkinson and Aptheker to speak here.

The plaintiffs ask that:

1. A permanent injunction be issued by the court enjoining each of the defendants from enforcement, execution, operation or application of G.S. 116-200 (Speaker Ban Law and Amendment), and any policies, rules, or regulations adopted by the Board of Trustees. Direct the defendants to accept and process without regard to the said statute and policy, rules and regulations, the plaintiffs' requests for permission to invite Aptheker and Wilkinson to speak at reasonable times and on subjects of choice between the plaintiffs and the speakers.

2. The court declare the speaker ban law to be illegal and void on the surface, and as applied, for contravention of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the U. S. Constitution.

3. The complaint asks for an immediate injunction restraining the defendants from enforcing the law pending the filing of an swer and the hearing and determination of this action.

The plaintiffs also ask that the defendants pay for the cost of the action.

KA's Mangum Take Mural Basketball Championships

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

Kappa Alpha beat ATO for the fraternity basketball crown and the Mangum Mugs topped the Graham Bells for the residence hall title in intramural championship games Wednesday night.

KA built up a 14-point lead in the second half and withstood a late ATO flurry to post a 58-50 victory. Bruce Barragan and Billy Travis were hot from the outside and Cliff Butler scored inside and outside to lead the KA attack. Barragan had 17 points, Travis 16 and Butler 14. George Tennille had 17 for ATO.

ATO jumped to a 4-0 lead, then Travis and Butler scored the first 13 KA points. From 13-12, Barragan hit a long jumper to give the KA's a 15-12 margin they never lost. The KA's ran the score to 29-19, before Earl Johnson and Sam Woodard closed the gap to 29-24 at halftime.

KA stretched the lead in the second half to 34-24 and 41-29. Craige Allison, Warren Wills and Butler were snapping up rebounds for KA and giving ATO only one shot. Bill Estes and Jim Corbett hit snowbirds to cut the margin to 42-36, but from here KA really spurted.

Travis hit a jumper, Barragan hit a layup on a beautiful feed from Wills that also fouled out Earl Johnson, and Cliff Butler hit a twisting layup and a foul shot. The score was 50-36 and ATO's back was broken, especially with their big man out.

George Tennille led a furious assault which cut the lead down, but the KA's sandwiched in enough field goals and foul shots to win the game.

Mangum took advantage of numerous Graham fouls to beat the Bells, 36-30. Andy Holland led the Mugs with 14 points while Bob Carter had 9 and Tom Kirkman 8. Dick Coleman led Graham with 9 points. Three Graham men fouled out, including Dick Coleman, Steve Balcolm and Lea Clower, and they wound up playing with four men at the game's end.

The score was tied 14-14 at the half, but Holland took charge and paved the way for the Mangum victory.

In the graduate division, Law II conquered the Peacocks, 70-46. Bill Barr had 19 points, Gene Sigmon 18 and Bill Cannon 10 for Law II. Speight threw in 18 for the Peacocks.

Law IV defeated Law III Blue, 62-40, behind the 27 points of Charlie Schaffer. Brown added 13 and Dockery 12.

Track Team Set For S. C. Relays

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's young track team goes on the road Saturday to participate in the South Carolina Relays at Columbia, S.C.

Coach Hiltons' youngsters have begun to show their potential. Sophomores Bill Bassett, Tom Carpenter, Jim Frye, Gary Iverson, and Mike Williams are all turning into fine performers as are Juniors Ed Daw, Jon Levin, and Trip MacPherson.

With this nucleus the team has the fine leadership of Senior Co-Captains Bill Janowitz and Jim Meade. The latter ran an exceptional two mile at Florida and recorded a personal best of 9:15 over the gruelling distance.

Coach Hilton is taking a squad of thirty-five. He feels that his best chances will come in the distance and sprint relays. His optimism is sound in this respect.

The distance medley contingent of Daw, Carpenter, Bassett and Williams finished fifth at Gainesville against some of the nation's finest track schools. This group has the talent and desire to win in South Carolina.

The sprint medley is another strong event for the thinclads. Ed Daw, Jon Levin, Richie Ambrose and Mike Williams are the cause for Coach Hilton's optimism. In duel competition this year, not one of these runners has been beaten.

In the field events at Columbia Carolina should fare better than in past years. Lecter Hyder in the pole vault is beginning to gain confidence and last week cleared 13'6", a personal best. Gary Iverson has been consistently over the 22' mark in the broad jump.

In the high jump Tilden Bridges has the potential to place. Bo Wood in the discus gives Carolina added strenth. Last year Wood placed fifth in the tough Penn Relays and is coming back into past form.

The hurdles have been given added strength with the surprise performances of Richie Ambrose. Ambrose seems to find the 440 yd. hurdles to his liking. He is undefeated at this distance this season. Soph Jim Frye also has improved in the 120 yd. highs and should add points to the score.

Overall, the team appears better outdoors than they were indoors. They are in fine physical condition and have acquired the desire to win. The weak spots are beginning to disappear, and Coach Hilton hopes that the Spring trip to South Carolina will clear up any weaknesses and benefit his team.

Proposed building plans at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, include a 24-point, two - million - square - foot program. New classrooms, dormoritories, and expanded health center, a dramatic arts building, a model nursing home, apartment units for married students, a continuation education center for adults, a research animal farm and many other items are contained in the plans which have yet to be approved by the 1967 Geneal Assembly.

Tar Heels Squeeze Colby In 10th, 6-5

By BILL ROLLINS

Clutch relief pitching, timely hitting—and one great big over dose of luck got the job done for North Carolina yesterday, as the Tar Heels came from behind for the second straight day to shade Colby, 6-5, in ten innings.

The clutch man for the second straight day was left fielder Bob Hume. Wednesday saw him win the game with an RBI single in the seventh, and yesterday it was an almost identical hit—a bouncer to right—which sandwiched between a couple of errors to toss the Tar Heels' third straight win in Coach Walt Rabb's lap.

There was one out in the crucial tenth, and the game in a 5-5 deadlock when UNC second sacker Butch Watts grounded out to short. Just as the third baseman had done a day earlier, the shortstop threw wildly to first to open the door. Watts held at first, and then Hume shot his single through the small hole on the right side, sending pinch - runner Mike McLaughlin to third.

Charlie Carr followed with a high one-hopper to the pitcher, Bob Kimball, who looked to third as McLaughlin scurried back to the bag. Anticipating a double play, Kimball fired toward second—but the peg was high and bounced into the wide expanses of center field as McLaughlin jogged across the plate with the winning run.

As had been the case on Wednesday, Carolina fell 'way behind in the first two innings —this time by 5-0—and then got shutout pitching the rest of the way.

Big George McRae, a 6-3, 195-pound sophomore from Wilmington, was the stopper of the UNC pitching staff in this one. He came in at the start of the third inning with his team down the chute by 5-0, and doled out a trio of baseloading singles. But then he pitched himself out of the jam by slipping a called third strike past the Mules' leadoff hitter and inducing captain Sal Manforte—who had homred in the second—to ground out.

It was like that all day for the husky right-hander, now 1-0 for the season. He gave up seven hits in his eight innings, walked three and hit one batter. After coming back to retire the side in order in the fourth, McRae put at least one man on base in each of the last six innings. But he was equal to the task each time. He curved-balled three strikes past Colby cleanup hitter Pete Haigis twice, for the third out with men on base.

Another soph right-hander, Joe Bailey, started for Carolina, but didn't last long. Bailey yielded a single to leadoff hitter Bob Field in the first, and then walked Manforte and Bill Snow on consecutive 3-2 counts, to load the bases with no outs.

Coach Rabb immediately brought in junior righty John Hubble, who walked in one run and was swatted for a two-run single by Ken Lillay before retiring the side.

Manforte's two-run homer over Bob Hume's head in left finished Hubble, and then McRae came on at the start of the third to wield his silencer on the Colby attack.

Bon Bonczek's single was the only UNC hit in the first three innings, but Carolina put two pinch safeties with four walks to score five in the fourth and tie the game, 5-5

Watts drew a walk to lead off, and after an out Carr, John Shaw and Bonczek all followed with free passes off Mule loser Roger Vallier (0-2).

Then Danny Talbott, who had been replaced in the starting lineup by Bill Estes due to a bad cold, strode to the plate as a pinch-hitter and promptly cleaned house with a triple down the left field line.

Another pinch batter, Rodney Thompson, stroked a single to right to send Talbott across with the tying tally. It was a big one, because if Thompson doesn't get that hit, Carolina loses in nine, 5-4.

Carolina, with its third straight win, now owns a 4-3 record as it moves into the ACC opener at State on Saturday.

Military Week, which involved athletic competition between and among Air Force and Navy ROTC units on campus, is over.

Only the memories remain—and the sore feet, aching muscles, etc.

One highlight of the competition lives on—a volleyball match between the Air Force and Navy detachment officers and NCO's.

The Air Force won—"of course"—as Sgt. W. J. Vogel put it.

"The Navy won the first game, 15-10," he said, "But we took the next two—21-8 and 13-9."

There were few ill effects from the contests.

"Oh, a few people got hung up in the net," said Voge, "but except for sore feet and legs—plus a few falls—we handled ourselves fairly well."

The real clincher came when Sgt. Vogal explained the reason for the Air Force superiority.

"Just defense," he said, "call it that 'outstanding Air Force defense system.' "

UNC sports publicist Bob Quincy supplies these Tar Heel sports tidbits:

Bobby Lewis, the splendid splinter, has become North Carolina's third basketball All-America in as many years . . . Lewis has been named to the Helms Athletic Foundation squad . . . Phil Riker: Swim Champ Unchained

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

After making the United States Olympic team at 17 years of age, winning the Atlantic Coast Conference 100 and 200 yard butterfly events, swimming on the individual medley and freestyle relay teams all year, you wonder what else a swimmer could do.

Phil Riker, a sophomore at UNC, added another honor to his already impressive list by winning the 100-yard butterfly in last week's NCAA championship met in Colorado Springs. Just for fun, he tossed in a fourth place in the 200 fly.

Competitive swimming is nothing new for Phil, who started when he was 10 years old. He began to swim seriously when he was about 13 in the YMCA pool in Paterson, N. J. He first came in contact with Frank Elm, head swimming coach at Rutgers, and Elm helped the young man's development tremendously.

After three and a half years of high school, Phil went to Lawrenceville School for two years. Under the tutelage of Messrs. Pratt and Schonheighter there, he was the captain of a team which was always among the best in the East.

Then came the summer of 1964 and the Olympics.

"It's always been a life-long ambition," he said with his boyish grin. "I finished fourth in the 200 fly after being third in the heats and semis. I started out too slow in the finals and just barely nosed out a Russian."

The Olympians were well-received in Tokyo, where swimming is second only to baseball as a national sport. Phil says the swimmers were mobbed and begged for autographs, often making them late for practice.

"The Olympics are really the best kind of public relations for the United States," he said. "all the athletes were a great bunch of guys and its was an experience to meet the athletes from the other countries."

Carolina varsity swimming coach Pat Earey lured Riker to Chapel Hill and he entered last spring. This year he swam for the freshman team first semester and the farsity second semester.

During the summer, Phil went on a State Department tour behind the Iron Curtain, visiting such countries as Hungary and Yugoslavia, and European countries of Belgium, England, Greece, Italy and Spain. The athletes gave exhibitions, delivered lectures and conducted clinics in a rugged schedule.

Strangely enough, Phil has never been to Florida. He is passing up a trip to the AAU meet in Tampa over the holidays to catch up on rest, relaxation and studies. His rigorous grind jumped him from Raleigh to Annapolis to Colorado Springs and he has been studying "every other week."

Phil's time in the NCAA 100 fly was 51.1. He has done 51 flat before. He will definitely try out for the 1968 Olympics to be held in Mexico City.

"Swimming has been good to me," he said thoughtfully. "It's taken me behind the Iron Curtain, to Japan and all over Europe. I've met people all over the world and made good friends with many of them. There's a great satisfaction in the sport itself and in the people you meet through it."

Carolina's swimming team looks loaded for next year, and an integral part of that team will be this talented swimmer who is one of the best in the world.

More than 100 alumni of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill have been elected to the United States House of Representatives and seven are now serving there.

Falcons Will Train At Blue Ridge Site

ASHEVILLE (AP)—The Atlanta Falcons of the National Football League will do their summer training at the YMCA Blue Ridge Asembly grounds near Black Mountain.

The announcement of the site was made jointly by Rankin Smith, owner and president of the football club, and Dr. Paul Limbert, Blue Ridge Assembly executive secretary.

Smith said he was extremely pleased that the agreement to bring his footballers to the top of the Blue Ridge had been reached. At the same time he asserted that Blue Ridge had been selected over a large number of other sites and facilities investigated in Georgia and neighboring states.

He indicated that the Asheville area had been one of the leading cities under consideration since the search first started.

He said weather, cool climate, transportation, facilities and the desire for a large nearby city were the chief factors considered in choosing a site and added that in view of this Blue Ridge Assembly grounds, in one of the most beautiful locations in western North Carolina seemed the ideal choice

Lacrosse Team Hits Tough Cornell Today

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

Coach Steele's lacrosse team faces Cornell, another tough Ivy League school this afternoon on Navy Field at 3:00.

Cornell is playing its first game of the season today. Last year this team finished 16th in the national rankings and possesses an All-American in attackman Cohen.

The stickmen lost their first game to a strong Yale squad 8-5. However, this loss should not be condemned. After their victory the Elis' defeated perenially strong Johns Hopkins in Baltimore 12-10. It should be evident from this that Carolina does possess a fine team.

Carolina will be without the services of All-American Jeff Parker, whose knee is not satisfactory and who will be lucky to rejoin the squad by the end of Easter vacation.

However, Jake Hubbard, who did a fine job against Yale, is Parker's replacement on the front line. Teaming with Hubbard will be returning lettermen Bud Adams and Sandy Reider. All three of these players have worked together in the past and should give Carolina a good scoring punch.

The midfield is composed of Dan Howe, Bob Morrison, and Pete Williams. These lettermen contributed greatly to Carolina's scoring against Yale. Williams came up with two goals and Morrison had one.

The defense of Jim Bishoff, John Ward, and Rich Inderfurth will have their work cut out for them. Cornell like Yale is a rough team which likes contact. They also have a superb attackman in Cohen.

Goalie Harvey Stanley gives the Tar Heels one of the finest goalies in the nation. He is a fine defensive specialist whose dexterity is invaluable to the team.

Carolina's main task will be to control the tempo of the game. Their advantage will lie in the fact that this is Cornell's first game. If they can score quickly and keep the Big Red from organizing, Carolina should have the edge.

Coach Steele and his team are looking forward to this contest. They know that they are a fine lacrosse team and want to prove it with a win. Steele commented on the support and was pleased with the turnout. Let's give them the same treatment today.

University Officials Get Delay In Court

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

The defendents in the suit filed by student leaders seeking relief from speaker restriction rules have been given an extension until May 15 to make their reply.

The suit asks that North Carolina's rules concerning persons who originally fell under the jurisdiction of the Speaker Ban Law be declared void.

The defendents are Consolidated University President William C. Friday, Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson and the UNC Board of Trustess.

Their reply was originally due April 24.

Neither Friday nor Sitterson could be reached yesterday for statements.

Because of the postponement of the reply, a meeting between Friday, Sitterson, Gov. Dan K. Moore and Attorney General Wade Bruton has been rescheduled for "sometime next week," according to Mrs. Virginia Wells of Friday's office. They had planned to meet this week, but Bruton has to be in Washington.

The case was filed in the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina in Greensboro on March 31.

It says the Speaker Ban and its enforcement has done "irreparable harm . . . in the deprivation of the plantiffs' rights. The plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law in that the deprivation is present and continuing, and will extend into the future unless enjoined by this Court, and cannot be adequately compensated by an award of money damages."

The 14 plaintiffs are Student Body President Paul Dickson, Carolina Forum Chairman George Nicholson, Student Body President-Elect Bob Powell, YMCA President Jim Med-

Friday Gets Advisory List For Chancellor

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

President William C. Friday has received the recommendations from the Advisory Committee for the Chancellorship here and soon will make his recommendation to the board of trustees from the names offered to him.

President Friday has not yet decided whether he will call a special meeting of the board before the next scheduled meeting of the full board May 23. The full board must approve Friday's recommendation in order that the person he selects will be appointed Chancellor.

The trustees meeting scheduled for May 23 will be in Greensboro. If Friday does decide to call a special meeting it will be held in Chapel Hill probably before the first week in May.

The committee which made the recommendations to Friday is composed of seven faculty members selected by Friday January 6 of this year. The chairman of the committee is Kenan Professor Dr. William Wells.

Wells said that the committee has met over 30 times since it was appointed and has heard recommendations from "quite a few students, alumni, trustees and other faculty members."

Besides the personal appearances that were made before the committee by persons wanting to recommend someone for Chancellor, the committee has also received a number of letters making recommendations.

President Friday plans to have another meeting with the advisory committee before he presents his recommendation to the board of trustees. This meeting will be the first meeting Friday has had with the committee since he selected it.

The committee in making its recommendations to Friday has acted completely separate from the president in its actions and has set forward the purpose of trying to best serve the future of the entire University by its actions.

329-Acre Garden Now Being Used

Chapel Hill lovers will have another "Arboretum" for romantic strolls by sunlight.

The North Carolina Botanical Garden, 329 acres of privately donated and University-owned land on the southeastern edge of Chapel Hill, opened on Easter Sunday.

Dr. C. Richie Bell, UNC professor of botany and director of the garden, said the garden will be under the administration of the Department of Botany, to save money by avoiding duplication of staffs.

Some 95 percent of the property will be devoted to conservation and public use and the rest to research.

"There is nothing incompatible about scientific research and amateur garden work," says Bell, noting that botanical research has been going on in parts of the woods there for some years already.

The grounds, which are open from 8 A.M. to 5 P.M., have been developed through gifts, research grants and the Botany Department budget. The largest grant, for $12,000, came from the UNC Water Resources Research Institute. Other grants, from $500 to $2,000, have been given by the N. C. Board of Science and Technology and the UNC Research Council.

The original tract of land, part of the old Mason farm, was set aside in 1952 by the University Trustees with a provision for financing through normal University budgets.

The garden opened with about one mile of pine needle paths, which Dr. Bell hopes to extend to 20 miles someday.

No Decision Made Yet On Motorcycles

Recommendations concerning the rules for two-wheeled motor vehicles are expected to be presented to Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson for final action, according to Dean of Men William Long.

The Campus Traffic Safety Committee met for two hours yesterday considering several motor cycles on campus. However, Long said the committee's actions would not be revealed until the Chancellor makes the final decision about them.

"I think we are making progress," Long said, "in an area that is very difficult and is fraught with pitfalls. The more we understand the greater the problem is

"I hope we can continue to work to a generally amiable solution. The problem here is that there is too great a demand on the supply of space."

Long said the problem is approaching the "crisis level."

He said the 11-member committee will meet again next week but no date has been set.

Distinguished Professorship Honoring Graham Started

The Graduate School of Business Administration Friday received an endowment of $200,000 to establish a distinguished professorship honoring Willard J. Graham, director and founder of the school's Executive Program.

Graham had no prior knowledge of the tribute.

The distinguished chair was made possible by contributions from several hundred program graduates and the companies sponsoring them. It was announced by Marion L. Eakes, co-chairman with Michaux H. Crocker of the committee that implemented the project.

Eakes explained the professorship was created out of a desire by the graduates to honor Graham for his outstanding contributions to education and executive development.

It was "designed to contribute permanently to the teaching profession in a way that symbolizes the vitality and inspirational qualities of the individual t attempts to honor," Eakes said.

The endowment will provide an annual salary supplement to be awarded to a distinguished facluty member chosen to occupy the professorship.

Graham has served as professor of accounting and director of the University's Executive Program since 1953.

Reds Claim 'Attack Plane'

Plane Lost Over China

THE ANSWER IS still in the bag. Officially, the brown bag must go, but according to local officals there isn't too much to worry about since there will be no crackdowns in Chapel Hill. An official statewide ruling is expected Monday in Charlotte.

From The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Department officials remained quiet yesterday afternoon after Communist China claimed having shot down a U. S. "heavy attack plane" over its territory.

The department did, however, issue a statement saying that a Navy tanker plane is overdue after flying from the Phillipine Islands toward the Aircraft Carrier Kitty Hawk cruising off South Viet Nam.

The Pentagon said that if the tanker had strayed over Chinese territory, it had probably been the result of a "navigation eror."

The announcement that a Navy KA3B was overdue came several hours after Hsin Hua, the New China News Agency claimed that Communist Chinese air force planes had shot down an A3B heavy attack plane over southwest China.

The Pentagon statement made no reference to the Chinese claim and did not acknowledge that the plane was downed.

The KA3B is a tanker version of the A3B, a turbojet-powered airplane which normally carries a thre-man crew.

The mission of such planes normally is to refuel fighter bombers when they are mounting air strikes against Communist targets.

A Navy official said the tanker version of the A3 normally carries only two machine guns mounted in the tail.

The Pentagon announcement said:

"We have been advised by the Commander in Chief of the Pacific fleet (Adm. Ulysses S. Grant Sharp) that a Navy KA 3B . . . which took off from Cubi Point, Philippine Islands, at 10:34 p.m. yesterday for the aircraft carrier Kitty Hawk is overdue."

The Hsin Hua broadcast said "The U. S. plane intruded into China's air space at about 1300 hours . . . from southeast of Hainan Island, Kwangtung Province," crossed the Hainan Straits and flew deep into Luichow Peninsula.

Brown Bags Are Out— Better Try Another Color

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Law enforcement officers in the Chapel Hill area voiced varying opinions yesterday on the recent state ruling which bans liquor outside the home, but they all agreed that there wouldn't be very much law enforcement.

On the campus, Chief Security Officer Arthur Beaumont said, "as far as I know, I don't think anyone is going to make waves." He added, however, that it is still illegal to drink on campus, as always, in or out of the brown bag.

Asked about any changes in fraternity socializing, Blake said the fraternity men can call the house their home. What about the legal limit of one gallon of whiskey in the home.

"It's a lot of collective homes," Blake said. That means no one has to worry about cocktail parties or house parties as long as no has more than a gallon of booze on hand for himself and his date.

The liquor ruling came last week from State Attorney General Wade Bruton, who said, in effect, that no one may drink hard liquor outside his home.

But there has been so much confusion around the state since the ruling that it might be said, "Home is where the booze is."

Chapel Hill Police Chief William D. Blake indicated this confusion.

"We're not going to have any crackdown," he said, "but the ABC inspector for this district has advised the restaurants and lounges that they will enforce the law."

Technically, no one may carry liquor off the premises, Blake said. That would make it difficult for the consumer, forcing him to finish his bottle inside.

"However, we are waiting for a clarification of this ruling," Blake said. He noted that Chapel Hill has an ordinance about the public display and consumption of alcoholic beverages, and said this law would be enforced, as always.

Blake said that having more than one gallon of whiskey, even in the home, is prima facie evidence that it is for the purposes of sale.

Private "social hours" in public restaurants, Blake said, would "probably" be illegal. This point is up to the interpretation of local law enforcement officers, according to a spokesman from the attorney general's office.

This area's ABC agent, W.C. Ludwick, was not available for comment yesterday, since he was out informing local establishments of the official ruling.

One of the places he has been to, the Balan Lounge on the 15-501 by-pass at Eastgate Shopping Center, said Ludwick told them they must abide by the ruling.

"They told us officially Friday that we're not to allow any liquor until they tell us differently," the spokesman said. "We have to close at midnight and we sell only beer now."

The Balan Lounge previously served set-ups and provided table "concealers" where the bottle of liquor could be discreetly hidden from view.

Gov. Dan Moore's press secretary, Jerry Elliot, said the governor has not changed his opinion that the law must be enforced, even though some state senators have come out publicly against Bruton's ruling.

"We are not free to choose which laws will be obeyed,' Moore said, "and I don't go along with anyone who suggests the law will be violated."

Asked about the governor's personal opinion of the brown-bag ban, Elliot said "the law is being studied by the institute of government and it's now a matter of the courts."

A hearing is scheduled in Charlotte Monday in which the state must defend the law under a show cause order.

Assistant Attorney General James F. Bullock would be the person most likely to speak for the state, since he is a liquor law specialist.

The hearing will be before Superior Court Judge H. L. Riddle Jr. Two Charlotte night clubs have asked the state to come to court to show cause why the law should be enforced.

Bullock said yesterday that as the state's attorney he would probably represent the Alcoholic Beverage Commission during the hearing.

Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody also refused to Council Meets On TV's Today

Whether discriminating fraternities can use student funds to purchase television sets will be decided this afternoon by the Constitutional Council.

An administrative order by Student Body President Paul Dickson before Easter prohibited such fraternities from using student funds.

This order was contested by two student legislators and is consequently being brought before the council.

Only one fraternity, Lambda Chi Alpha, has requested money to buy a set so far. The Lambda Chi constitution contains no racial discrimination clause.

Marine Corps Selection Team Here

The Marine Corps Officer Selection Team is on campus this week to talk to college men and women about the Marine Corps officer trainig programs.

Today is the second day the group has manned booths in Y Court and at Chase Cafeteria. They will remain there until tomorrow.

The Corp offers three programs for officer candidates.

The first is the Officer Candidate Course and Aviation Officer Candidate Course. It is available to college seniors and recent graduates and carries four years and six months active duty for aviation candidates, three years for non-aviation.

Training consists of ten-weeks at the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., followed by an appointment of Second Lieutenant.

The Platoon Leaders Class is available to all college men, including seniors who intend to enter graduate school.

Training is 12-weeks, divided into two six-week summer sessions at Quantico. Upon graduation from college, candidates are commissioned Second Lieutenants. The PLC earns up to $5,400 more in his three years active duty than the OCC, ROTC Cadet, or Service Academy Cadet, depending upon year of enrollment.

For the coeds, there's the Woman Officer Candidate Course, available to college juniors, seniors and recent graduates.

Training consists of 10-weeks at Quantico, followed by an appointment of Second Lieutenant. Upon completion of training, college graduates are ordered to active duty, unless planning to attend graduate school, and rising seniors return to college to complete their requirements for a degree.

Chug-A-Lugger Goes 'Sophisticated'

Being the gay, worldy sophisticate that I am, wearing thousands of dollars worth of jewelry is, of course, not an unusual experience. This is the real me — $5,000 tiara, $12,000 bracelet (Forget the Carol of the "Chug - A - Lug" contest and the sports story).

Mr. Joel Laykin casually strolled into the The Daily Tar Heel office Wednesday wit $390,000 worth of jewels, and Mr. R. L. Smith of the Greensboro Police Department. The Tar Heel staff and various refugees from Student Government casually stood open - mouthed and quiet, for t change, as Laykin explained the jewels, and how he happened to be on his way to Greensboro with a jewelry collection worth quarter of a million dollars (The entire collection).

In 1962 the family firm in San Francisco which often supplied movie gems, had accumulated a large collection of fine secondhand and antique pieces from private estates. Laykin felt that people all over the country should see the grouping at top stores in their communities.

For over five months a year, he travels with diamonds, emeralds, rubies and sapphires from wall Walla, Washington, to Miami, Fla. from Texas to Idaho, exhibitede for National Estates.

articles from 18th century France, 19th century czarist Russia and the Vistorian period, plus heirlooms and handmade contemporary designs from Europe.

Laykin knows his jewels. He does not care for the fake items (I tried to hide my ring) and feels that the buyer of costume jewelry cheats herself. "Fine jewelry has an intrinsic value. The money you spend on costume jewelry is wasted. It won't last. Purchasing a fine jewel, you get something that lasts a life - time. 3

Laykin is gung - ho about his collection, but he is not a salesman. He merely exhibits it. The stores connected with the family firm buy from the firm. After spending the last four years traveling around the country, Laykin feels there is a growing market for good jewelry.

Unfortunately there isn't much of a market in the Tar Heel Office. I tried unsuccessfully to convince the guys what a bargain they would be getting if they purchased for their secretary the 75 - caret diamond bracelet of Marion Davie, containing 35 marquis diamonds, valued at $50,000 priced at $36,500.

The idea behind the exhibition is a good one. An art lover as well as a man with well-lined pockets can enjoy t he collecton. I enjoyed "window - shopping" and I'm neither, so there seems to be something for everyone, even college girls.

Well, now that Laykin and the jewels have departed, back to the typewriter and books. Someday, count on it, you'll read where some eight - year old finally saved enough money to buy the Marian Davie bracelet.

The Walk-In

Since the filing of the suit against North Carolina speaker restrictions on March 31, we have seen a mild epidemic of cold feet.

Many people across the state who had expressed their displeasure with the Speaker Ban Law and its modifications feel the dozen student plaintiffs have gone too far.

Cries have arisen that the students are trying to take over the University.

It is hardly worth arguing that something must be done to end the restricted speaker policy. The question is this: How can it best be done?

We feel that the matter is now where it belongs — in the hands of the courts.

The action taken by the General Assembly in November 1965 is certainly less than satisfactory. What it did, in essence, was remove the hard and fast restrictions on the three categories of speakers defined in the original Speaker Ban Law and then place in the hands of the trustees the right to impose these same restrictions at their discretion.

The trustees, in turn, passed the buck to the chancellor.

So it sounds better to have the authority in the hands of South Building. But the authority does not apply equally to all speakers. Rather, it applys only to three special groups of speakers.

The courtroom is the place to get this discriminatory rule wiped off the books for good.

The chancellor's limited jurisdiction in restricting speakers is not the only questionable unit in the present set up. For, although the official rule gives him the authority to decide who cannot speak on campus, there are definite overtones of pressure from the Board of Trustees on the chancellor when he makes such decisions.

This was witnessed in a statement made by Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson March 2 when he denied the request of the plaintiffs in respect to the invitation to Mr. Frank Wilkinson to speak on the subject of the House Un-American Activities Committee:

". . . even though prior to the Executive Committee action I recommended that the earlier invitation should be approved, I regard the Executive Committee's action as in effect binding in these two instances, and I do not at this time think I should grant permission for the use of University facilities for Mr. Wilkinson on March 2."

Chancellor Sitterson should not feel bound by any past action of the General Assembly or the Board of Trustees in running the affairs of this University.

Since the situation does exist wherein he apparently has not felt free to make his own decisions, this albatross should be removed from around his neck.

The courtroom is the place to do this.

When Sitterson issued his last statement denying Aptheker and Wilkinson a forum on campus March 31 he said, "As you know, the two speakers in question have appeared and spoken in Chapel Hill this spring, although under special circumstances, of which we are all aware.

"Nevertheless, students did have a chance to hear and, indeed, did hear these speakers. Therefore, I believe that no additional educational purpose would be served by their return during this semester.

"When I made a decision on March 2 in reference to Messrs. Aptheker and Wilkinson and for the reason then given, I had hoped that the matter was closed for this academic year. I wish to make it clear that this action does not preclude later consideration of either or both of these individuals or any other proposed invitation by any authorized student group."

Any person who saw Aptheker and Wilkinson speak over "Dan K .Moore's Chapel Hill Wall" realize that few people were able to hear what the gentlemen said then, and that they did not deliver their intended addresses.

We feel sure the chancellor was aware of this, and we wonder why he decided that "no additional educational purpose would be served by their return during this semester."

His indication that these men might be granted a forum later makes us wonder if he was not again "bound" by previous action of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees.

Indeed, one speaker who would have been prevented from speaking here under the Statute of 1963 has spoken here already — Dr. Vladimir Alexandrov. And Dr. Hanus Papousek is scheduled to speak here in May.

But a speaker ban does still exist. The chancellor is authorized to restrict only a specific category of speakers. And there is reason to believe that the present situation does not leave the chancellor in a position to act independently of previous legislation.

Until this ban is dealt a final death blow, the fight will not be over.

There are no pickets. No sit-ins. No lie-ins. Instead, there will be a walk-in. A walk into the courtroom.

We hope that the walk out will be the end to this problem.

Critical observers of the American political scene have long noticed the growing inconsistencies in both left and right wing doctrine, as exemplified most noticeably by the left's reapproachment with the state in this century, and on the right, the growing trend toward acceptance of the same end, via state monopoly capitalism.

It is most significant to "draw the line" at the turn of the century, for 1900 represents the beginning of a new era in American history: "The Rise of Empire" (in the words of the late Garet Garrett, who used the term to describe the foreign policy of the '50's).

It is useful to distinguish betwen four basic strands or bodies of thought:

1) the "Old Left," with its unequivocal endorsement of state socialism and centralization;

2) the "Old Right," the philosophic tradition of H. L. Mencken, Albert Jay Nock, Garrett, etc., with its staunchly libertarian approach to human affairs and opposition to state encroachment in the economy;

3) the "New Left," the young, promising movement of voluntarism with its disillusionment with statist centralization, as proposed by such intellectuals as Paul Goodman;

4) the "New Right," the neo-conservatism of William F. Buckley and Co.

It is no accident that the "Old Right" and "New Left" may be seen together in this arrangement, for ideologically, they are amazingly similar, with the exception of one area: the general approach to economics. Whereas the old-line Rightists maintain the 'laissez-faire" economics of classic liberalism, the protagonists of the "New Left" have yet to sever the bonds of allegiance to the compulsory socialism of the "Old Left," and the courtship with the state.

This is also true of the "Ne3w Right." From "National Review" to "Fortune," erosion of principle on the right has been especially appalling for a number of years. Once trenchant defenders of the free market, these journals, of late, seem to have repudiated their heritage. Buckley's idea of capitalism seems to be correlated to his ideal of the benevolent state, as exemplified in numerous issues of his fortnightly "National Review."

In a monstrous paean to the corporate state, "Fortune," in the January, 1966 issue, eulogized Johnson's Great Society as an alleged tribute to the wonders of capitalism. Classic liberals such as Bastiat or Mill would certainly scoff at the strange logic uniting the state with the free market.

Oppose Depersonalization

On an empirical level, however, the young radicals of the "New Left" are emphatically disenchanted with Clark Kerr's idea of the corporate state. They view the depersonalization of man under the planned economy with alarm. For example, the SDS is currently engaged in a New Jersey project to oppose a massive urban renewal project. It's no small wonder that these passionate defenders of humanism are cursed by the new fascists inhabiting the myriad of government planning agencies.

To this challenge on the Left, hardly any thinkers of any political approach have offered the answers these radicals seek. No refuge may be found in the ideological stagnation of the "Old Left," whose comfortably situated pedagogues reel off tract after tract on efficacious state planning from such founts of "knowledge" as the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions.

Buckley Offers No Recourse

Mr. Buckley's school of Catholic theocracy and profound anti-civil libertarianism offers no recourse. The neo-conservatism of the "New Right" can provide only a return to the ancient regime.

Only the true libertarians and individualists of the "Old Right" are cognizant of this approach to voluntarism and freedom by the "New Left." The last vestiges of this once mighty school are located here and there, largely ignored by the polemicists of the 'New Right."

The ideological cohesion between "Old" and "New" Right, while never solid, began to disappear after the Second World War, when the 'New Right" began to lobby for American intervention abroad. The Korean War, while fostered by Truman, was wholeheartedly endorsed by the denizens of the "New Right."

It was at this point that such old-line rightists as Garet Garrett broke once and for all. The former common front had been the opposition to Rooseveltian statism. When Roosevelt engineered our foreign entanglements, the isolationists of the "Old Right" came to grips with the situation, but the "New Right" split, following FDR, in spirit if not in fact.

New Right Breaks

Having broken the ideological spine of the movement, the "New Right" began to move even farther from the libertarianism of their mentors. Such old heroes as Thoreau were no longer claimed by the "New Right." Instead, such militarists as President McKinley were reconsidered.

Later, during the early 60's, the young thinkers of the "Old Right" at the University of Chicago established a remarkable journal, "The New Individualist Review," openly challenging the upsurge of neo-conservatism. Under the aegis of such prominent scholars as F. A. Hayek, Yale Brozen, and Milton Friedman, a new era opened for the libertarians of the Right. Profesor Hayek, in his "Constitution of Liberty," wrote off the "New Right's neo-conservatism in an interesting postscript, entitled "Why I Am Not a Conservative."

In his prognosis of conservatism, he states; "Characteristics of conservatism (are) its fondnes for authority and its lack of understanding of economic forces.

New Ideas Feared

"Conservatism fears new ideas because it has no distinctive principles of its own to oppose to them; and, by its distrust of theory and its lack of imagination concerning anything except that which experience has already proved, it deprives itself of the weapons needed in the struggle of ideas."

If the "New Left" is to throw off the shackles of coercion imposed by the state centralization of the "Old Left," then its thinkers must correspondingly recognize the only alternative to the omnipotent state: the free market.

In this age of blurred principle, let us search for authentic approaches to the voluntarist society. Let us cast aside meaningless political distinctions in our quest for knowledge. The "Old Right" and the "New Left" are destined to meet . . . under the banner of liberty.

If the speaker ban's "a closed issue" as Gov. Moore says, we wonder what it's like when it's open.

Students Are Nitwits

(Editor's note—This letter, addresed to "Student's Body, University N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.," turned up in the DTH offices over the holidays. The message was printed on a postcard.)

How could you nitwits listen to communist. Gues he told you to work for a smaller army, smaller police force and abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Why don't he go to Cuba and East Berlin and try to get the Communist to stay there if they try to get away they will be shot.

General Urges Boycott

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The people of the United States are in real trouble. Their rulers have lost faith in themselves, and therefore in man. This is especially true of North Carolina. When the state legislators decided it was unsafe to let students in public schools listen to ideas that they themselves were afraid of, they turned the state's back on the future.

When I was a student at the University of North Carolina, 1912-17, the University was considered the leader of thought, free and uninhibited, in the South, and the equal of any in the nation. No idea was denied its chance in the market place, and none, of course, should be, for it is here only that their value can properly be measured.

This enlightened policy was continued without interruption until the end of Frank Porter Graham's tenure of office as president. During this period, wherever I traveled, and I traveled very extensively during my more than 34 years service as a regular army officer, I was proud to proclaim I was a graduate of the University of North Carolina. And I want to add that, among scholars, I was accepted as a graduate of one of the leading universities of the United States.

This is no longer true, especially since the adoption of the Speaker Ban Law. This is very unfortunate, as are all witch hunts. The rulers of the state are degrading themselves as well as the teachers, the students and the people of the state. The only other comparable self-inflicted injury I can think of is the Tennessee state law prohibiting the teaching of evolution.

I had hoped that the recent Governor's Commission and the Legislature would repair in part some of the original damage, but both again failed. Now the only hope lies with the students. I suggest they boycott all speakers until they are permitted to hear any one they choose.

It is time, it seems to me, that the teachers and students have both the power and right to listen to any and all ideas they choose. Neither the legislators nor the trustees should have the power to veto speakers, which in substance means the power to veto ideas. This is a form of facism completely incompatable with an institution of learning and a democratic and free society.

All too often, in the all too obvious race for first place among the dormitories and residence colleges, social activities are the only item of universal appeal. Ehringhaus Residence College has never felt it to be necesary to enter this particular type of competiton, but we would like to announce at this time a fact of which we are very proud.

Roman Tubs Rocked, Rolled From Ceiling

NEW YORK (UPI) — The hippiest of today's swingers may be delighted to know: at the height of Rome's glory, the "in" emperors considered the ultimate to be bathing in a swinging bathtub.

The Roman writer Pliny says swinging tubs were suspended from ceiling ropes and the effete emperor lounged in his tepid water as slaves tugged at the topes.

If that weren't enough resemblance to today's swinging society, Pliny says the emperors liked to "rock and roll" — as the tub swung to and fro.

He doesn't say what the tubs were made of, but it might be difficult to suspend modern porcelain enamel steel tubs from the ceiling.

Less Comedy, More Spies And Specials Due On TV

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — What will the next television season bring?

According to an NBC executive, the outlook is for less farout comedy, status quo in Westerns, a slight increase in spies, and bountiful specials.

The spokesman is Grant Tinker, West Coast vice president for programming and amiable chap without the usual close - to - the - vest attitude of network veeps.

He speaks his mind, as in his observation about canned vs. spontaneous television:

"I think we have gone about as far as we can go - or at least we have reached the peak - of filmed television. I believe the time has arrived for television to begin to deliver some of the promise it demonstrated in its earlier days.

"It's time for television to come up with some of the things that are unique to the medium-programs like 'Person to Person' — rather than things that are borrowed from earlier forms.

"What we need in telelvision is more opportunity to fail, more chance to experiment rather than playing it safe all the time. I believe the new commands in the networks may have this in minds. I'm sure the people are ready for it to happen.

"I don't know whether it was the Kennedy assassination, Viet Nam, the Watts riots, the space shots or whatever. But whatever the reason, the fact remains that there are thinking people out there who want something more from television than normal entertainment."

Sad to say, television will not reflect this attitude in the 1966-67 season. NBC is the first network to lock up its schedule, and it appears to be offering more of the same. But NBC generally is admitted to present a wider variety of programming than its sister networks.

Tinker's own favorites among the new shows: "The Hero," misadventures of a television cowboy star Richard Mulligan who is "all-thumbs" at home; "Hey, Landlord," Will Hutchins and Sandy Baron in a New York brownstone apartment building; a half - hour musical starring Rogert Miller; "T.H.E. Cat," with Robert Loggia as a professional bodyguard.

NBC will continue with two movies per week.

Student Opinion

'Jubilee—What's That?'

By THAD MUMAU
Special to the DTH

What do UNC students think of this year's Jubilee entertainment?

Fifteen of them say this:

Mike Malski, Law School, St. Petersburg, Fla.—"I would say the entertainment this year is somewhat sub par. Maybe the appearance of Johnny Mathis has compensated a little."

Garry Hill, freshman, General College, Charlotte—"It sounds pretty good to me. I am especially looking forward to hearing Al Hirt. He plays a mean trumpet."

Danny Smith, sophomore, General College, Fayetteville—"It seems that Jubilee Weekend will be a nice time to get in a beach trip, as certainly nothing will be happening around here."

Battle Wall, freshman, General College, Wadesboro—"I have never been before, but the entertainment sounds alright. I guess it could be better though."

Robert Rhodes, freshman, General College, Charlotte—"It could be a lot better. Jay and the Americans are pretty good, but as for the rest . . . Ugh!"

Beattie Leonard, senior, Business Administration, Kings Mountain—"It seems Graham Memorial could have looked ahead and gotten a little better entertainment. However, I suppose it will have to do."

John Yancey, freshman, General College, Newton—"I'm leaving that weekend. The entertainment sounds like it will be pretty bad."

John Allgood, Graduate School, History, Fort Mill, S. C.—"I like Charlie Byrd and Al Hirt, but I just do not care for Jay and the Americans. I am pretty well pleased with the job Graham Memorial has done."

Jay Cutchin, sophomore, General College, Sherrill's Ford—"This year I think will be much better than last because the student body will like Al Hirt better than Johnny Cash."

Dave Bevacqua, freshman, General College, Raleigh—"I think Jubilee has a variety of entertainment that will please a variety of people. Usually there has been all one thing; rock 'n' roll, folk, or jazz. This year there is more balance. It should be pretty good."

Ronald Robinson, sophomore, General College, Gastonia—"I think they could get some top stars. As big as the University is, it seems like they could afford some top names. Jay and the Americans are pretty good, but as for Al Hirt . . . well, the kids may like him and may not. It just seems it could be better."

Terry Rowe, freshman, General College, York, Pa.—"I think this year the Jubilee entertainment is very diversified. It should enable everyone to be displeased."

Curtis Patton, sophomore, General College, Morgantown—"I'm looking forward to Jubilee —or should I say Al Hirt. That's about all we have."

Guy Gibbs, sophomore, General College, Engelhard—"I think it's a lot better this year than last. I like no individual group, but the show as a whole sounds real good."

Tom McCain, freshman, General College, Smithfield, Ohio—"What's Jubilee?"

2 Killed, 2 Transports Destroyed By VC Mortar

SAIGON, (AP) — A Viet Cong mortar attack killed two Americans, destroyed two Vietnamese C47 transports and set a fuel dump aflame at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base early today. U. S. officials announced 34 Americans and 14 Vietnamese Air Force men were wounded.

Shell - set fires aground and flares dropped by guerrilla - hunting allied aircraft lighted the night sky for miles. Crews of armed helicopters that raced aloft said they hit the area of the mortar emplacements, but there was no estimate as to whether they got any of the Viet Cong.

In addition to the two C47s destroyed, other aircraft — both American and Vietnamese —were damaged.

The raid on the airport, only four miles from the heart of Saigon, followed up a mauling attack by Viet Cong — after two weeks of evasion — on a rifle company in the U. S. 1st infantry division's Operation Abilene 40 miles east of Saigon.

The company's casualties were officially described as heavy.

The bloody jungle fight, the first B52 raid on Communist North Viet Nam and a flurry of 36 missions north of the border by smaller planes had highlighted military reports in a war shadowed by the Saigon political crisis.

The Tan Son Nhut airport has been a target of terrorist attacks, but the raid today was the first with mortars.

The terminal handles U. S. and Vietnamese military squadrons as well as civilian airliners. The base houses 10,-000 Americans. Premier Nguyen Cao Ky, who commands South Viet Nam's air force, has a home there. Some mortar shells exploded only a pistol shot from his home.

The Viet Cong mortarmen struck about 12:30 a.m., laying down shells in an arc that started at the north side and wound up at the south, with the fuel dump and a motor pool as obvious targets.

One hit behind a passenger terminal building where Airman 1.C. Jerry R. Roush of Springfield, Ohio, and another young air force man were talking with two officers.

"It was so close that it made my teeth rattle," Roush said.

Allied planes took to the air and cascaded flares over the area, illuminating it almost with the light of day, in most with the light of day, in an effort to pinpoint the mortars and any infiltrators who might try to move in cover of such an attack. It was so bright that ambulances and other vehicles prowled with lights out.

Helicopters flew dead and wounded Americans Tuesday from landing zones that engineers hacked out of the jungle at the site of a five-hour battle Monday night between the 1st Division Company, which at full strength would total 178 men, and a Viet Cong battalion of 400 or so.

"It was horrible," said Pfc. Ronald Haley of Ukiah, who lived through the enemy encirclement and fighting that was at times hand to hand. "I never heard such screaming in my life."

Maj. Gen. William E. De Puy, commander of the 1st Division, said "Apparently Viet Cong women were following up behind the enemy troops, killing American wounded and dragging off their own dead and wounded."

There was no announcement as to the number of the company's casualties, but an Army spokesman's description of them as heavy suggested a third — perhaps 60 — were killed or wounded.

The surprise assault apparently was a reaction to American patrolling that threatened to uncover a base camp. It was a departure from the guerrillas' recent tactics, for they had meekly abandoned dozens of camps and tons of supplies in the face of the division's probing over the last two weeks.

Bombing of a Vietnamese ranger company bivouacked on riot control duty near the Buddhist institute reflected tensions in Saigon.

The bomb, which a terrorist hurled from a speeding automobile, killed one Ranger and injured two.

The next move in pressured toward quick substitution of a civilian government for Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military regime appeared to be up to the Buddhists. There was little doubt they were ready to make one, but what form it would take was a question.

There was speculation they might try a show of force Thursday.

French Military To Lose Access To U.S. Weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States notified France today that French forces stationed in Germany will lose access to U. S. nuclear weapons stockpiled there when those forces are withdrawn from Allied command.

The note, delivered in Paris and made public by the State Department, also advised that hasty action in ending U. S. military activities in France "could jeopardize the security interests of all members" of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The United States rejected a French-suggested deadline of April 1, 1967,—for removal of all U. S. military activities from France.

The American note further notified the De Gaulle Government that its withdrawal from NATO agreements raises "financial problems and responsibilities" which will have to be discussed. Officials here have been saying for several weeks that France had no legal right to withdraw from the NATO military set up and that its decision to withdraw anyway meant France should share the cost of new military dispositions in other countries.

The underlying theme of the whole U. S. note is that NATO is based on a set of treaty arrangements which are interlocking and which carry responsibilities as well as benefits for the members.

The whole tone of the note is much in line with a magazine interview in which Secretary of State Dean Rusk sharply disputed French President Charles de Gaulle's view that France can properly pull out of military agreements with the United States because they are out of date.

This "strikes at the very heart of the sanctity of international agrements," Rusk told the magazine Paris-Match.

The interview, granted last week, released by the State Department as the formal communications was being delivered to the French foreign ministry.

"The United States has more than 4,000 agreements with other nations," Rusk told the magazine. "We are concerned about actions which would weaken the growing fabric of international law."

The interview contained some of the harshest comments yet made by a high U. S. official publicly on De Gaulle's decision to withdraw French forces from NATO and put an end to U. S. and other foreign military bases established on French territory under NATO-connected agreements.

To De Gaulle's claim that the U. S.-French military agreements are obsolete, Rusk replied:

"Most of those military agreements by their trems continue for the life of the North Atlantic Treaty to which France says it intends to continue to adhere. This thesis strikes at the very heart of the sanctity of international agreements."

To the French contention that the Soviet threat to Western Europe has receded, Rusk said: "If the threat against Western Europe has diminished in the last 17 years, it has diminished because NATO stood as a firm barrier to Soviet ambitions . . . as late as 1961-1962, we were in the midst of a major crisis over Berlin that threatened war."

To a question whether De Gaulle's proposals for "reform" of NATO are out of line with U. S. views, Rusk said: "Instead of offering proposals for the reform of NATO, the French government has chosen to announce its decision (to draw back from NATO) without consulting its allies in any serious way."

Rusk also rejected the argument that the United States profits by having a strong but independent France.

Future Vague For Costly Gas-Turbine Chrysler

DETROIT, (AP) — Chrysler Corp. said today it has not made up its mind about the future of its experimental gas - turbine powered auto program into which it poured millions of dollars and many years research.

Harry A. Chesebrough, Chrysler vice president of product planning and development, told a news conference that much had been learned from a unique program in which 203 volunteer motorists drove the turbine auto.

"A decision regarding future plans for the automobile turbine will be made in late spring or early summer," he said.

Chesebrough and other top Chrysler engineering and research people reported on the recently concluded program in which average drivers logged over a million miles with the turbine car.

George A. Huebner, Jr., Chrysler director of research and generally regarded as the father of Chrysler's turbine program, said he was "completely surprised at the enthusiasm with which people greeted the turbine car program."

Huebner conceded some of the test drivers were disappointed with the fuel mileage in the 50 - car test. He described it as "reasonable, but not quite as good as that of a comparable powered piston auto."

Huebner and other Chrysler officials declined to get into any further discussion of the turbine car's fuel consumption. They also ducked questions about the over-all cost of the turbine program, the probable selling price of the individual cars if they should be marketed or the cost of the turbine engines themselves.

"All that will be disclosed in due time," Huebner said.

Among Chrylser's lower echelon of engineers and researchers — the men who have worked long years with the car which conceivably could revolutionize the auto business—there was considerable optimism that the turbine program would get the go - sign from Chrysler President Lynn A. Townsend.

Greek Oil Tankers Pose UN Challenge

LONDON, AP) — Two Greek tankers with oil for Rhodesia tonight confronted Portugal and South Africa with a choice of flouting the United Nations or failing their Rhodesian friends.

There were unconfirmed reports that the international syndicate that organized the oil run is ready with a third ship, the Nichos V, for yet another bid to breach the secutiry council embargo.

In Beira the Greek - owned Ionna V. with 18,000 tons of oil aboard, lay docked only 30 feet away from the pipeline linking the port in Portuguese Mozambique with Rhodesia.

Behind a tight security screen there were signs that technicians were trying to connect the six - inch offloading pipe of the tanker with the 10-inch intake of the pipeline.

Portugal is under Security Council orders not to allow Rhodesian oil to pass through Mozambique on pain of reprisal.

In Durban, South Africa, 500 miles away, the sister-tanker Manuela lay in the outer anchorage of the harbor. She is awaiting permission to unload her 15,000 - ton cargo of Iranian light crude oil into either Durban's storage depots or refineries, among the largest in the southern hemisphere.

The Manuela sailed into Durban after a British warship, on U. N. authority, had stopped her from entering Beira Saturday and escorted her out of the Mozambique channel.

South Africa, unlike Portugal, is not now bound by a compulsory U. N. order to refuse Rhodesia - bound oil.

But Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd knows if his government sanctions, or helps, the passage of fuel to his northern neighbor he would be exposing South Africa to retaliation.

This could take the form of oil sanctions agasint South Africa herself and these, in time, could escalate into a full scale international blockade.

Portugal, with two territories in Africa, and South Africa are about the only friends Prime Minister Ian Smith's white settler regime in Rhodesia can claim.

Coal Miners Defy Union Order To Halt Strike

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The number of striking soft coal miners swelled today as the workers continued to defy a union order to end their walkout in a contract dispute.

About 60,000 miners in eight states stayed away from the mines in the biggest walkout in the nation's soft coal fields in 15 years.

The strike continued in definance of a back-to-work order by President W. A. (Tony) Boyle of The United Mine Workers. Compliance with the directive was generally spotty and there was no indication of a general break.

An additional 10,000 miners in Kentucky joined miners who stayed off the jobs in West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Colorado, Virginia and Alabama.

Indications were that the two-day strike was not affecting the biggest users of coal —the steel industry and utilities. They reportedly had big stockpiles.

The workers struck at midnight Sunday, two days after the union reached a new contract with three independent coal producers, but failed to reach an agrement with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, which employs about one-half of the UMW's 100,000 membership.

Some miners returned to work in Utah, Virginia and Indiana and more were expected to be back to their jobs at some operations in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Faulty communication of the back-to-work order to members was said to be causing delay in Ohio.

In Pennsylvania, some 500 members of the 1,200-member local 6321 voted to return to work at midnight tonight at U. S. Steel Corp.'s big Robena complex if there were no pickets.

They also sent a telegram to Boyle asking that the contract with the three independents "be used as a basis for a better contract" and that these four points be included: eight paid holidays, extended vacations according to seniority, paid sick leave and all raises be equal.

The new agreement calls for a wage hike that boosts top-rated miners to $30 a day and includes improved fringe benefits and eight paid holidays.

This was the situation in the affected states:

West Virginia — About 20,-000 miners off the job with an occasional mine resuming operations.

Pennsylvania — About 10,250 men out with meetings scheduled at various UMW locals to vote on the back-to-work order.

Ohio — Strikers reportedly to return to work. About 1,200 off the job.

Alabama — Some 6,000 miners idle with mine officials conferring on going back to work.

Illinois — About 6,500 men off with miners trickling back.

Kentucky — About 13,400 out. Locals to meet tomorrow to explain situation to men.

Virginia and Colorado — About 2,300 and 250 workers striking respectively with reports in Virginia that some men were back to work but most mines were still idle.

Utah — Some 250 men returned to work.

UNC Set For ACC Diamond Wars

By SANDY TREADWELL,
DTH Sports Writer

The first half of the Tar Heels' baseball season is over. The non - conference games have been played and the Florida trip is over. From here on in a battle rages for the ACC crown and, when the dust settles and the last inning of the final game becomes only a memory, Carolina may well emerge as the victor.

Surprised? Sure you are. Maybe you know that the record stands at seven wins and seven losses. And that cold hard fact doesn't look so good — on paper.

But if you've stayed around collegiate diamonds in Raleigh, Chapel Hill, Tallahassee and Atlanta and watched every inning of every game over the last ten days you've looked beyond the numbers on the paper.

On April 2 your team beat State 8-2 in its only ACC game. On April 4 and 5 it ended a 4 game winning streak in losing a pair to the University of Connecticut (8-0), perhaps the finest club in the east. Two days later your Tar Heels began a three game series with Florida State in Tallahassee, Florida's capitol city.

Growing Pains

In Florida the Tar Heels emerged from their early season growing pains as a well-drilled and well-disciplined ball club.

Florida State's Seminoles are to college baseball what the Yankees once were to the American league. Every year they're national contenders. When the Tar Heels ran onto their home field they faced a club with a 17-5 record and a ranking of third in the nation.

The first game of the series was a slugfest due to a strong wind and a short left field fence. The Carolina tram came out on the short end of a 15-7 final score, but they learned that the Seminoles were beatable. The Florida boys made errors in the field and could be put out at the plate and, despite the score the Tar Heels enjoyed the lead twice in the ball game.

Catcher John Shaw's bat came alive as did that of soph centerfielder Charlie Carr. The Carolina athletes divided 15 hits between them but stranded three men on the bases in the fifth and sixth innings.

The Tar Heels won the second game of the series by a score of 6-4. Pitcher Buddy Cahoon limited the effectiveness of the hitting capabilities of the eight Seminole starters, each of whom averages over the .300 mark. The Tar Heels hit safely 11 times and the Seminoles collected only six off Cahoon.

Best Game

Carolina lost the final game 4-1. This was the finest ball game the Carolina men have been involved in thus far this season. Danny Walker went all the way in his first starting role and pitched a four-hitter. The Seminoles, however, were able to capitalize on runners reaching base on walks, and their few but timely hits resulted in their victory.

On Monday afternoon Carolina played Georgia Tech in Atlanta. Beattie Leonard pitched a masterful one-hitter and beat Tech 3-0. Leonard struck out eight and was backed up by solid defensive play. Charlie Carr led Carolina's offensive attack with three hits.

So, as the bus pulled out of Atlanta and pointed towards Chapel Hill the ballplayers seemed relaxed and confident. They'd learned that they were capable of playing ball, and playing it well, with the best of them.

GENE HAMILTON IS about to smash a forehand shot in the first set of yesterday's 9-0 UNC rout of Toledo. Hamilton beat Dean Eisner 6-3, 2-6, 8-6 as the Tar Heels won their third straight. The same two clubs meet here today at 2. DTH Photo By Jock Lauterer

Dietzel Heads South Again

South Carolina is pointing toward the big time in college athletics. While we were enjoying the sun 'n' fun over the spring vacation, the Gamecocks hired one of the big names in the coaching field, Paul Dietzel, as head football coach and athletic director. Pepsodent Paul signed a ten-year pact at a salary estimated at between $25,000 and $35,000 per. That ain't hay.

Dietzel made his reputation, of course, at LSU. His 1958 team, featuring Billy Cannon, win the National Championship and then edged Clemson, 7-0 ,in the Sugar Bowl. (Think Frank Howard remembers?) Dietzel popularized three-platoon football, and his Chinese Bandits, the defensive specialists, were the toast of Baton Rouge. Dietzel's Tigers missed a second straight national title the next year when Tennessee beat them, 14-13, but LSU did beat Ole Miss, 7-3, on Cannon's fabled 89-yard punt return. (Every Halloween, along with trick or treat, Louisianians are visited by films of this run.)

Pepsodent Paul is a glamor boy. He has wavy blond hair and a nice smile. Football fans are always conscious that a team is his team; he never fades into the background. He has a winning personality, no doubt about it. LSU rooters idolized Dietzel — until he broke his contract to move to West Point. ("I'LL never leave LSU," he had said.)

At West Point, though. Paul ran into trouble. He could manage only one win over Navy in four tries, and that's a sure way to become unpopular at the Point. He no doubt found recruiting harder at Army than it was at LSU — or will be at South Carolina. Dietzel should be a winner again.

(If you get the impression that Pepsodent Paul is not my favorite person, you are right. I sat in Tulane Stadium along with 82,000 other people in November, 1958, and watch Dietzel's Tigers slaughter Tulane, 62-0. It was one of the cruelest things I have ever seen in sports. This was not a case of one team simply outclassing another. Tulane was down only 6-0 at halftime. Dietzel poured it on in the second half had his first team in the game when it ended.)

At South Carolina Dietzel should have the best of both of his former worlds. He will have the recruiting advantages of a state school, together with relatively easy competition he enjoyed at Army. With all due respect to the Atlantic Coast Conference, the football played here is not the best in the country. In addition, Paul is taking over a team that was conference co-champion last year. Dietzel will not have the glory of building a winner from nothing. It is extremely unlikely, however, that South Carolina hired Dietzel just to win the ACC title.

The biggest question mark in Columbia right now is Frank McGuire. He's a winner, too; but two such strong personalities aren't likely to mix well. In the early '50's Kentucky had Bear Bryant coaching football and Adolph Rupp directing basketball. The Wildcats were national powers in both sports, but something had to give. As Bryant put it, when they gave Rupp a Cadillac and him a cigarette lighter, he could see the handwriting on the wall. Since Dietzel is also athletic director at South Carolina, McGuire is the likely man to leave.

Dietzel will get a genuine baptism of fire next fall. The Gamecocks' opening game just happens to be with LSU in Baton Route. The folks down there haven't forgotten you, Paul.

Jeff Parker Out For Year

Jeff Parker, UNC's All-America lacrosse player is lost for the season. Parker reinjured a knee in practice yesterday. He had originally hurt it in the Yale game March 21.

Last year Parker led the Carolina team in scoring with 29 goals and 12 assists. He has led the Tar Heel scorers every year since his freshman year. He is co-captain and attack on this year's squad.

Yesterday was the first day Parker had practiced since he hurt his knee. "I thought it was okay," he said. However, the bad knee turned under him again.

Without the 6-6, 210-pound star, Carolina has struggled to an 0-3 record so far this year. After losing to Yale, 8-5, the Tar Heels dropped decisions to Cornell and Dennison. Five games remain on the schedule. The next one is against Washington & Lee Saturday in Lexington, Va.

Last year UNC had a 5-2 record and ranked 19th in the nation out of 96 schools fielding lacrosse teams. The Tar Heels were 1-2 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, defeating Duke and losing to Virginia and Maryland. Carolina finished third in the ACC.

Cindermen Defeat Weather, USC

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's track team continued their winning ways over the vacation. While most people took it easy in the sun-drenched Bahamas, the thinclads fought off the elements in Columbia, S. C.

During the South Carolina Relays gale winds and rain covered the area. The track was no exception. The conditions were poor, but Carolina gave an outstanding account of itself.

The sprint medley relay team composed of Ed Daw, Jon Levin, Frank Kurth and Mike Williams disregarded the weather and won in the time of 3:30. Coach Hilton had high hopes for this group before the meet and his optimism was well-founded.

The distance medley relay team could not match their counterparts, but managed to finish third on the wind-swept cinders. This contingent will be around next year since Tom Carpenter, Mike Wilimas and Bill Bassett are only sophomores. The eldest member of the team being Junior Ed Daw.

Record Relay

The Relays produced a school record. Gary Iverson finished third in the hop, step, and jump with a leap of 45'8". This effort erased Tom Clark's record jump of 45" 1-2 set in 1964.

After the S. C. Relays the thinclads met the South Carolina Gamecocks in Columbia. Carolina remained undefeated in dual competition as they won by the margin of 79-65.

The shotputters, led by Felix Alley, gave the Tar Heels an unexpected sweep in this event. Alley put the 16-lb. weight 48'2" to outdistance teammates Barnie Varner and Ron Short who finished second and third respectively.

In the torturous 440 hurdles Richie Ambrose kept his unbeaten streak in tact as he covered the distance in 57.0 to take first.

Other Stars

Other outstanding performances were given by Jon Levin and Mike Williams. On several occasions this spring they have been asked to compete in two events. Each time they have won both and contributed greatly to Carolinas' track success.

Against South Carolina Levin won the 100-yard. dash and the 220 and Williams swept to first place in the mile and the 880.

Sophomore Jim Frye continued to show improvement in the high hurdles.Frye finished second. but may well be a winner next time.

Co - Captain Jim Meade breezed to a win in the two-mile. His time of 9:40 is far from his best of 9:15. but the conditions of the track and the weather discouraged a desire for a blistering pace.

Carolina now stands 3-0 in ACC. Saturday the trackmen meet Maryland on Fetzer Field. Certainly, the Terrapins must be given a substantial edge. However, Carolina has been gaining momentum and will not make Saturday's contest a pushover for the IC4A Champions.

NIGHT OPENER

North Carolina's football opener will be at night against Kentucky in Lexington. It will be the first after-dark contest for the Tar Heels since they played LSU in 1964.

LONG TIME

When righthander Gary Hill of Charlotte hurled a no-hitter for the UNC frosh against N.C. State, winning 6-0 and striking out 14. it marked the first time any Carolina hurler had turned the trick in 15 seasons.

Participating in the physical education program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill are some 4,000 undergraduates.

Don't let the low price scare you off.

$1574.

That's the price of a new Volkswagen.

Some people won't buy one because they feel they deserve something costlier. That's the price we pay for the price we charge.

And some people are afraid to buy one because they don't see how we can turn out a cheap car without having it turn out cheap.

This is how.

Since the factory doesn't change the bug's shape every year, we don't have to change the factory every year.

What we don't spend on looks, we spend on improvements to make more people buy the car.

Mass production cuts costs. And VWs have been produced in a greater mass (over 10 million to date) than any car model in history.

Our air-cooled rear engine cuts costs, too, by eliminating the need for a radiator, water pump, and drive shaft.

There are no fancy gadgets, run by push buttons. (The only push buttons are on the doors. And those gadgets are run by you.)

When you buy a VW, you get what you pay for. What you don't get is frills.

And you don't pay for what you don't get.

The plaintiffs claim, "The statues, regulations and policies, and their application by the defendents, to plaintiffs Wilkinson and Aptheker constitutes a Bill of Attainder and of Pain and Penalties in violation of Article I, Section 10, Clause 1 of the Constitution by stripping plaintiffs of their freedom to speak on equal terms with others solely because of membership in a legislatively - defined political group band because of the past exercise of a specified constitutional right . . ."

The brief also states that the speaker ban law "lacks general applicability and disables the plaintiffs without judicial determination of any wrongdoint whatever."

In further claims, "These abridgements of the right to speak and to hear and to question have had and now have and will continue to have a chilling effect on legitimate speech on public property and in public facilities at the University and all State - supported colleges in North Carolina."

Morrison Sponsors Project

House "A" of Morrison will hold a drive today, Thursday and Friday for clothes to be given to the American Red Cross and the Inter-church Council for needy families in this area.

House President Bill Braswell, chairman of the campuswide drive, said that boxes have been set up in most dormitories, fraternities and sororities. Clothes will be picked up Friday afternoon to be presented to the organizations late Friday afternooon.

Student Body President-Elect Bob Powell said yesterday, "I whole - heartedly support this most worthy project and urge everyone to take part in it.

"I plan to sacrifice not old useless clothing, but garments that still have a lot of wear, and I hope my fellow students will do likewise."

Dean of Men William G. Long said, "I hope the students in the process of this drive will realize the basic economic needs behind this worthy project.

"The motive behind the giving should not be to merely get rid of old cothes but to give something of use that the student can do without."

21-Story Dorm Announced

Plans to construct a 21-story residence hall for 1,000 men were announced by the University Sunday.

The structure, which will cost more than $3 million, will be the tallest building in the state, according to University Planning Director Arthur Tuttle.

The residence hall will be located in the area surrounded by Parker, Teague and Avery Residence Halls and Kenan Stadium.

Tuttle said it would probably be the tallest college residential structure in the southeast.

Construction on the high-rise unit is slated to begin next March; completion is set for September 1968.

The residence hall, which will be named for James K. Polk, 11th president of the United States and an alumnus of the University, has been informally dubbed "the tower" by University officials.

Total square footage will exceed 165,000.

Construction will be on a reinforced concrete frame with brick exterior sheathing and pre-cast concrete trim elements. Inside concrete floors will be covered with tile. Walls will be of concrete block.

"The building will be air-conditioned if supplemental funds can be obtained for the purpose," Tuttle said.

Bookcases, closets, beds and tables in each room will be built-in.

On the first floor will be a college library, student post office boxes, elevator lobby, vending machines and house master's quarters. A laundry, storage area, mechanical and trash room will be located in the basement.

"We aren't sure what will be on top of the building," Tuttle said. "Our funds are limited. But I can assure you it will be a terrific view with all of Chapel Hill and Orange, Durham and Wake counties spread out below. And for people coming into Chapel Hill from out of town it will certainly be a landmark."

Each man will have only one roommate.

"We've found the three-man situation a bad one," Long said. "Too often it creates a one-man out situation."

As a conflict reducer, two or three quiet rooms will be located on each floor for those who wish to study late after roommates have gone to bed.

comment about his superior's ruling.

"I had absolutely nothing to do with it and I refuse to comment," he said.

Dean of Men William G. Long differed only slightly from Chief Beaumont's opinion of the ruling. "The matter is currently under study," he said. "Naturally we have to take a pretty close look at it, and there is a tremendous amount of confusion surrounding the law."

He said there is a meeting scheduled this week to discuss an official brown-bag policy at the University. Long refused to comment about changes in fraternity drinking rules.

Britt Twins Win Chi O Award For High Grades

The Britt twins coeds at the University here, have won the Chi Omega award for the best grades in sociology received by a woman undergraduate during 1965-66.

The two girls, who are from Norfolk, Va. are Barbara Jean Britt and Elizabeth Anne Britt, both seniors who will graduate in June.

The cash award was presented by Kenan Professor of Sociology Guy B. Johnson.

Usually the Chi Omega award goes to one woman scholar receiving the top grade in undergraduate studies. However, both the girls made exactly the same scores; so the prize was split.

Inaugurations To Be Held Tonight During Legislature

Inauguration ceremonies for the newly-elected officers of Student Government will take place at tonight's student legislature session at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

The change of administrations will occur as Bill Robinson, Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, administers the oaths of office to Bob Powell, President; Bill Purdy, Vice-President; Judy Fletcher, Secretary; and Don McPhaul, Treasurer.

Powell will deliver his inaugural address to a body composed of both newly-elected members of Student Legislature and old members. The new members will be sworn into office during the ceremonies.

The seating of legislature will place the two political parties on an equal footing, neither having a majority. In case a vote ends in a tie, Vice-President Bill Purdy (UP), who is speaker, will cast the deciding vote.

Purdy said yesterday he expected "cooperation" to be basis for this year's Legislature. Because of the even split in party membership, he plans "to be a 'member' of the body as well as speaker.'

He plans to be "well informed' on campus issues so that when tie votes arise he can decide which way to vote.' He feels he will be more than a passive presiding officer.

Although he hesitated to predict major bills to be introduced, he said the student body is not running out of problems.

"As long as there are people who are unhappy here, there will be issues for Student Legislature," he said.

Purdy plans to enlarge the Finance and Ways and Means Committees. Of the four standing committees in Student Legislature these two handle a large majority of bills introduced.

He thinks the student body has elected "outstanding" representatives for this session. He hopes there will be fewer resignations than there have been in the past.

Powell has announced that interviews will be held during the latter part of this week and throughout next week for Student Government positions. The filling of these positions will effectively mark the beginning of the new administration. Powell urged everyone interested to come to the interviews.

The lateness of this year's Inauguration is due to the run-off which arose in the presidential race.

ELIZABETH ANN BRITT

Senior Coed Dies During Easter Break

Senior Elizabeth Anne Britt died in a Marietta, Ga., hospital of an undertermined illness Sunday. She was visiting in Georgia at the time.

Miss Britt and her sister Barbara Jean, both coeds here, were cited in yesterday's DTH as recipients of the Chi Omega award for the best grades received in the Dept. of Sociology by a woman undergraduate during 1965-66. The twins had attained exactly the same scores.

Miss Britt is the daughter of Commander and Mrs. Randolph Britt of Norolk, Va.

Funeral arrangements are being made through the H. D. Oliver Funderal Home in Norfolk. Services will be held Friday at the Chapel in the Woods at the Norfolk Naval Air Station.

Memorial services for Miss Britt will be held in the Presbyterian church on Franklin Street at five today.

Council Rules Out TV Bill

The Constitutional Council yesterday invalidated a bill passed by the Student Legislature over a presidential veto on the grounds that it was passed illegally.

The controversial bill would have made it legal for fraternities and sororities with so-called "discriminatory" or secret bylaws to use student funds to help purchase television sets if their bylaws have been approved by the dean of men or the dean of women.

Student Body President Paul Dickson had vetoed the bill after its passage. It was passed again by the legislature over his veto, so Dickson attached an executive order denying the TV purchase privileges to any Greek organizations with secret rules or bylaws.

Symposium Funds Push To New High

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

The contributions to this year's Carolina Symposium are greater than ever before, mainly due to greatly increased donations from fraternities, sororities, dormitories and businesses.

Symposium Treasurer Eric Van Loon said the response from fraternities and sororities was "fantastic." Some 20 fraternities and six sororities contributed funds for the program.

About $2500 of the $14,000 budget was given by Greek and non - Greek residents, he noted. The staff was also very successful in their room-to-room solicitation last fall.

Businesses and foundations donated some $5000, 10 times the amount given last year. Student Government gave $3,-500, Graham Memorial $1500, honoraries and organizations $500 and the UNC administration $1800.

The budget, which is $4,000 more than last year's, will be used for speakers' honoriums, housing and travel expenses, supplies, publicity and banquets. Some of the funds are also used for the inter-collegiate seminar segment of the Symposium, which will be attended by 25 students from colleges all over the country.

Van Loon said he was "very thankful for the support of the University administration, President Friday and Chancellor Sitterson."

More seminars related to the Carolina Symposium's theme of "Man, Mind and Myth" are scheduled for tonight.

Philosophy Professor W. W. Shea's talk at Ehringhaus' Green Room was postponed from last night to 9 tonight. Other discussions will involve History Profssor C. M. Foust at Phi Mu at 6:30, Art and Religion Professor John Dixon at Phi Delta Theta at 7 and Art Professor John Schnorrenberg at Phi Gamma Delta at 7.

Sociology Profesor H. Douglas Sessoms will speak in Teague (for Parker - Teague-Avery) at 8, History Professor James Godfred will talk at the Faculty Club (for Cobb and Morehead Rsidence College) at 8 and Journalism Professor Walter Spearman will meet with residents of Craige at 9.

George Butler, Symposium chairman, encouraged students to hear these professors, who are among the University's best. "These related discussions are intended to stimulate interest in the Symposium's topic, which should prove very provocative," he added.

Carl Gottschalk Delivers Speech

Dr. Carl Gottschalk will deliver the annual presidential address to Sigma Xi, the honorary research society, Monday at 6:30 p.m. at the Carolina Inn.

A member of the Medical School faculty, Gottschalk's address is "Lesions From Kidney Micropuncture."

Friday Calls Board Meeting On Chancellor

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

President William C. Friday said yesterday that he will meet with the Advisory Committee on the Chancellorship this week and will then call a special meeting of the full board of trustees to vote on his recommendation for the new Chancellor.

Dr. William Wells, chairman of the Advisory Committee, said that the committee to President Friday March 30 after meeting over 30 times to discuss possible candidates for the Chancellorship.

The special meeting of the board of trustees would be held in Chapel Hill sometime before the regularly scheduled meeting May 23.

Friday will select one candidate from the recommendations made by the committee and will submit his selection to the board for approval. A simple majority vote of a quorum of board members is required for an approval of Friday's selection.

Friday said he plans to call for the special meeting because he sees no need in dragging out the decision until the end of May when the full board will meet.

The Advisory Committee turned in detailed reasons for their recommendations along with the names of the men.

Friday said, "The Advisory Committee for the Chancellorship has done a most efficient job in deciding which men to recommend for the position of Chancellor."

When the Board of Trustees names the new Chancellor for the University of North Carolina branch here in Chapel Hill, it will be the first time that there has not been an acting Chancellor in some branch of the Consolidated University since November of 1964.

A mail drive for funds to fight North Carolina's Speaker Ban Law began on campus yesterday with letters mailed to faculty members by the American Association of University Professors' campus chapter.

Dr. Joseph Straley, Chapel Hill president, said his group has raised about $500 "without an active campaign." It has been used to finance the initial proceedings of the suit.

"The AAUP considers this a serious affair," Straley said. "We feel that students should be able to invite anyone they want . . . that the use of facilities should never be a tool for censorship."

Resolutions adopted March 5 at the annual North Carolina meeting strongly oppose censorship of visiting speakers and pledge financial support to a student lawsuit.

AAUP has 200 members here and 1,000 in North Carolina. The resolutions calling for opposition of the Speaker Ban (not introduced by a Chapel Hill member) passed unanimously.

The suit was filed March 31 after Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson refused student speaking invitations to Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson for the second time this year.

Aptheker is the director of the Institute of Marxist Studies in New York and Wilkinson heads a committee that seeks to abolish the House Activities.

Both spoke last month from an off-campus sidewalk and in off-campus buildings.

The Speaker Ban Law passed in 1963 forbade known Communists, or persons pleading the 5th Amendment in loyalty cases, from speaking on state-supported campuses.

A special session of the North Carolina General Assembly amended the law to give the trustees control over speakers early this year. The trustees in turn delegate authority to chancllors of the various branches.

Report Recommends Sale Of Liquor By The Drink

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Directors of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce approved Wednesday a study committee's report recommending legislation to permit the sale of alcoholic beverages by the drink in Mecklenburg County subject to th approval of local voters.

The chamber study committee, which has studied the liquor-by-the-drink question for more than a year, made these points:

—Liquor by the drink licenses should be restricted to select dining establishments, namely bona-fide private clubs, hotels, motels and restaurants which meet strict standards.

—No evidence was found by the committee that legal on-premises sale of alcoholic beverages would increase community problems associated with the use of aocohol.

—The committee said it felt adoption of a controlled liquor-by the drink system would be of economic benefit to the community.

—The system, if adopted in Charlotte, should be policed and administered carefully on a fair, non-political basis, with the selection of the ABC Board to continue on a non-political basis.

Women In Law School — Beauty Vs. Cherry Blend

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

Law School is a man's world full of Cherry Blend, old books and tweed. Seven women have entered this world and lived to tell about it.

What would make a woman take an interest in such a profession? The most common answers were undergraduate influence of courses and professors or lawyers who were relatives.

Olive E. Loewenthal, who started law school in her early fifties, began her career under somewhat unusual circumstances. By necessity she became an executive for her family business while her brother was serving in the Army. When he returned Loewenthal was freed from her responsibility and decided to fulfill a long-thwarted desire.

As she stated, "My only regret in not being a young student is that the work actually wears me out. I can't stay up and burn the midnight oil, but I'm up every morning at seven."

A librarian - turned - lawyer Mary Browne found another problem. She had attended library school after graduation from Carolina, but soon discovered the larger salaries were reserved for specialized librarians. When asked if she had ever considered going into law rather than being a law librarian, she said, "I don't want the competition and responsibility of a law practice. I'd hate for someone's life or property to depend on my knowledge."

As to the usual question of a woman fitting into a man's world, the answer was an overwhelming "yes." When asked about this, Susan Ehringhaus summed up the group's sentiment's, "I suppose the men question your motivation at first, but once you establish that you are really interested, there is acceptance."

Several of the women believed there were even areas of law in which women could be more successful than men. Doris R. Bray, head of the Law Review, stated, "I understand women are more methodical and can stand routine better. Also in certain courtroom cases, as rape, the jury would be taken a back by a female lawyer."

Adding to this, Miss Browne said, "Although trial work may be too hard physically on women, domestic relations and other types of negotiating are probably more suited to women than men. I must add here, though, that women have to watch getting emotionally involved."

Although several of the women are not certain what they will do after graduation, some are considering a position in a large law firm.

When asked about the availability of such a position for women, Adelaide Austell said, "I think a woman has a better chance of getting a job with a large firm, because it can be so diversified. It would be much more difficult to go home and hang up my own shingle."

Miss Browne took an opposing stand, "I believe there is still a great deal of prejudice in the large law firms, and it would be difficult for a woman to get in the front door. Of course it depends on the type of work, but it remains a fact few women have gotten positions in firms and on faculties."

Many would wonder at a woman's effect in the courtroom. Carol Bonadeo stated, "The effect would depend on the case, but I don't think it is that important a factor."

Mrs. Nelson Crisp said, "I'm not really sure of the effect, and of course it would depend on the judge and the jury, but it is known that a female witness can easily sway a jury."

All in all the women have little to complain about, except maybe the work. They are treated as equally as possible under the circumstances. Miss Ehringhaus finds only one problem, "No matter how many law books I'm carrying under my arm, the visiting law professors always think I must be a secretary."

Mrs. Crisp also included a problem that only a female lawyer would have to face. It seems her maid came in one morning and requested a divorce. Mrs. Crisp hesitated for a moment; the maid replied, "Well, heavens no — not before you've gotten your degree!"

Skinner Invited To Walk

A UNC student has been personally invited by famous heart specialist Dr. Paul Dudley White to join him in the Community Walking Day planned Saturday in Charlotte.

Henry Skinner of Wilson, now governor of Maverick House, recently directed the "Hington James Hike for Hearts" during Heart Month. The hike commemorated the walk of UNC's first student, Hinton James, from his home near Burgaw to Chapel Hill, and also pointed up the benefits to the heart which come from exercise.

White, who served as President Eisenhower's doctor, heard of Skinner's interes in the heart and the hike and telegraphed him the invitation because of this.

White, who founded the American Heart Association and served as its president, will speak at a rally in Charlotte's Freedom Park Saturday and then lead a walk around the lake.

The Mecklenburg County Medical Society and its Women's Auxiliary are organizing the community walk.

Psychiatrists Elected

Two UNC psychiatrists have been elected chairman of committees of the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry (G.A.P.).

Dr. Morris A. Lipton is chairman of the Committee on Research and Dr. David R. Hawkins is chairman of he Committe on Medical Education. Both are on the psychiatry faculty at the School of Medicine.

G.A.P. is composed of about 250 psychiatrists organized into 21 committee Meetings are held twice each year to discuss current topics of interest in psychiatry.

G.A.P.'s most recent report, and the one provoking the most widespread reaction, was issued by the Committee on the College Student. It was entitled "Sex and the College Student."

Committee Named

Appointments to a faculty committee to study ways of improving faculty social and recreational facilities were announced last week by Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson.

Dean Wayne A. Danielson of the School of Journalism, who is also president of the faculty club, will head the committe.

Other members of the group are William S. Flash of the School of Public Health, Kenneth Penegar of the Law School, William R. Straughn of the Medical School, University Planning Director Arthur Tuttle and James Wiggins of the Sociology Department.

The group will conduct a survey on available facilities and present a report on its findings during the summer.

Brown Bag Blues

The 1923 Turlington Act, which states that the home is the only place a person may legally consume liquor, should not be overlooked any longer.

This is a prime example of antiquated North Carolina legislation that should be invalidated. The practices of brown-bagging, locker clubs, and open bars in private clubs have long gone unnoticed.

Law enforcement officials have talked first one way, then the other since State Attorney General Wade Bruton's recent ruling that the old law must be strictly enforced, most of them indicating they will follow the set policy of "What we don't know won't hurt us."

Strict obedience to the law, of course, would mean an end to cocktail parties at restaurants around Chapel Hill, to the occasional nipping done in Kenan Stadium and, possibly to the practice of fraternity men who do not live in their houses bringing bottles there.

It would also certainly mean a significant increase in the number of men paid to enforce the law.

But ignoring the law is no solution. This encourages citizens of the state to violate the statute which remains on the books, subject to being enforced at any time.

Token raids on a club or an American Legion Post from time to time to show that the law still means business are not fair to the individuals chosen to be examples for equally-guilty parties who go completely untouched.

Some people have speculated that the strict interpretation of the law has as its goal the eventual legalizing of the sale of liquor by the drink. If this is the case, more power to them.

Of course, nothing can be done to change the law until the General Assembly meets, and there is no guarantee that any modification will be made then.

But it is not too early to begin considering what can and should be done.

Meanwhile, let the hit dogs bark. Maybe if they bark loudly enough, the 40-year-old liquor law will be updated.

Worthy Projects

Springtime weather has a way of making it almost impossible for a student to do any really serious studying. But this is not due to a loss of energy.

On the contrary, this vital sparks seems to get more plentiful by the day as the school year draws to an end.

At a time when the image of the UNC student is being tossed around by people all over the state, this energy could be well-used.

Two student groups have set a good example—the Interfraternity Council and House "A" Morrison.

The IFC has launched a crusade to beautify Chapel Hill by planting grass in various unsightly spots around town, and house "A" Morrison is holding a drive for clothes to be given to the American Red Cross and the Inter-church Council.

The latter project offers an opportunity for every student on campus to be a real part in a most worthy project. Boxes in residence halls, fraternities and sororities will be collected Friday afternoon and presented to the organizations.

We hope every student will contribute at least one article of clothing in this drive.

To House "A" Morrison and to the IFC, a hearty "Well done."

A Short Subject

It's no longer what's up front that counts.

According to Eileen Ford, director of one of New York's largest modeling agencies, good development from the waist up is not sufficient to get a girl where she wants to go today.

The hemlines are on the rise, and Miss Ford says, "When you have bad legs there is nothing you can do."

In the modeling industry this new trend is discriminating against nationalities, favoring the German and Scandinavian lasses who are "lucky enough to be leggier," Miss Ford claims.

But we feel our Carolina coed—the typical and non-typical—can hold their own against any of these foreign beauties.

And as we see it—or would like to see it—what better way is there for a young lady to make her leg-beauty known than in a pair of Bermuda shorts.

What about it Dean Carmichael?

The Editorial Page — A Policy Statement

Up until last fall, the DTH editorial page had always been the subject of some controversy, depending upon the nature of the news and the calibre of the columnists, but in the past academic year the campus has shown very little interest in this vital section of the newspaper. This might be attributed to any number of reasons, but it would be relatively pointless to examine them all.

It should be made clear, however, that with the coming of a new order to power, there will be a few changes made. Certainly no newspaper is worthy of publication if it exists solely to forment dissention for dissention's sake among its readership, but it does have an obligation to point out those things which it feels are wrong and provide the readers with some form of intellectual stimulation. If it fails to attain these objectives, its newsprint is only suitable for use as emergency toilet paper or for wraping fish.

Chuck Neely, who graduated from this University last June, frequently cursed what he termed "the blandness" of last spring's edit page, and often said, "When I get up in the morning, I want to read an editorial page that will either make me tear it up in anger or make me howl with delight." There is a lot of merit in this statement.

The DTH is the only official student newspaper on this campus. The student body foots the bill for its publication, and justly demands its money's worth. In this sense the newspaper has a franchise with the students. It is obligated to present the news and the issues in an engaging manner, and its editorial page must be open at all times for the publication of opposing viewpoints.

This last point is very important, and it cannot be stressed enough. There is no more disgusting a situation than when the editorial page editor of a newspaper such as the DTH takes the stand that he is under no obligation to print articles which contain opinions which he is personally opposed to.

Pete Wales, who was the DTH Associate Editor last year, was an intelligent and able columnist, but there were times when he did the campus extreme disservice by failing to present the readers with all sides of campus controversy during times of crisis. The most notable case in point was last year's National Student Association crisis.

Wales, an an ardent supporter of NSA affiliation, marshalled up the editorial page and filled it with pro-NSA material. A pitiful few anti-NSA letters to the editor were published, but there appeared not one concise column summarizing the case against NSA in the newspaper. Consequently the students had to base their judgment of NSA on incomplete information when a campus-wide referendum on the issue was held.

Largely for this reason, a very good student editorial page was prevented from being an excellent one.

Former DTH editor Ernie McCray was also prone at times to take rather one-sided and uncompromising attitudes on certain issues, such as last fall's Dickson scandal. His attitudes caused dissention among staff members, and there was a strong undercurrent of repression which stiffled dissenting commentary.

Hopefully this situation will never arise again.

In an attempt to achieve better readability, the editorial page should constantly strive to publish columns which are concise and coherent. There were many columns published regularly within the last year which no one bothered to read, simply because the writer couldn't write worth a damn, or because the writer was out of his medium.

All in all, it's a simple matter of getting the men and making sure they keep their minds open.

Open access for all points of view and intelligent, creative writing, therefore, are the essential ingredients for an effective editorial page.

This is what we are striving to present

Vietnamese Friends Needed

If there was any question whether the war in Viet Nam can be won without the support of the South Vietnamese, it was laid to rest this week when the U. S. air force found itself sharply curtailing air raids on North Viet Nam because of a temporary shortage of bombs.

The shortage had been caused by disorders in the vicinity of the Da Nang air base. Because of the civil strife, shipping problems developed, apparently since not enough South Vietnamese hired to unload the bombs showed up for work.

Fortunately, the solution to the problem was comparatively simple: send U. S. troops to load the unload the ammunition ships. But the entire experience illustrated the dependence — at least temporary — of our air force on these primitive natives of Southeast Asia.

Much more serious than the shortage of bombs is the large number of desertions from the central government's army. The policies by which we and our Vietnamese allies are fighting the war are made in Saigon and Washington, but here, again, it is the peasants of Viet Nam who must shoulder the rifles, throw the hand grenades and aim the artillery prices. Fortunately, the desertion rate for our side has been decreasing, but, should political instability continue in Saigon, even the soundest personnel retention programs would be rendered worthless.

The Da Nang trouble and the war the government has been waging with the Montargnards are but two examples of how rivalries between the many interest groups in Vitnamese politics have hurt the war effort. And in the foreground is the tradional Catholic Buddhist friction, which somehow also seems at times to involve special factions among members of these religions. The energy of the South Vietnamese population, rather than being used to fight the Viet Cong, is being wasted on Saigon street corners, where rival groups regularly clash and demonstrate.

But even if United States troops could unload all the bombs and fire all the mortars, there might remain the problem of terrorism — which, judging by its frequency, is practiced by more than a few Viet Cong extremists. Certainly, the typical villager isn't going to become a terrorist overnight should we loose his support, but, as indicated by recent events in Saigon, even a neutral or barely unfriendly view of Americans among the general population can encourage the Viet Cong to commit violent acts against the GIs.

Small wonder it is that, during the height of the religious turmoil, American soldiers were harrassed more than at other times — the Viet Cong perhaps hoping observers might mistake the explosions for a spontaneous part of the general strife.

And more significant than any other argument justifying attempts to win South Vietnamese support is the reason we are in Viet Nam: to preserve a government which we hope will ultimately be more responsive to the people's demands than the Communists would be, were they rulers of all of Viet Nam.

American forces, then, most cultivate the friendship and respect of the rice farmers for, soonr or later, our soldiers will tire of lugging those heavy bombs under the tropical sun.

McCrary Refuted By MC Official On Courts Issue

(Editor's note — This is the first in a series of six editorials by Bill Miller, the vice chairman of the Men's Honor Council. They are in rebuttal to a recent series on the student judiciary written by former DTH editor Ernie McCrary.)

By BILL MILLER

The Daily Tar Heel and former editor Ernie McCrary published a series of eight editorials concerning the UNC Honor System. While no one intimately connected with the judiciary would hesitate to encourage constructive criticism of the system, at the same time we will not idly sit by as many unqualified and incorrect statements are aimed at what we consider to be a vital cornerstone of the University.

The editorials, in the first place, were written without a thorough investigation of the Honor System on the part of McCrary. There were no interviews of consequence with present Men's and Women's Council members, with the Attorney General, or with the Honor System Commission Chairman. The past records of the various student courts were ignored. There is also little evidence of a critical valuation of the proposals for judicial reform.

Secondly, what substantive criticisms that were aired seem to be based on two things: a digust of women's rules and a few misleading; misrepresentative examples of Honor and Campus Code violations (indeed, some examples cited do not necessarily fall under the jurisdiction of either of these codes — e.g., drinking in residence halls, violating women's closing hours, a petty poker game). Surely our system as a whole is not to be torn asunder due to the shortcomings of several of its parts.

And lastly, there are definite fallacies in the Honor System which must be voiced and corrected by students, such as orientation of new council members, council discipline, recording council proceedings, a new system of sentences. Yet the eight articles failed to deal with these relevant points of criticism.

Notwithstanding the above, Mr. McCrary concluded that "the Honor System is just a farce," that we have "honor by convenience," that "confusion is caused by the court system."

It will be the purpose of future commentaries to clairfy certain misrepresentations as they appeared in the editorials, to present a positive view of the judiciary and some of its members and to set forth explicitly the pertinent and demanding aspects of judicial reform.

Benjamin Franklin's Advice Can Be Applied To UNC

(Editor's note — The author claims this column follows closely in theme the first draft of Benjamin Franklin's "Rules By Which a Great Empire May Be Reduced to a Small One.")

By SAADIA GREENBERG

In order for established interests to free themselves from the discomfort resulting from such criticism of the existing order of things as necessarily eminates from a great university I have formulated the following rules which, if carefully put into practice are certain to bring about the elimination of this evil.

1. Begin with a campaign led by the most ignorarnt and intolerant elements of society to convince the general population that the university is a sanctuary for seditious and sinful persons.

2. Once this notion comes to be generally held, propagate the idea that innocent youth are being morally corrupted by the university.

3. Without debate or deliberation, have the supreme law-making body arbitrarily prohibit certain unpopular classes of persons from speaking at the university. It is essential that the criteria for exclusion be vague and capricious, based on opinions held or constitutional rights previously invoked, and clearly have no relation to the possibility of the perpetration of any overt criminal acts.

4. If later some retreat becomes necessary, make certain that the essentials of prior censorship remain in force.

5. Since a great university cannot exist without diversity of opinion, (i.e. "controversy"), have the chief public official proclaim to the populace that controversy must be suppressed because it leads to discord and strife.

6. If the serious, intellectually-oriented elements continue to protest, have the campus newspaper begin to ridicule them. The leaders of the protest should be misquoted, their motives impugned, their character disparaged and the protestors generally portrayed as high-strung, unreasonable, disorderly, and unconventional.

7. When some of the most capable faculty members resign or threaten to resign, have the newspaper describe them as dull-witted, incompetent assistant graders in obscure and unimportant areas of study. A hint of disloyalty will also help.

By this time the proper atmosphere will have been created, serious and probing minds will begin to depart and the formerly great university will soon be one of no more consequence than the tobacco fields from whose midst it arose.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

8:00 P.M. U.S.A. ARTISTS—NET "Jim Dine" This is the first of five programs on the coming-of-age of American art in the past generation—featuring contemporary American painters and sculptors—examining each artist individually. Thirty-year-old Jim Dine, not classifying himself among the Pop Artists, yet working concurrently with them, discusses his life and work. Produced against a background of Dine's home and what he describes as a bourgeois, middle-class life, the program portrays the artist's interest in "Happenings"—which Dine describes as having developed out of the artist's need to speak more directly with the viewer—and one of these "Happenings" is included in the film.

9:00 p.m. PERFORMANCE—UNC-CH "Italian Art Songs" John Hanks, tenor; Ruth Friedberg, pianist; and Adriana Ciompi, guest reader; all from Duke University, perform a song by Caccini, a number of songs by Respighi, and three of Boccaccio's poems set to music by Respighi. The program, performed in Italian, is accompanied by English subtitles.

Lecture Tonight Will Examine Sex Ethics

What is an adequate and honest sex ethic for the unmarried, especially as it involves the use of birth control methods?

In particular, what should university health services do when birth control help is requested by unmarried university men and women?

Dr. Joseph Fletcher will address himself to these and other social questions in the final Seminar on Population Policy at the University here this week.

He is the Robert Treat Paine Professor of Social Ethics at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass.

His topic will be "Sex and the Unmarried: Morals Reexamined."

The lecture will be at Carroll Hall at 8 p.m. on Thursday, under the sponsorship of the UNC Population Program. The public is invited.

Professor Fletcher has a varied social experience as a coal miner, an auditor's assistant, rope factory worker, resident worker in a New York settlement house, and social research director for the National Council of the Episcopal Church.

He was ordained in America, served as a curate in a slum parish in London, was chaplain in a Southern woman's college and then dean of the Cathedral in Cincinnati.

For nine years he was dean of the Graduate School in Applied Religion at the University of Cincinnati.

He has preached and lectured in more than 30 universities in the U. S., Canada, Latin America, Australia, Japan and Southeast Asia.

Dr. Fletcher is president of the Human Betterment Association of America and a director of the Euthanasia Society of America and the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts.

A new book, "Situation Ethics: The New Morality," will be published this month.

Dental Assisting Program Extended: Deadline Is Friday

A new 10-month program in dental assisting will replace a popular three-month summer program at the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry.

The extended program will be offered for the first time beginning July 7. Twenty students will be selected.

The deadline for requesting an application is Friday, April 15. Any woman who is a graduate of an accredited high school and has a knowledge of typing is eligible to apply.

Applicants accepted for the course will be notified no later than June 10.

The new, more comprehensive course conforms to the requirements of the American Dental Association's Council on Dental Education. Graduates here will be eligible for certification as dental assistants.

Dental assisting students wil be housed in the new private, contemporary residence for women students, Granville Hall.

Students will live under UNC rules and regulations governing freshmen women students.

Report Given On Siamese Twins

A roundup of mild events and minor operations at the University Health Center which you may not have read about yet:

TWINS — The Simaese twins — Althea and Dorothea Allen of High Point — had a combined weight of six pounds and 14 ounces when they arrived at N. C. Memorial Hospital here last April 7. When discharged from the hospital last weekend to return home, Althea was a healthy 17 pounds and Dorothea was a hefty 18 pounds and 11 ounces. The twins were surgically separated here last Nov. 8.

NO BREAKTHROUGH —the story of a potential scientific breakthrough which ended in disappointment was related by Dr. Erle E. Peacock Jr., UNC surgeon, during a television interview on "Science & Nature." A young woman with a hand damaged beyond repair refused an arm transplant from an identical twin sister who was dying. The story was told to emphasize that even when medical problems in transplations are solved, some non-medical problems may remain. Who's to say who is to have whose arm?

OBSOLETE? —The use of new methods of treating broken bones ("Internal fixation") may not be nearly as dramatic as some of the medical literature would lead you to believe. Dr. R. Beverly Raney, UNC orthopedic surgeon, says that plaster casts are in no danger of becoming obsolete in the foreseeable future even though "inside methods" of holding fractures in good position continue to improve with more inert metals and better surgical techniques.

ABORTIONS — The ethical problems facing physicians were dramatically illustrated by Dr. N. J. Eastman of Baltimore in the first Merrimon Lecture here. Suppose you're the doctor and you know that women attacked by German measles during the first eight weeks of pregnancy have about one chance in four of giving birth to gravely deformed babies (often blind). Is is right or wrong to order therapeutic abortions, knowing that, on the average, three of the four destroyed embryos would be entirely normal, each a potential human being with a life expectancy of some 70 years?

FEMALE MOTORBIKISTS —Do coeds have motorbike accidents? Occasionally. In a four-month study of motorbike acidents on the UNC campus by the School of Public Health, three of 58 injured students were coeds— two of them were pasengers and the other was riding a borrowed vehicle. With more than 600 two-wheeled motor vehicles on the campus now, probably less than a dozen are registered to female operators.

DEAF CHILDREN — Parents of hard-of-hearing preschool children who met at Memorial Hospital to form a Statewide organization were told how to help their youngsters learn to speak. But they were cautioned "not to expect overnight miracles. It takes love, affection, patience and time."

PROLIFERATION — Although nhtoing has been done scientifically yet to prove that automatic toothbrushes are superior to hand-operated toothbrushes, manufacturers now have 90 different electric toothbrushes on the market. Dr. Don L. Allen of the UNC dental school told pharmacists that a good good job of caring for the teeth and gums can be done with either manual or electric brushes, if used properly. He added a word of advice: "Don't scrub your teeth. Brush your gums."

POPULATION PROBLEM — Who is responsible for the excess births creating a severe population problem in the U.S.? Dr. Lincoln H. Day, Yale sociologist, told the UNC Seminar on Population Policy that almost every segment of the population is contributing to the excess, some more than others, of course. The only groups that seem not to be contributing to the excess are the foreign-born, the Jews and the college-educated Negroes. Urban whites, for instance produce a proportionately smaller share of the total excess births, yet more than a third of all excess births originate with them.

DANGER — The public hasn't been properly educated to the damage which can be done with home reliner and denture repair kits, says Dr. David P. Dobson, head of the dental school's Department of Prosthodontics. Do - it - yourself dentistry with drugstore products can cause facial muscles to be pushed beyond their physiological limits. The results: fatigue, soreness and pain.

CONCERT MONDAY

Allied Arts will present the Durham Civic Choral Society singing Vivaldis "Chamber Mass" and Norman Dello Joio's "To St. Cecilia" on Monday.

The Society will be accompanied by the Triangle Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Robert Barstow. The public is invited to attend this free concert at 8:15 p.m. in Baldwin Auditorium on the East Campus of Duke University.

Dodd Pleads Guilty To Setting 5 Fires

RALEIGH (AP) — Vernon Lemuel Dodd, a 19-year-old Salisbury youth, pleaded guilty Wednesday to willful and malicious burning of personal property involving five fires last year on the North Carolina State campus.

Judge Raymond B. Mallard was expected to sentence Dodd later in Wake Superior court.

Before accepting the guilty pleas, Judge Mallard told the former North Carolina State student he could receive up to 10 years in prison on each charge.

Dodd pleaded innocent to charges growing out of a fire which destroyed Uullen Hall and damaged adjacent Peele Hall Feb. 22, 1965. Solicitor W. G. Ransdell said Dodd would be tried later on these charges.

Dodd pleaded guilty to starting fires which damaged property at Danforth Chapel in King Religious Center and in Holliday Hall, Brooks Hall and Becton Dormitory, where he then lived.

State Bureau of Investigation agent E. B. Pierce testified that Dodd told him and Raleigh detective Lt. R. L. Bunn on April 2 that he started the fires.

The youth then returned to Becton Hall where he started a fire in the lounge, Pierce said.

Dodd further told the officers, Pierce testified, that on March 3, 1965, he left "a drinking party in the dorm" and walked to the Frank Thompson Theatre lobby, where he ignited several paintings on a pegboard.

"He stated he did not know why he did it," Pierce said. "It was some sort of impulse. He was sorry he did it and said he had not tried to conceal it. He said he did not run from any of the buildings."

John B. Dodd Jr., brother of the defendant and a senior at North Carolina State, said his brother was deeply depressed during January, February and March of 1965.

Defense attorney Charles Blanchard asked John Dodd if he thought his brother was under a mental strain at the time of the fires.

Dodd replied he thought his brother was having trouble with a girl friend and disagreements at home last year.

John Dodd said his brother is now employed at a clothing store in Salisbury and "has adjusted very well."

Pierce said investigators had concentrated on Dodd since the middle of March after eliminating other persons.

Pierce said Dodd told him and Bunn he left his dorm the night of Feb. 8, 1965, and went to Danforth Chapel to pray. He said when he arrived he had "an urge to set fire" to Danforth Chapel and struck a match and ignited draperies.

Pierce said Dodd told them he then went to Holliday Hall and ignited a stack of cards in the basement and continued to Brooks Hall where he started a fire in a trash can in a men's room.

Dodd told the officers he then went outside and saw a crowd gathering at Danforth Chapel and went there to see what was going on.

While there he heard there was another fire at Holliday Hall and said he went to assist firemen in keeping people away from the building, officers quoted Dodd as saying.

Admission rates at the Morehead Planetarium at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, have been raised for the first time in almost ten years. Prices are still low, however.

Queen Azalea XIX Arrives To Start Wilmington Festival

WILMINGTON, N. C. (AP)— Queen Azalea XIX arrived late Wednesday to kickoff four days of festivities in the annual Azalea Festival in Wilmington.

This year's queen is Ulla Strömstedt, a star of the Flipper television series. She will reign over the four days of the festival which starts Thursday.

The program includes a performance Thursday night featuring a folk singing group, The Bitter End Singers. Balls are planned Friday and Saturday nights with a giant parade Saturday morning.

Mitch Miller, the television personality, will be master of ceremonies at the balls. Barry Sadler, the Ft. Bragg soldier who wore "The Ballad of the Green Beret," will be parade marshal. Comedian Larry Storch also will appear.

Gov. Dan Moore plans to arrive Friday and stay until Saturday.

The annual azalea parade Saturday will attract 250,000 persons, festival officials predicted.

A spokesman for the festival said that the city's thousands of azaleas should be at their peak spring bloom by the weekend.

In addition to the festival, the annual Azalea Open Golf Tournament starts Thursday at the Cape Feat Country Club.

Militant Buddhists Plan Orderly Rally

SAIGON, (AP) — Militant Buddhists planned a big but orderly demonstration here today to emphasize their opposition to Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military government.

It was expected to take the form of a nonviolent march from the Buddhist institute to downtown Saigon.

Such a parade route would follow streets marked by a series of riotous outbreaks before the Buddhist hierarchy proclaimed itself in over - all command of the dissidents and called a halt to the rowdyism and arson last Saturday night.

At the same time there was a report that Buddhists would drop their boycott of the preparatory congress the government convened Tuesday to recommend steps for the transfer of ruling powers to a civilian regime.

Radio Saigon broadcast a statement that the Buddhist delegates would take their seats in the congress today. Confirmation was lacking from the religious hierarchy.

Buddhist factions were reported making a house-to-house canvass to whip up support for the Saigon demonstration.

Ky has vowed he will move forcefully because any further violent demonstrations. Last week in Saigon there were repeated clashes with police and troops, with open anti-American overtones.

Authorities said that if the parade is orderly it probably will be unhindered by the government.

There have been no demonstrations in Saigon this week. They have continued, however, in the northern centers of Hue and Da Nang.

The Buddhists are demanding steps toward a representative, civilian government in "a very short time," Presumably meaning within two to five months. The military regime has said it has no desire to cling to power, but that it will take time to work out the orderly procedures for an election.

A national preparatory congress called by the government went through its second day Wednesday, but there was little sign that it was making any solid progress toward solving the political unrest. The congress was convened to recommend steps toward election of a civil government. It is taking up the question of a constituent assembly that would draft a constitution to be put to referendum.

On the opening day Tuesday, the congress was attended by only 92 delegates, about half the total asked to participate. The Buddhists boycotted it and there were only two Roman Catholics present as observers.

Wednesday the congress sent a delegation to try to induce absentees to attend.

Speakers insisted that the congress should be attended by Buddhist and Catholic leaders if it is to have any meaning.

Some quarters here were said to feel there is a possibility of agreement between the dissident political factions, using the congress as a forum.

It perhaps might be based on agreement of the military regime for quick action on the selection of the constituent assembly.

Whether any timing considered proper by the government would be accepted by the Buddhists, however, was an open question.

Ky is known to feel confident he has enough backing from the military and other groups to stick in office through the present crisis if he desires. He also is known to feel that groups opposing his government do not have the powerful support they claim.

Whether his assessment is accurate may be determined soon.

'Ducks For Tuck' Reveal California Campaign Spirit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Tuck, a political jester thought funny by most everybody but Richard M. Nixon and Barry Goldwater, is making a serious bid for his first elective office.

Tuck, 42 and a Democrat, wants to be a California state senator from Los Angeles county.

He would like a little more serious image, but he knows that his fame as a political comedian may hurt him some. He enlivened the 1960 presidential campaign with his political tricks.

"I have been told that my publicity will enable me to carry every district but one — my own," he quips.

In a campaign where you can't tell the actors from the politicans, Tuck's sense of humor is still rampant.

He's planning a campaign parade on a local lake with ducks carrying "Ducks for Tuck" placards.

"I'm hoping to have the ducks trained in time for the June 7 primary," he says. Another campaign gimmick will be to give each member of the Los Angeles city council an $87 jar of preserves.

"The cow counties up north keep voting to take money away from Los Angeles and voting more money for county fairs. I figure that makes each jar of Aunt Susie's blue ribbon preserves worth $87."

Tuck announced his candidacy at a campaign dinner for Gov. Edmund G. Brown, by placing a copy of an alledged telegram at each table.

It said: "Dear Dick: I just learned that you filed for the state senate in Los Angeles. I want you to know that I've waited for this moment a long, long time. Pat and I are arranging our schedule and will be out in your district sometime in May. (signed) Richard Nixon."

Comments Tuck:

"I'm afraid Nixon will endorse me and blow me out of the water."

Tuck is the fellow who once put on a railroad engineer's cap in San Luis Obispo and signaled the crew to start the campaign train just as Nixon was starting a speech on the rear platform.

In 1962 when Nixon was campaigning for governor of California, he made a speech in Los Angeles' Chinatown.

He was greeted by Chinese girls who carried signs in English that read "Welcome Nixon" but underneath in Chinese characters the signs asked: "What about the Hughes loan?"

Billionaire Howard Hughes once loaned $200,000 to Nixon's brother to help bolster a faltering restaurant.

Tuck was the man who sneaked a beautiful spy onto a Goldwater campaign train during the 1964 presidential campaign.

She distributed to newsmen a humorous anti - Goldwater letter. Sample:

"We ar happy to report that the railroad has assured us that flouride has not been added to the water on this train."

But his favorite was the morning after the first Nixon-Kennedy television debate in 1960.

As Nixon stepped off a plane in Memphis and faced a battery of cameras and microphones, an elderly matron wearing a Nixon button greeted him.

"Don't worry about last night," she said. "He beat you but we'll get him next time."

Mexico City Prepares For Lyndon Johnson's 'Informal' Visit Today

MEXICO CITY, (AP) — Mexico is preparing welcome with all the trappings of state for President Johnson's arrival today.

While the 24 - hour visit has been characterized as informal, Mexican officials planned a 21-gun salute at Mexico City's International Airport. President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz, flanked by all members of his cabinet, will be on hand.

Presidential assistants Bill Moyers and Jack Valenti arrived yesterday to dicuss final details of the visit with officials of the Mexican government and the U. S. embassy.

Johnson is slated to arrive at 5:30 p.m., (6:30 p.m. EST) on his first visit outside the United States since he became President.

Diaz Ordaz will make a welcoming speech and Johnson will respond. Johnson then will drive to the official Mexican presidential residence, Los Pinos, for a courtesy call upon the Mexican president.

The government today published large advertisements in the morning newspapers asking the Mexican people to turn out to greet the Johnsons, who will stay at the U. S. embassy residence.

Friday morning the two presidents are scheduled to have a private talk at the Mexican National Palace.

There are no major problems existing between the two countries and both Mexican and U. S officials describe relations as excellent.

After his meeting with Diaz Ordaz, Johnson will place a wreath on the monument to Mexican independence, topped by the statue of a gilded angle, located on the Paseo De La Reforma.

From there Johnson will go to participate in the ceremony unveiling a statue of Abraham Lincoln, a gift of the American people to the Mexican people. This is the main purpose of the presidential visit to Mexico.

Both presidents are scheduled to speak at the unveiling. The statue, authorized by a $150,000 appropriation by Congress, is a replica of the one standing in Lincoln Park in Chicago.

Soft Coal Miners Continue Strike

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Soft coal miners, disgruntled with a proposed contract, stayed away from the mines again yesterday in defiance of a union back - to - work order.

About 53,000 miners in eight states were off the job. Some were reported returning but there were no signs of a general break as the strike moved through its third day.

Representatives of the United Mine Workers and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association met behind closed doors in Washington in an effort to settle the dispute.

The union and three independent coal companies have reached agreement on a new contract calling for a wage hike that lifts toprated miners to $30 a day and includes another pay raise in 1967.

But miners were dissatisfied with the pact.

"Tony Boyle (president of the UMW) threw a wedge right into his own men when he okayed that contract," said Frank Popovich, 45, of Masontown, Pa., a mechanic with 22 years experience at Jones E. Laughlin Steels Corp's gateway mine.

"He gave the machine operators and mechanics a $1.32 raise now and the other guys have to wait until next April to get a $1 raise. I'm a mechanic and that would benefit me, but that's no way to do things. It only creates friction," he said. "If that sort of thing keeps up, I can see the day when a timberman will tell an operator 'I'm not even going to carry a post for you! That's just no good for the Union."

"Where did they get this pay raise business anyway?" said John Zvolenski, 46, of Palmer, Pa. "That wasn't the issue. "We want more fringe benefits, better vacation pay, a little more pension."

In Illinois, Orval Stone, 56, of Johnston City, a shift supervisor, said, "I'm out because everyone else is. No one seems sure what we're getting."

"There's just too much hearsay and nothing settled," said Paul McClelland, of Waltonville, Ill., a miner for 28 years. "The whole thing is about contract terms. Too many fellows are not getting raises."

New York Leads Tax Collections

WASHINGTON (AP) — New York led the 50 states in federal tax collections during 1965, the Internal Revenue Service reported yesterday.

For the year which ended last Dec. 31, IRS collections reached $117.7 billion nationwide compared with $111.4 billion during the 1964 calendar year. Collections in New York last year totaled $21.1 billion, IRS said.

However, it added that collections in any one state don't necessarily indicate that states tax burden, since in many instances, a resident of one state may actually pay federal taxes in another.

Second largest collections for the year were in California with $10.68 billion followed by Michigan with $10.1 billion, IRS said.

The tax collection figures are gross amounts and make no allowance for refunds distributed during the year.

Army Still Seeking Coach; Dobbs Returns To Texas

WEST POINT, N. Y. (AP) Bobby Dobbs, leading candidate for the Army football coaching job, headed back to Texas Western Wednesday after further talks with West Point officials.

"Nothing was decided," an Army spokesman said. "Things still are in the discussion stage."

Dobbs is a former Army fullback who coached Texas Western to an 8-3 record last year, his first season at the school. He has four years to go on his contract there.

Army is seeking a replacement for Paul Dietzel, who gave up his job here a week ago to become coach and athletic director at South Carolina, taking five of his six varsity assistants with him.

Dietzel's departure came three days before the scheduled start of spring drills and forced a one-week postponement. Practice will open this Saturday with a drastically revamped coaching set-up.

Tom Cahill, Army's plebe coach the past seven years, will be in charge of spring practice if a head coach is not signed in time. He will be helped by Tad Schroeder, the lone remaining varsity assistant, and seven ex-college players who are stationed at West Point.

The former players are Dan Foldberg, Cammy Lewis, Bill Webb, Joe Franklin and Art Johnson, all of Army; Leon Cross from Oklahoma and Ken Hatfield from Arkansas.

Army's annual intersquad game, which marks the end of spring practice, will be held as scheduled on Saturday night, May 14.

Celts Advance To NBA Finals

The Boston Celtics had not beaten the 76ers at Philadelphia all season long, but when the playoffs (a little post-season fun which seems to have been instituted solely for the Celts) hit, they ripped their toughest foe twice on the road and took the Eastern finals, four-games-to-one.

The latest achievement was a 120-112 win in Philly Tuesday night which put Boston in the final round for the 10th straight year.

The Celtics' playoff opponent from the Western Conference will be either the Los Angeles Lakers or the St. Louis Hawks, who are currently battling with LA leading the series 3-2.

Netters Look For Fifth Straight

Tar Heels Face Toledo; Beat Same Team Tuesday

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

UNCs tennis team, its lengthy winning streak snapped, seeks to stretch a fresh victory skein to five today in a match with Toledo. The Tar Heels defeated the Ohio school Tuesday, 9-0.

Today's action begins at 2 p.m. on the UNC courts.

Florida State was the team that ended Carolina hopes for a second straight undefeated season. The Seminoles edged the Tar Heels, 5-4, on April 5. Coach Don Skakle's netters reversed the decision by the same score two days later.

In Tuesday's match, Gene Hamilton led the Tar Heels with a victory in the No. 1 singles match. Hamilton downed Toledo's Dean Eisner, 6-3, 2-6, 8-6. Toledo won only one other set all afternoon.

In No. 2 singles, Co-captain Bronson Van Wyck crushed Kramer, 6-1, 6-0. Bob Davis defeated Alleyne, 6-1, 6-1 in No. 3. Tom Chewning beat Leighton, 6-2, 6-1; Andy Goddard downed Bauska, 6-1, 6-2; and Jim Wadsworth smashed Boenk, 6-2, 6-0, in Nos. 4, 5 and 6 singles respectively.

The victories weren't so lopsided in the doubles matches. Hamilton and Nat West won the No. 1 doubles by defeating Eisner and Kramer, 6-4, 6-4.

In the No. 2 doubles contest, Van Wyck and Smokey Swenson had to go to three sets to down Alleyne and Willoughby, 8-6, 4-6, 6-4. Davis and Co-captain Ken Oettinger won the final doubles match, 6-3,6-3.

Following today's match the Tar Heels will have seven more contests before defending their Atlantic Coast Conference championship in the conference tournament May 12-14.

Last year UNC edged Clemson, 68-60, for the ACC team title. In addition, O. H. Parrish won the singles crown and teamed with Van Wyck to take the doubles, giving the Tar Heels a clean sweep of the top honors. Carolina has won four consecutive singles championships and eight straight doubles titles.

Saturday the Tar Heel netters begin a two - match road trip by playing Virginia in Charlottesville. Maryland follows on Monday. The Tar Heels return home to play Presbyterian next Thursday.

UNC's LEADING pitcher so far this year is southpaw Beattie Leonard. He has won two games, including a one-hitter against Georgia Tech. Sports Writer Sandy Treadwell will have a story on Leonard in tomorrow's DTH.

Net Streak Ends After 33 Straight

By JIM RAMBO
Special to the DTH

A cold night — a cold match — and Carolina's tennis winning streak ended at 33.

The racketmen spent a cold night in an unheated building on the FSU campus and then played colder tennis, dropping a 5-4 match to Florida State. Although minus their number two man, FSU played strong singles, winning 4-2 in that department.

The following day Tommy Chewning and Gene Hamilton inspired the team to a 7-1 win over the University of Florida. The number one doubles match was called because of darkness.

Thursday the Heels turned the tables on FSU, downing them 5-4 in a rematch. "We went out there to win and prove that we could beat them at full strength," Coach Don Skakle commented.

Monday the Tar Heels downed a strong Illinois team 8-1. en Oettinger, playing the number four spot, suffered the only Tar Heel loss of the afternoon. Coach Skakle said he was "pleased with the team's effort although the match was much closer than the score showed."

Tuesday the netmen crushed Toledo 9-0. Coach Skakle mixed up the lineup and played three unproven doubles combinations. "Against Illinois we had to play our strength but Toledo gave us a change to do some experimenting.

Delaney is attending St. Benedict's prep school. During the past basketball season he was selected on the New Jersey All Prep team, and captained the New Jersey all - stars in an Allentown, Pa. tournament which brought together all - area teams from northeastern regions.

In making the announcement, Smith said: "We feel that Jim is definitely of ACC backcourt ability. He is a typical Eastern backcourt man in that he is good playmaker and an excellent passer."

Frosh Beat Duke; State Here Today

North Carolina's Tar Babies blended nine hits, including two home runs, with Duke errors and walks to down the Blue Imps 11-7 yesterday on Emerson Field.

UNC starter and winner John Yancey (1-1) fanned the first two men to face him in the opening inning, but then gave up three runs before getting the side out. However, his team came back with five runs in the same inning on four walks, Danny Lee's two - run single, and a two - run homer by Barry Koch.

Duke, all of whose runs were unearned as the result of five Tar Baby errors, closed to within one (5-4) in the third, but a four - run Carolina rally sparked by Clem Medley's two - run homer clinched the win in the fifth.

The Tar Babies' record now is 2-1 going into this afternoon's home match against N. C. State. Duke is 0-4.

AAU Boxers Hit High Point

HIGH POINT (AP) — The 77th annual National Seniors AAU Boxing Tournament opens a three-day stand at High Point today with a field of 173 young fighters.

The field represents the best amateurs from all parts of the United States and comprises some 30 teams, including teams from all four of the services.

Those competing today, Friday and Saturday have withstood the test of competition in their own respective areas and are considered the best in their weight divisions in their own American Athletic Union districts.

The weigh-in and medical checkup are scheduled for 8-10 a.m. Drawings will be held a few minutes after 10, and the first bout will begin at 1 p.m.

The afternoon session will continue until around 5:30, and a two-hour break will follow. Action will resume with the evening session at 7:30.

The Friday schedule will follow the same pattern with both afternoon and evening programs scheduled.

AAAU titles will be decided in 10 weight classes: Flyweight 112 pounds; bantamweight 119, featherweight 125, lightweight 132, light welterweight 139, welterweight 147, light middleweight 156, middleweight 165, light heavyweight 178 and heavyweight.

This years field is the largest in several years, mainly because the use of headgear is optional this year for the first time, opening the door to the service entries. Service regulations demand that all boxers under military jurisdiction wear head protection in the ring.

Several defending champions from last year's national event at Maumee, Ohio, are back to defend their titles this time, along with most of the winners in the recent Golden Gloves tournament at Kansas City. The entries include teams from Continental United States as well as teams from Puerto Rico and British Columbia.

All matches are being held in High Point College's Alumni Gymnasium.

Cancer Campaign Extends Deadline

A drive to collect money from each school and department on campus for the 1966 Cancer Campaign has been extended until April 22.

Academic Affairs Chairman Marshall Smith announced yesterday that the contributions from each department are to be sent to him at the Utilities Building. The goal for this year's drive is $1500—$500 over last year's collections.

Tuesday Dr. Paul Wolf, Director of Experimental Pathology at the Detroit Institute of Cancer Research, announced that his research team had developed a new cancer treatment which had successfully stopped cancerous growths in two patients.

The new serum was injected into 20 seriously ill cancer patients. Two made full recovery and eight are still being treated.

According to Dr. N. E. Davis, the treatment is still in the experimental stage and will not be mass-produced for some time. The serum was developed over the past four years.

Correctional Group Cites Staff Needs

Sufficient trained staff at all levels of the correctional system was the major current need listed by a group of North Carolina corrections officials meeting at the Institute of Government yesterday.

Seven North Carolina officials met with Don Rademacher, consultant for the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, and three members of the Institute of Government staff.

Rademacher told the group that the federal government is interested in the needs of the correctional systems of each state and asked for suggestions to be passed along.

The major suggestion voiced by most of those attending the meeting was monetary assistance, possibly on a matching fund basis in the areas of training, personnel salaries and improvement of facilities.

Big Mo Has Flicks Again, Legally Now

Morrison is showing flicks again.

Only now they have official approval.

Academic Lt. Gov. Parker Hudson has announced a schedule of nine films to be shown on Friday and Sunday nights from now until the end of this semester.

He said films will be shown in the first floor social room at 7:30 and 9 p.m. Admission will be 25 cents per person. He said the charge is necessary to cover the cost of obtaining good flicks.

Hudson said there is a possibility that additional films will be added to this year's schedule. He plans to repeat the program next year if it is successful this year.

He said the Academic Boards of Morrison and Nurses Dorm will manage the showings.

The schedule of announced flicks is:

Friday, April 15: "Gunfight at O. K. Corral;" Friday, April 22: "Tarzan the Ape Man (the original);" Sunday, April 24: "Walk on the Wild Side;" Sunday, May 1: "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof;" Friday, May 6: "King Kong;" Sunday, May 8: "On the Waterfront;" Friday, May 13: "Hud."

Films have not been scheduled on nights when important campus-wide activities conflict.

Police Report Quiet Holiday

Thefts of several radios and televisions from residence hall rooms and a break-in of a vending machine marred an otherwise "quiet" spring vacation in Chapel Hill, according to police reports.

Some $30.25 was stolen from a cigarette vending machine in the Ehringhaus basement, but a suspect has already been picked up and questioned, Campus Police Chief Arthur J. Beaumont reported yesterday. The money was found in his coat, which he dropped while fleeing through the cemetery on South Road.

No Carolina students were involved in major accidents over the holidays, according to Dean of Men William Long.

There were several minor fires including one started by a clothes dryer on Barclay Road.

Overseas Study Position Open For Graduates

By DICK JONES
Special to the DTH

Would you like to do graduate study abroad?

Competition for the 1967-68 Fulbright graduate grants for academic study in foreign lands, and professional training in creative and performing arts, will open May 1.

UNC campus adviser for the Fulbright program is Dean Frank M. Duffey of the College of Arts and Sciences. Application forms and information are available at his office in 203 South Building. Application deadlines are not definite, but usually come in the early fall.

The Institute of International Education conducts competitions for government scholarships as a part of the educational and cultural exchange program of the State Department, under the Fulbright-Hays Act.

Candidates must be citizens at time of application, have a bachelor's degree or its equivalent and (in most cases) be proficient in the language of the host country.

Selections are made on the basis of the applicant's personal qualifications plus his academic and professional record.

Two types of grants—U. S. Government Full, and Travel Grants—will be made available.

Full awards provide tuition, maintenance, round-trip transportation, insurance and an incidental allowance. Accompanying dependents also receive an incidental allowance in some countries.

NCS Campus Radio Receives FM Privileges

The campus radio station at N. C. State was given permission from the Federal Communications Commission Wednesday to begin broadcasting on FM.

The station, WKNC, has been operating an AM carrier current station since 1945. Program manager Oliver Nobel said yesterday a telegram from the FCC said they could broadcast the FM signal as soon as the transmitters can be bought and tested.

The student legislature last spring appropriated money for the FM station. It should become operative within two to four weeks, Nobel said.

The station will have a range of four or five miles, depending on the humidity and time of day. Approximately half the student body at State live off campus.

"This means our listening audience will be increased by about 4,000," Nobel said. The FM signal will carry the same programming as the present AM signal.

Boorstin Spent 25 Years 'Rediscovering' World

By ANNE TILGHMAN
Special to the DTH

Dr. Daniel J. Boorstin, who will speak Monday at the 1966 Carolina Symposium, has devoted the last 25 years of his life trying to rediscover the meaning of American civilization.

By living abroad, he has been able to look at the United Staes from an outside perspective. In one of his books, America and the Image of Europe, he challenges many of the assumptions Americans have formed about themselves and their past. An individual, "unfashionable" writer, he does not allow contemporary prejudices to prevent his search to find the "authentic and indigenous" in the American way.

In his approach to the interpretation of American history, he has found unique ways to analyze our past for the future. In his book The Image or What Happened to the American Dream, he feels the American dream has been replaced by wealth, literacy, technology, and progress, to create a "thicket of unreality," which blocks reality and is more attractive. Americans of today, as opposed to those of the past, find it difficult to accept or even recognize reality.

Dr. Boorstin was born in 1914 in Atlanta, Ga. He was raised and attended public schools in Tulsa, Okla. In 1934 he graduated summa cum laude from Harvard. For the next three years he attended Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar, and attained highest honors in law. He received a doctorate for his work in legal history at Yale Law School on a Sterling Fellowship. From 1938 to 1944 he taught at Harvard and Swarthmore. Since 1944 he has taught at the University of Chicago. He has been a visiting professor at the University of Rome, Kyoto University in Japan, University of Paris and Trinity College, Cambridge University.

Author of 6 Books

Dr. Boorstin is convinced of the uniqueness of the American experience. Feeling that the study of history ought to be a voyage of self - discovery, he believes that historians can help people understand each other by leading them to recognize the distinction among each other's experiences. He feels Americans have the characteristic of comparing themselves to Europeans. We owe a great deal to Europe he says but we must develop self - respect and a clearer image of the "extent and limits of our confidence."

He is in the process of exposing the special character of the American culture in his trilogy, The Americans. He has also written The Genius of American Politics, The Lost World of Thomas Jefferson and The Mysterious Science of the Law.

Profs Get Letters In AAUP Drive

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Carolina professors have begun to receive mailed requests from the American Association of University Professors to donate money for the speaker ban law case and the response so far has been "just great" according to AAUP spokesmen.

"I have every faith this (drive) wil succeed," said Dr. Joseph W. Straley, local AAUP chairman. He predicted that most money raised by his group will help pay for court printing expenses.

Law Prof. Dan Pollitt, who helped compose the letter mail a few days ago, said most of the letters should have been received by today.

As of yesterday the drive had raised more than $500 "without an active campaign," before any letters had been mailed.

Straley declined to say how much money he had collected yesterday, but said the letter - writing campaign would be the limit of his active fund-raising project.

In most law cases, Straley said, the expenses are split between lawyer and court costs. However, the law firm of Smith, Moore ,Smith, Shell, and Hunter has agreed to take the case at a nominal fee.

Local AAUP treasurer Prof. David Brown was optomistic about the letter drive. "I am reluctant to give any specific figures right now," he said, "however, we have had a small but encouraging response so far."

The letter, signed by Straley, asks contributions "to this hopefully-final effort to rid ourselves of the Speaker Ban."

"If the students win, the Speaker Ban Law will be declared unconstitutional and void, restoring the situation to that traditionally enjoyed by the University until spring 1963 when the original Speaker Ban was enacted," the letter reads.

Donations should be sent to Brown, at 213-B Carroll Hall.

A resolution adopted last month by the annual meeting of the North Carolina AAUP asks every chapter in the state to collect funds for the court case. The resolution passed unanimously.

UNC Receives $138,000 Grant

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fourth District Rep. Harold Cooley announced yesterday that UNC will receive a $138,192 grant from the U. S. Office of Economic Opportunity to train some 100 teachers for Operation Head Start..

The program will consist of an eight - week instructional course for teachers from North Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee.

The course will prepare instructors to participate in the Head Start program, which helps equip under-privileged and backward preschool children for elementary school.

(Chapel Hill is in N. C. 's Fourth District. Cooley will be in town today, campaigning for re-election.)

ROTC Team Drills Today

The 19-man Air Force ROTC drill team left here Wednesday to compete in the annual national drill competition at the Cherry Blossom Festival in Washington, D. C.

The "Rammers," who have held the North Carolina state title for the past three years, finished 14th in a field of 48 ROTC drill teams in last year's national competition. This year, 40 teams will be competing Friday.

The teams will be judged on appearance and on their proficiency in regulation "monkey" drills.

The regulation drill will be judged according to the precision with which each team performs a set of prescribed movements.

The criterion for the "monkey" drill competition will be the originality and precision with which each team executes its own special sequence.

The "Rammers" will also march in the Cherry Blossom Festival Parade on Saturday afternoon.

Sitterson Praises Drive

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson said yesterday that he is pleased that Carolina students are taking such an active part in the campus-wide clothing drive being held this week by House "A" Morrison.

Today is the final day for the drive which began Wednesday. Clothes can be placed today in boxes provided in most dormitories, fraternities and sororities and the Scuttlebutt.

The clothes will be presented this afternoon at 4:30 to representatives of the Inter-Council of Churches in this area and the local chapter of the American Red Cross by Chancellor Sitterson, Student Body President Bob Powell and Bill Braswell, chairman of the drive.

Braswell urged every student to take part in the drive by donating any old clothes that might be used by less fortunate members of the community.

Sitterson said, "Carolina students have always felt a responsibility toward the needs of this area and have wilingly shared in meeting these needs. I am certain that the special need of clothing will find a ready response on the part of our students."

John Ellis, Governor of Morrison, has challenged the Nurses' Dorm to see which dorm can collect the largest amount of clothing.

Having Grade Problems? Writing Clinic Offers Help

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

So you study yard, memorize the texts and lectures, but still flunk the quizzes. And when you protest, your teacher insists you aren't able to communicate your thoughts properly.

If that's what's happening, E. Bruce Kirkham may be able to help you.

Kirkham, a part-time English instructor, directs a writing clinic here, teaching students how to please their profs with the right kind of prose.

"If you know a 'B's' worth, you should receive a 'B's' worth," Kirkham says, sympathizing with students who know more than they are able to show their teachers.

"But," he explains, "if you are out of the humanities and you are taking a course like history, the instructor may be more particular about your writing than your chemistry professor is."

His class meets three times a week, and his students carry "an average load of homework."

Several graduate students are enrolled, though not voluntarily. Traditionally, courses like Kirkham's have been required to move "cc" (composition conditions) qualifications, but he hopes students will come to him on their own, once they are aware of the writing clinic's benefits.

He is willing to enroll any student whose native language is English and has completed freshman English. Students can pre-register for the course; it's in the catalogue.

He says the writing clinic's level of instruction is elementary enough to make sense to people without a good English background, yet through enough to be worthwhile.

Kirkham stresses grammar, vocabulary, composition and spelling.

The grammar book is a programmed one which provides question-and-answer exercises to be done outside of class.

In the classroom he uses audio-visual aids, traditional instruction and experimental methods to clear up the mysteries of the subject, predicate and similar concepts.

Although Kirkham doesn't claim to perform miracles or train students to write flawlessly he says, "I can get them to the point so that if I say, 'That's a dangling participle,' they at least know what I'm talking about . . . They have an awareness of grammar."

Can Kirkham be of use to you? See how long it takes for you to figure out what's wrong with this sentence: "There is no salt water fish in Carr Pond."

You've spotted an error? Then you need Kirkham's course; the sentence is correct.

The course costs $10 and does not carry credit. Even so, with its hints on how to write for that super-critical philosophy instructor, it may be just the thing to keep you out of Viet Nam.

Apollo Astronauts On Campus Today For Mission Study

Editor's note: Although all of the nation's astronauts have trained at Morehead Planetarium, this is the first time that press coverage has been allowed.

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

Five astronauts, including the primary crew for the first manned earth-orbital Apollo mission, are currently training at the Morehead Planetarium here.

They are Lt. Col. Virgil I. (Gus) Grissom, USAF; Lt. Col. Edward H. White II, USAF, who made the historic walk in space; and Lt. Roger B. Chaffee, USN, comprising the primary crew.

The two members of the backup crew, also participating in the training, are Air Force Lt. Col. James A. McDivitt, and command pilot on the GT 4 mission; and civilian Russel L. Schweickart.

The training session will conclude today.

The astronauts are working with a simulator which gives the same view of the celestial sphere as the optical instruments in the Apollo Command Module.

This is the first visit of the team as a unit, though each of the men has attended individual training sessions at the planetarium.

Planetarium Director Anthony Jenzano said the group is working on "intensive recognition and celestial training" for the Apollo mission.

The major difference between the preceding Gemini and Mercury programs is that the men are concerned with specific stars throughout the entire celestial sphere to be used on the Apollo flights for navigation and experimentation.

Preceding the session at the planetarium, the astronauts worked out in Wollen Gym by playing handball.

Grissom said that this game was often played by the astronauts for physical conditioning because "It is a good game for fast hand-eye co-ordination training."

The men were in a jovial mood as they arrived at the planetarium yesterday afternoon, but said they did not have time to talk to anyone since they wanted to spend all possible time in the planetarium chamber.

On the way to the chamber, they joked about their flight to the Raleigh-Durham airport.

Grissom, the first to arrive came in a light blue NASA flight suit, but during the training session later, all the men wore civilian clothes.

The booth that the astronauts are using also contains remote

'Shadows' Assist Visiting Speakers

When the Carolina Symposium speakers arrive in Chapel Hill next week they will find themselves followed about by "shadows."

These shadows aren't F.B.I. agents, but are Carolina students assigned to cater to the needs of the dignitaries. They will help arrange transportation for the speakers, remind them of appointments and answer their questions.

The shadows must do "extensive research" on the speakers, the University and the Symposium, according to Shadow Chariman Jay Hanan.

John Kenneth Galbraith will be shadowed by Young Smith and Rusty Taylor, the Rev. Alan Richardson by Jack Spalding, Eleanor Stowe, Alan Marshall and Jimmy Barber; and Dr. Daniel Boorstin by David Lane and Bill Taylor.

Shadows for Dr. Walter Kaufmann will be Ray Farris and Susan Ehringhaus, while Nelson Algren will be assisted by Russell Banks and Betsy Morris; Morris Udal will be aided by David Lane and Wade Logan.

Satirist Al Capp will be shadowed by Armistead Maupin, one of Carolina's foremost satirists, Nelson Schwab and Robin West; Tom Wolfe will be followed by Christie Rucker, Chris Wright and Bernard Baldwin; and Dr. C. Vann Woodward will be assisted by Tom White and Taylor Branch.

Shadows for Ralph Ellison will be Kim Kyser and Beauchamp Carr.

Economist John Kenneth Galbraith will deliver the opening address for the Symposium on Sunday night in Memorial stin on "Myth and the Histor-Man."

"The Genesis of Myth" will be discussed on Monday in speeches by the Very Rev. Alan Richardson, Dean of England's York Cathedral, on "Myth and the Supernatural" and by historian Daniel Boorstin on "Myth and the Historical Process."

Wake Students Dance Protest Against Ban

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Several hundred Wake Forest College students staged a dancing protest Wednesday night against what they called the "social vacuum" on the campus. Dancing is banned at the college.

The protest was part of a campaign of the Better Politics On Campus Party. Students are in the midst of a student government election campaign.

Butch Pate of Dunn, party candidate for president of the student council, said dancing was spontaneous and was not designed to protest the controversial ban on dancing at the Baptist college.

A rock and roll combo called the Fabulous Five began playing about 8:10 p.m. in the main lounge of Reynolds Hall. At first only two or three people danced, including Pate. But by 9:30 more than half the 500 students present were dancing.

Jerry Baker of Kannapolis, campaign manager for the party, at first exhorted students not to dance. But after a while he stepped up and said, "Let loose. Be Wake Forest students. This is an example of what we as Wake Forest students can do if we unite."

Pate described the demonstration as "a bunch of students having a good time and taking a study break."

FRED C. FREE

Policeman Dies From Heart Attack

Campus policeman Fred C. Free, 58, died at 4:20 p.m. yesterday after suffering a stroke earlier in the afternoon.

A campus security officer for about 10 years, Free worked on the west side of the campus around the medical center. According to Campus Police Chief Arthur J. Beaumont, he was "popular" with students and hospital personnel.

He collapsed in the Dental School parking lot about 1:30. He had suffered from heart trouble for some while.

Free resided at 116 Dillard St. in Carrboro with his wife. Also surviving are a step-son, a step-daughter, and grandchildren. He was a Mason and a World War II veteran.

Pledges Clean Lot In Greek Week Activities

GREEK WEEK CO-CHAIRMEN Dan Howe (L) and Bill Nucciarone look over plans for the current clean-up campaign as some of almost 400 pledges clear a vacant lot on Franklin Street. The clean-up campaign is part of the Inter-Fraternity Council's plan to improve the town's impression of Carolina fraternities.

Over 400 pledges of Carolina's 24 social fraternities took part in a Greek Week work project yesterday to clean up the vacant lot on Franklin Street between the two service stations.

The lot had been collecting debris for over a year when the last work was done on the motel planned for the spot. The pledges worked in shifts from 1-6 p.m. yesterday, raking, burning and hauling off over 12 truck - loads of trash.

The clean-up project is the task selected for this year's Greek Week work day. Each pledge class receives points for one hundred per cent participation. These points go toward the award to be given by the IFC Monday night for the best pledge class.

Other pledge activities which are also contributing points toward the best pledge class award are scholarship, extra - curriculars, field day and carnival.

The pledge class of Zeta Beta Tau has the highest pledge class average for last semester with Delta Upsilon's pledge class in second place.

Field day events will be held today at 4 p.m. in Woollen Gymnasium. The five events include relay races, tug of war, up and down, shuttle dash and jump stick.

The points for the carnival were given during the Campus Chest Carnival held March 1. The ratings were made on most original idea, most money collected and best booth.

A tea will be given for the faculty Monday afternoon at 4 at the Wesley Foundation.

The climax of Greek Week will be the awarding of the trophy by the IFC for the best pledge class. This will take place Monday night in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m. All social fraternity pledges and the Greek Week committee members will be present for the presentation and a speech by Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont.

Bill Nucciarone and Randy Myers have been serving as co-chairmen of the Greek Week work project.

The Turnover

The new regime is in on second floor Graham Memorial today.

Sworn in before Student Legislature last night, Bob Powell now sits in the executive office of Student Government. Bill Purdy is his vice-president. The secretariat and treasury are in the hands of Judy Fletcher and Don McPhaul.

Throughout the campaign, we heard Powell, on the Student Party train, saying, "We're concerned," while Purdy for the University Party voiced the challenge, "Let us pick up the pieces."

There are enough pieces for any two good men to pick up, and there is definitely a need for concern about the students and the University.

Our concern is that Powell and Purdy work together lest their organization end up in pieces.

No one will argue that there has been little cooperation between Paul Dickson and Britt Gordon this year. In the first vote on the amendment to establish a presidential-vice presidential slate election system here, it was accepted as fact that the top two Student Government officials have never functioned together well when they have come from dfiferent parties.

But in the second ballot on this amendment students chose to retain the right to elect a president and vice president from opposing political parties.

Each candidate realized when he made his campaign promises that he might be working with a member of the opposite ticket. But he made the promises just the same.

The responsibility of leading the Student Government of this great University should go beyond the realms of party politics.

Powell and Purdy possess ability, intelligence and desire. If this is channeled into the same stream there should be no limit to its effectiveness.

The first item on the Student Party platform was "University and the State." As a plaintiff in the current law suit, Powell has no choice but to engage himself in this area.

But this should not take all his time. We urge him to leaf through his platform from time to time, noting promises for extensive work in residence halls and the residence college system, fraternities and sororities, academics, and judiciary and student welfare.

And we hope Purdy, in keeping with his own campaign promises, will strive to make Student Legislature serve the common good of all students.

Let the two complement each other's work, not contradict. Let them work long hours behind the scenes, but not a minute behind each other's back.

We offer our congratulations and our support to all the newly-elected members of the SG organization, and we urge you, the individual student, to whet your interest in its affairs.

Let this be a productive year for Student Government.

Well, Justices . . . . ?

From The Chapel Hill Weekly

If the United States Supreme Court doesn't have anything better to do—and there are times when it obviously doesn't—we would appreciate it very much if it would chew on this one for a while:

Does the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which forbids discrimination on the basis of sex, make the Selective Service Act illegal?

No Quizzes, Please

During the five days of April 17-21 UNC students will have an opportunity to share in a uinque educational exchange with some of the nation's most accomplished scholars, authors and statesmen.

A group of dedicated students has been working tirelessly with the Student-Faculty Committee for the past two years preparing the program for the 1966 Carolina Symposium.

Members of the Symposium have expressed worry that many students may not be able to take advantage of the program next week because of preparation for quizzes.

In a letter to the members of the faculty Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson said:

"I was asked to bring to your attention that the committee would be most appreciative if, in arranging your work for the semester, you could avoid giving major quizzes during the period of the Symposium."

This is an excellent gesture on the part of the committee and the chancellor, and we hope all faculty members will seriously consider the value of the Symposium and encourage their students to attend by rearrainging quizzes scheduled next week.

Sentenced To Seven Years

The Defense Of Andrei D. Synyavsky

(Editor's note—the following is the final defense statement of Soviet author Andrei Synyavsky, who was sentenced to seven years of hard labor Feb. 14, 1966 for publishing allegedly anti - communist works outside the Soviet Union under the pseudonym Abram Tertz. It was smuggled out of the closed trial and out of the Soviet Union and printed by the daily newspaper Il Giorno in Milan, Italy. This translation appeared in Atlas magazine, April, 1966.

Another Soviet writer, Yuli M. Daniel, who wrote poetry under the pseudonym Nikolai Arzhak, was sentenced to five years of hard labor by the same court.

Synyavsky had no time to prepare this statement and it was delivered extemporaneously before the judges.)

By ANDREI D. SYNYAVSKY

The arguments of the prosecution have not convinced me, and I stand by my original position. The arguments of the prosecution have created the impression of a soundproof wall through which truth cannot pass. The same quotations have been repeated again and again until they have become an obsession: "Lines, lines, lines . . lines of waiting people fanning out in all directions . . ." "To destroy prisons we have built new prisons." Their repetition has built up a monstrous atmosphere which no longer bears any relation to reality.

On Artistic Principles

The artistic device of repetition can be effective. It creates a curtain, a charged atmosphere that destroys reality and carries us into the grotesque — just as in the work of Arzhak and Tertz. It is a dark atmosphere, secret and anti - Soviet, concealing the open faces of the studious Synyavsky and the poet - translator Daniel and conjuring up plots, surprise attacks, acts of terrorism, pogroms and murders, murders, murders.

Political secrecy has been equated with the secrecy of degenerates, of cannibals, of people who follow their basest instincts, who hate mothers and their own people, who are Fascists and anti - Semites.

It is extremely difficult to dispel this atmosphere, and neither reasoned explanations nor artistic principles would help . . . I do not intend to bang my head against a wall, or try to demonstrate anything; it would be useless. I would like only to allude to some elementary literary principles: the word is not an act, it is only a word; the work of art is based on artistic conventions; and the author does not identify with his protagonist. This is the ABC of literature.

But the prosectuion stubbornly rejects such matters . . . We are faced with a monstrous distortion of meaning. Globov, the hero of "The Trial Begins," is probably not a bad man, but in line with the established rules of conduct of his time he makes anti - Semitic remarks: "Radinovich — shrewd, like all Jews . . ." It is clear the story is against anti - Semitism. But no, the author must be an anti - Semite; and so why not make him a Fascist too? Here logic comes to an end. The author is evidently a sadist and that's enough. Anti - Semitism is usually associated with extreme chauvinism. But, clearly, in this case we have to deal with an author who is remarkably subtle: he hates the Russian people and at the same time he hates the Jews. He hates everybody: mothers and the whole of mankind. The question arises, where did such monsters come from, from what swamp, from what cave? From somewhere, evidently from America, somebody dropped us down by parachute, me and Daniel, and we began to demolish everything. What scoundrels we are!

Because I Wanted To Write

Quotations from my articles have been read to prove that when writing in Russia about Socialist Realism my position was Marxist, and when writing for the outside world my position was idealist. Well, if I had been able to write from an idealist position was idealist. Well, if I had been abel to write from an idealist position here in Russia I would have done so . . . Even in the annual report on my conduct which was sent by the Literary Institute to the Committee of State Security after my arrest, I want to say that there was some truth; it said that my ideological position was vague, that I had written essays on Zvietaeva, Mandelshtam and Pasternak, and that I had deviated in that direction. I dedeviated because I wanted to write about them. I did all I could to express my real thought as Synyavsky. Because of that I have been harassed, I have been given warnings and been censured in the press and at meetings, and I have never been given any particular benefit except my salary.

A Shining Goal

You can go on repeating your quotations, but the result is nonsense. Is it true or isn't it that next to the sentence which you have repeated dozens of times, "To destroy prisons we have built new prisons" there comes a sentence — which I asked you to read — "Communism is a shining goal." But you didn't want to read that out.

The comrade public prosecutor spoke the following sentence: "Even the foriegn press says that these are anti - Soviet works." And I suddenly thought: what a wonderful way for the public prosecutor to display his objectivity! If even the foreign press realizes that, then it follows that we are obliged to do the same. What struck me above al was that "even." But even foreign journalists whose leanings are doubtful write of "the author's almost unshakeable fidelity to Communism" or say "Tertz writes of the revolution with enthusiasm, but he has an unorthodox attitude to what came afterward . . ." Why should these bourgeois writers say that Tertz is enthusiastic about the revolution? Why should they say that if we are Fascists?

The same criteria are being used to judge works of art and propagandist catch phrases. According to the prosecution, literature is a form of agitation and propaganda. Now agitation can only be either pro-Soviet or anti-Soviet. And if it isn't pro-Soviet, then it is anti-Soviet. I cannot agree with this argument.

Meaning of Butterflies

The critic Kedrina has said that no one would dream of trying to extract a political meaning from butterflies fluttering over a meadow. But this isn't a matter of butterflies fluttering over a meadow. Was not an anti - Soviet content detected even in Zoscenko? For that matter, in whom haven't they detected one? I can understand the difference: these people published their works here in Russia. But anti-Soviet meaning has been found everywhere, above all in satirical works. I cannot think of one single satirical writer of any repute who has not been accused of slander. And yet it is true that up to now, no one has ever been put on trial for a work of art

At certain times — revolution, war, civil war — the logic of "he who is not with us is against us" can be just, but it is very dangerous in times of peace, above all when it is applied to leterature I am asked, "Where is the positive hero? Ah, there isn't one! Then you're not a Socialist! You're not a realist! You're not a Marxist! You're an idealist! And on top of that you send your stuff abroad! Therefore, you are a counter - revolutionary!"

I Am a Soviet Man

In an unpublished story of mine there is a sentence I consider autobiographical: "Look, I'm an outsider. But I don't consider myself an enemy. I am a Soviet man and my works are not hostile." In this overheated and fanatic atmosphere every "outsider" can be considered an enemy, but this is not an objective way of finding out the truth. Above all I cannot understand what need there is to invent enemies, to accumulate monsters by taking works of art literally.

In all conscience I do not believe that literature can be judged by legalistic formulas. The nature of a work of art is complex; often the author himself is unable to explain it. I think that if even Shakespeare had been asked: what is the meaning of "Hamlet?" What is the meaning of "Macbeth?" 'Isn't there a catch? Not even he would have been able to give a precise answer. You, as lawyers, deal in terms which, the more narrow and exact they are, the better. But unlike your legal terms, the more precise the expression of a work of art, the wider its meaning becomes.

Charges Against Honor System Unsubstantiated

Editor's note — This is the second in a series of articles by the vice chairman of the Men's Council.)

By BILL MILLER

Is the honor system at the University of North Carolina a farce? This seems to be the conclusion of the eight recent editorials on the system, by former DTH editor Enrie McCrary. And why such a conclusion? "Either the expectations are too high or our performance is too low. When this disparity exists some rules are going to be broken, and when some are ignored the respect for all others is pitifully damaged."

The above statement points to the fallacy found throughout the articles — i.e., because certain rules are broken and disregarded, then our system is not functioning and is, therefore, a farce. The fact remains that the honor system is not infallible or ideal and that there will be violations. Furthermore we cannot expect all violations to be reported. But this does not point to low performance. Nor does this mean that we should fail to expect all students to uphold the Honor and Campus Codes. It is carrying matters to a precarious extreme to say that just because some infractions occur, "the respect for all others is pitifully damaged."

In resolving that the judiciary is farcical and ineffective, McCrary has mentioned several specific faults connected with it.

First, consider the charge that the Honor System "is not sufficiently respected." To document this criticism the editor cited 47.1 per cent of the Carolina coeds as having broken a women's rule. Admittedly, many of these rules are unnecessary; accordingly, they lend themselves to a degree of disrespect and disregard. Yet one cannot then assume that an appreciable number of coeds or male students view with the same disdain their responsibilities not to lie, cheat, or steal; to report others who do so; and to act in lady like or gentlemanly manner.

What the editor did not point out is that the Men's Council this past year has already handled 158 cases and the Women's Council, 64. Both totals are substantial increases over the previous year: 124 cases before the MHC and 40 before the WC.

And we may also gather some idea of the respect among students for an honor system from a recent study made at Columbia University. This study revealed that among American colleges and universities, there is much less cheating under an honor system than under a proctor system. In fact, the study discovered that some students (evidently those who want to cheat) would go so far as to sabotage an honor system in hopes of substituting the less effective proctor method in its place.

Secondly, consider the charge that "our honor system is honor by convenience," and that "honor by commitment is hardly known." Indeed, this is true of many students who are brought before a student court. Yet this attitude does not pervade the great majority of Carolina students, as evidenced when we consider the large number of violations which are reported. While no one can validly argue that all students abide by the codes because of a deep-seated commitment (certainly some uphold them out of fear of being caught or because of social conformity), still no one can assert that we have honor purely by convenience.

Thirdly, consider the charge that "the attitude with which members of the councils — students themselves — approach a student on trial is 'guilty until proven innocent.' " This charge is not true. All defendants who have no positive proof of guilt underlying the charge are exonerated.

As a fourth point, consider the charge that "despite their attempts at professionalization, the Council could yet use some lessons in courtesy." This statement was prompted by a lengthy hearing before the MC, and was used to support the contention that our honor system is a farce. What could be more desired by students than that their courts make concerted efforts to insure fair and thorough trials even if this results in a lengthy hearing and the postponement of another trial to an hour earlier than 12 midnight.

Finally, consider the charge that "one of the major weaknesses of the honor system is confusion surrounding the organization and functioning of the court system." The editor has remarked that an offender is uncertain as to the nature of his charge —i.e., whether or not it is a Campus or Honor Code violation — and that he does not know the council to which his case will be referred.

It is a safe assumption that if a student were fully aware of his responsibility to the two codes, he would not commit the offense in the first place. But once the act is perpetrated and a charge is made, the student is well informed by the Attorney General of the specifics of said charge as well as the very council hearing him. There is a preliminary hearing insured every defendant at least 72 hours prior to the trial, during which all procedural matters are explained.

The next article will examine both the case for open trials and the area of jurisdiction of the Campus Code.

"Pardon me. There's no problem. I thought you might be dancing!"

MARANTHA — UNC-G This "Production Study," televised at the University at Greensboro, is designed to both increase understanding of the Biblical Book of Revelations—as interpreted through a script adaptation of the religious work, written by Sister Virginia Marie of Notre Dame High School in Greensboro—and to illustrate a theatre form called "choreologia," by which the script is adapted to the stage. This adapation is provided by Mrs. Sara Lee Stadelman, artist-in-residence at the University at Greensboro and a director-actor of wide experience. Here Mrs. Stadelman explains the means of "choreologia" as four student-dancers demonstrate.

New Residence College Plans Get Psychiatric Assistance

By DEMONT ROSEMAN

Why put a psychiatrist on a committee designing a 21-story residence college?

He admits he doesn't understand dormitory construction

But his business is people. He knows something about the emotional and mental health of people who live on college campuses

"Any organization built up around people living together but without providing some form of interaction, doesn't lead to the practice of satisfactory inter - personal relations," says Dr. Clifford B. Reifler, director of psychiatric services for students at the University here

His committee responsibility, then, is to suggest how to build togetherness into campus living.

Dr. Reifler would like to see dormitories as sleeping quarters replaced by residence halls as living quarters.

It bothers him that in the usual college setup students go to classes in one area and live in another area.

He refers to this as "an unrealistic dichotomy between academic and life activities at college. It causes a blur between the intellectual and more general phases of college."

Anything to erase this unrealistic dichotomy, he believes, is good for students.

"It's a more mature way to function when thought (classrooms) and action (living quarters) are integrated," he says.

Even in the 1,000-student dormitories already on the campus, the student faces a problem of people-to-people relationships

Some of the newer dormitories here have a traffic pattern referred to as "centrifugal." Rooms are back to back and all students empty unsocially outward.

"A lot of college students dont have the social graces that make it easy to meet people," notes Dr. Reifler

"Like all skills, it takes practice

"The new design would provide an opportunity for this practice."

The administration of the University here has been concerned for some years about its rapidly growing size and complexity.

Almost three years ago a committee of the faculty, students and administration was formed to study the problems in the area of student residence halls and to seek solutions

Closely knit residential subunits were suggested for the sprawling UNC campus in an effort to maintain a small-college atmosphere and "to fight the encroachment of anonymity upon the Chapel Hill scene."

Residential colleges were established. Some freshmen in the same dorms were assigned to classes with roommates and neighbors. Intramural sports were set up between houses in residence colleges. Social activities were begun on a college basis.

A rotating faculty speakers' program was begun and chaplains working full-time with students were given specific college appointments.

In a recent report William G. Long, dean of men, reported that morale among students in the residence halls "is on the ascendancy. A new sense of dignity and self-identity is evident."

In addition to bringing freshmen together in a "Modern Civilization" course, plans are being considered for more togetherness in the English curriculum.

Now the interest is focused on cultivating the potential for togetherness in the massive 21-Story "Tower." Grouping won't do the total job, but it will help.

"Some students find friends regardless of how bad the grouping may be," says Dr Reifler.

"Others won't find friends regardless of what we can do.

"But the in-between majority can be helped or hindered by groupings."

The ultimate goal of dormitory design, residential colleges and grouping schemes is to give students a chance to develop their own identities.

Dr. Reifler puts it this way: "We want to create an environment in which the opportunity to mature is greater.

Clay Appealing 1-A Status On Grounds Of Hardship

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cassius Clay, the heavyweight boxing champion is appealing his 1-A draft classification on grounds of hardship, a National Selective Service spokesman said Thursday.

The spokesman said the fact that Clay has filed an appeal in Kentucky means he did not seek to be clasified as a conscientious objector. This would not be done through the appeal procedure.

Clay recently was reclassified from 1-Y, qualified for military service only in the event of a national emergency, to 1-A, available for servie at any time.

In January Clay divorced his wife, Sonji, and was ordered to pay her $1,250 monthly for 21 months.

Last week Clay escaped a 30-day jail sentence in Miami for contempt of court by two hours when, his lawyer said, friends provided $26,250 to pay two months back alimony, $23,500 of legal fees and $250 for expenses of Sonji for a trip to Miami.

Clay is a member of the Black Muslim sect and prefers to be known as Muhammad Ali. Because of his Black Muslim membership there have ben reports he would seek to be classified as a conscientious objector.

The selective service spokesman said the papers in the Clay case are still in Kentucky. He said he understood the appeal is on its way from Clay's local draft board in Louisville to Kentucky State Selective headquarters, which will forward it to the State Appeal Board.

Should the appeal board vote unanimously against Clay the normal appeallate procedure would be instigated. Under a split vote he could take his case to the National Appeal Board.

However, either the state or national selective service director could appeal for Clay to the National Appeal Board, should they elect to, even if the state board ruled unanimously against him, the spokesman said.

Grad Basketball Nears End

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The return from the Easter break finds the intramural department competing with the National Basketball Association for the longest season. The end is in sight, however, as the graduate tournament narrows itself down.

Law IV defeated the Fellowship of Christian Athletes on Wednesday, 63 - 55. Charlie Shaffer led a marvelously balanced scoring attack with 23 points. Richard Vinroot had 11, Pud Hassell 10, Brown 10 and Dockery 9. Frankie Gibbs scored 14 and Jimmy Byrd 11 for the FCA. The Lawmen jumped off to a 30-22 lead at halftime, then matched baskets with the FCA in the second half to win.

Med Blue won the right to meet Law IV for the graduate title when the doctors beat Law II, 56-49. Bill Jarman paced the Med attack with 23 points while Tom Koontz added 12 more. Jerry Trammell scored 19 and Bill Barr 13 for Law II. Med Blue took a 30-24 halftime lead and won with no strain.

Med Blue played Law IV and KA Blue met the Mangum Mugs last night. Results will be carried in tomorrow's DTH.

In intramural softball Wednesday, the Connor UFO's annihilated the Alexander Mooses, 26-1. Cain and Young each belted a pair of home runs for Connor while Gard and Haseman contributed one each.

ATO Blue II pounded AK Psi White, 17-1. After trailing 1-0 in the first inning, ATO scored two in the second, then put all kinds of walks, errors and singles together for seven runs in the third and eight in the fourth.

The Teague Trojans whacked the Teague Totalers, 17-3. Leading by only 5-2 in the third inning, the Trojans erupted for 12 runs to salt the game away. Stockton and Williams cracked Trojan home runs.

The Avery Alcoholics held off the Parker Studs, 8-6. Avery built up a 6-0 lead before Parker came storming back, only to fall short. Biggerstaff and Miller had home runs for the Alcoholics.

The ZBT Zebes spotted Phi Delt White a 4-0 lead, then rallied to win, 8-6. Kohn's home run capped a five-run second inning to send ZBT ahead. Phi Delt tied it, then ZBT won with two in the fourth.

Two Booters May Earn Olympic Spot

Two UNC soccer players have been chosen to compete in trials this weekend for the 1968 Olympic team.

Jim Hammer of Princeton, N. J., center half, and Jackie Writer of Nyack, N. J., will travel to Trenton State College in New Jersey for the special event on Saturday and Sunday. Both Tar Heel stars are rising seniors.

"It's a real honor for the two players," said UNC coach Marvin Allen. "They will be among the finest college players in the nation." The team which will represent the United States in Mexico City in 1968 will be comprised of college and amateur players across the country.

ECC Names Tom Quinn As Head Basketball Coach

GREENVILLE, N. C. (AP) —Tom Quinn, who has averaged 20 wins a season in eight years as a head coach, was tapped Thursday to build growing East Carolina College into a Southern Conference basketball contender.

Athletic Director Clarence Stasavich announced in Greenville that Quinn would succeed Wendell Carr, who resigned Feb. 23 after three years as basketball coach.

"The administration of East Carolina is very happy with the selection of Quinn as the man to build a strong basketball program," Stasavich told newsmen.

"He is a young, aggressive coach who has had successful coaching experience and we feel he will be able to organize the type of program that East Carolina College is trying to obtain."

The 35-year old Quinn, who has rolled up a 161-45 record in eight years of coaching, said he would not take over full-time until July 1. But he added his weekends are mostly free "and I intend to use this time recruiting."

Quinn admitted that the late date of the appointment would be a handicap in recruiting basketball players this year.

"I feel the coaching job at East Carolina is a tremendous challenge and a great opportunity," Quinn said. "It is perhaps the greatest challenge of my coaching career. I would like to be able to say we will win them all next year, but I'm more realistic than that."

As for his coaching philosophy, Quinn said he knew all players wanted to win, but he wanted to instill in them a distaste for losing. In close games he added, "the difference is in wanting to win and hating to lose."

Terms of Quinn's contract at East Carolina were not revealed.

Dr. Wendell Patton, president of High Point College, was out of town and unavailable for comment on Quinn's departure. No announcement is expected from there on a successor for Quinn until Patton returns in about 10 days.

Dr. David Cole, dean of High Point College, said applications for the basketball post would be accepted immediately.

Not only will Quinn be leaving, but High Point's athletic director, Jim Hamilton, announced some time ago that he was accepting a similar position at Western Carolina College.

Carr resigned as head basketball coach at East Carolina on Feb. 23 after his team lost 76-74 to Richmond in the first round of the Southern Conference tournament at Charlotte. There were only four seniors, including three lettermen on the 1966 East Carolina squad.

In three years as head coach, Carr's teams won 32 games and lost 40. The 1966 record was 11-15 and the Pirates finished fifth in the Southern Conference. Carr, a native of Muncie, Ind., played basketball at Wake Forest College.

Carr is still teaching physical education at East Carolina. He has not announced any future plans, but says he would like to remain in coaching.

In 1958, Quinn became head coach at Newberry, S. C. College where in four years his teams had a 66-24 record. In 1963, he joined High Point's staff, rolling up a 95-21 record. Quinn's High Point teams won the Carolinas Conference championships in 1963, 1964 and 1965. His 1966 team won the regular season title, but lost in the tournament.

Frosh Down State, 8-0

The freshman baseball team defeated the Wolflets from State by a score of 8-0 on Emerson Field yesterday.

Garry Hill won his second game of the season in as many starts. The frosh "stopper" gave up only three hits and went all nine innings.

Hill pitched a no-hitter in the season's opener against State on April 2. The Charlotte fastballer extended his streak of hitless innings to thirteen yesterday.

The first State hit came off the bat of first baseman Clay Kennedy in the fifth. Right fielder John Rowand hit sadely in the fifth and eighth innings.

Leading the offensive attack for Carolina were third baseman Ronnie Lemonds with three hits, first baseman Ronnie Leigh with three and centerfielder Clem Medley with two.

Tar Heel Netters Score Second Straight Shutout

By BILL GORDON
DTH Sports Writer

Sophomore Gene Hamilton, nationally ranked in the top ten, remained undefeated in varsity competition as he led the UNC tennis team to their second straight shutout victory over Toledo yesterday, 9-0. Hamilton, from Asheville, defeated Toledo's top man, Dean Eisner, in the first set, 6-1, before Eisner was forced to default due to a pulled hamstring.

Toledo, who shutout N. C State on Wednesday, could only manage to win one set during the entire contest when they won the second set of the No. 2 doubles match. Other than this set it was UNC all afternoon.

Carolina performed excellently even in the absence of three regular players. Junior Bronson Van Wyck injured his ankle against Toledo on Tuesday and could not compete. He is expected to be ready for Saturday's compeition against Virginia. Doubles player Billy Trott has a case of the flu and Coach Don Skale decided he should not compete in such weather conditions. No. 5 man Co-captain Ken Oettinger is remaining by his wife's side as she expects her first child.

Along with Hamilton the other members of the tennis team played a flawless game. Number two man Bob Davis defeated Toledo's Kramer, 6-1, 6-3. Also for Carolina Tom Chewning downed Alleyne, 6-1, 6-3; Nat West beat Leighton, 6-3, 6-2; Andy Goddard outplayed Bauska, 6-4, 6-2; and Smokey Swenson defeated Willoughby, 6-1, 6-1.

The UNC netters also handily captued the three doubles matches. Bob Davis and Andy Goddard teamed up to defeat Eisner and Kramer of Toledo, 6-3, 6-2; Richard Holderness and Gene Hamilton paired to down Willoughby and Alleyne.

DTH Sports Quiz

1. No player has ever won the Baseball Writers Association Most Valuable Player award four times. Name the two National League and four American League players who won the MVP prize three times.

2. Two basketball players gave Furman a total of four consecutive major college individual scoring titles. Who were they?

3. Jack Nicklaus recently became the fourth golfer to win as many as three Masters championships. Who were the other three?

4. Probably the most appropriate name in the history of sports was that of the horse who handed Man o' War his only defeat. What was the name?

5. John Pennel, the first man to pole vault 17 feet, was also the first to break the 16-foot barrier. True or false?

(Answers to yesterday's quiz.)

1. False. The New York Yankees swept the 1927 World Series in four games from the Pittsburgh Pirates and duplicated the feat a year later against the St. Louis Cardinals. The Yankees turned the trick again in 1938-39 against Chicago and Cinciannati.

2. The Cleveland Browns lost the 1952 and 1953 NFL title games to the Detroit Lions, 17-7 and 17-16. In 1954, however, the Browns turned the tables and routed the Lions, 56-10.

3. False. Marciano was the only unbeaten heavyweight king. Tunney lost a fight to Harry Greb when he was a light-heavyweight.

4. Eight horses have captured the Triple Crown. The first was Sir Barton in 1919. The last was Citation in 1948.

5. UNC has not fared too well in the Sugar Bowl. The Tar Heels lost the 1947 game to Georgia, 20-10, and dropped the 1949 battle to Oklahoma, 14-6.

NL To Appeal Court Decision Against Braves

CINCINNATI (AP) — National League President Warren C. Giles said Thursday the league will file an immediate appeal from a Wisconsin court decision which ordered the Atlanta Braves to play all their home games in Milwaukee unless the city is given a franchise for 1967.

Giles pointed out that a Fulton County, Georgia, court already has enjoined the league and the Braves from playing home games anywhere but in Atlanta.

He also said a Federal Court in Houston, Tex., has ordered the league not to change its 1966 schedule which calls for Braves' home games to be played in Atlanta.

"The league expects the appeal to establish that the Milwaukee court has no jurisdiction or power to force the league and the Braves to return to Milwaukee or to provide an expansion team to play in a state which charges that the National League is violating its antitrust laws," Giles' statement said.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Braves, Birds Will Cop Flags

The Baltimore Orioles and the (Atlanta, Milwaukee, Hong Kong) (Check one) Braves should meet in the World Series this fall. Strong hitting and adequate pitching will be the key to success for both teams. Neither club will have an easy time, however. The National League will have its uaual cavalry charge with six teams deserving serious consideration as pennant threats. Even the American League has several teams with flag potential.

Baltimore pulled off one of the biggest steals since the Brinks robbery when they got Frank Robinson from Cincinnati. True, the Birds gave up a good pitcher in Milt Pappas; but Robinson more than makes up for that loss. In fact, the ex-Redleg should be the best player in the American League. Last year big Frank slugged 33 homers and drove in 113 runs. He hit "only" .296, but should rebound into the .300-plus levels this year.

If Frank Robinson is the best player in the AL, the second-best may be another Robinson, his teammate, Brooks. Last year this Robinson hit .297 with 18 home runs and 80 runs batted in. At third base, Brooks is the best there is. With last year's top AL rookie, Curt Belfary, and John "Boog" Powell adding their big bats to the attack, the Orioles should have more than enough power.

Pitching and catching are the questionable factors for Baltimore. Pappas won 13 games last year that someone else has to win now. Steve Barber figures as the solid man of the staff. Wally Bunker and Dave McNally should improve off last year's performances. (Bunker slumped from 19 wins in 1964 to 10 last season.) Young Jim Palmer showed in his first start that he may be the man to replace Pappas when he beat Boston 8-1, giving up only five hits.

The loss of Dick Brown because of brain surgery this spring leaves a big hole at catcher. Rookie Andy Etchebarren will be under a lot of pressure to fill the gap, but he is something of a good-field, no-hit type. The rest of the Bird bombers may be able to cover the gap, however.

The Orioles will be pressed hard by defending champion Minnesota, Detroit and perhaps Chicago and New York. The Twins and Tigers figure toughest. Minnesota has the hitting in guys like Oliva, Killebrew and MVP Ziolo Versailles. Pitching is a question mark, though. Camilo Pascual must bounce back from an arm operation, and Jim Grant must prove he is really a 20-game winner. Second base for the Twins is anybody's guess. The Tigers have the pitching, but too many hitters have to have better years than they did in 1965.

In the National League, the Braves will have to go down to the wire to edge Philadelphia and Los Angeles, with San Francisco, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati close behind. Atlanta can't match the Dodgers or Reds in pitching, but with their hitting, the Braves don't need Koufax and Drysdale. Hank Aaron is about as good as hitters get these days. Add in sluggers like Joe Torre, Felipe Alou, Eddie Mathews and Rico Carty, and you have a good reason for pitchers to go into some other line of work.

Tonly Cloninger heads a Brave pitching staff that should be able to hold the opposition to fewer runs that the Brave hitters will produce. Behind Cloninger are Wade Blasingame, a 22-year old who won 16 games last year, Ken Johnson and Denny Lemaster. A return to form by Lemaster would help a lot. (He only won seven last year.)

Any team with Sandy Koufax and Don Drysdale has got to be tough, and the Dodgers will be. That 32-day holdout didn't help the two aces, though, and in a race as tight as this one is likely to be, any games they lose in April while rounding into form could be costly.

Philadelphia made a wonderful trade with the Cardinals, coming up with Bill White and Dick Groat, half of the infield that was called the best in baseball in 1964. All they lost was a part-time outfielder (Alex Johnson), a catcher who hit .224 (Pat Corrales) and an unhappy pitcher with a 6.21 ERA (Art Mahaffey). Richie Allen, Tony Gonzales and John Callison will help give the Phillies a solid attack. Jim Bunning, Chris Short and Ray Culp are a good nucleus for a pitching staff. If the Phillies have recovered from the horror of 1964, they could be tough.

It would come as no great surprise if Cincinnati, San Francisco or Pittsburgh won the pennant. The Reds have great pitching, especially if Jim O'Toole returns to pre-1965 form. They don't have Frank Robinson, though. The Giants have Willie Mays and Juan Marichal, and that's about half a ball club. Their pitching doesn't seem to be deep enough, however. The Pirates may not have quite enough pitching either.

The Braves and the Orioles are the picks, but I should warn you: I picked Liston to stop Caly in three.

New Diamond Will Be Used

UNC Faces Undefeated Clemson

By BILL ROLLINS
Assistant Sports Editor

Carolina's Tar Heels will be out to beat a Clemson unbeaten baseball string which has stretched to 21 games when right-hander Danny Walker (1-1, 3.98 ERA) begins firing at the ACC-leading Tigers at 3 today.

This will be the first game played on the new, still unnamed diamond located next to Avery Dorm across from Navy Field.

The last time Clemson lost a baseball game was April 30 of last year, when the Tar Heels won by 4-3 on Emerson Field. The Tigers won their last eight last year, and have clubbed their way to a 12-0-1 mark this spring, the tie coming in a 13-inning, darkness-shortened, 12-12 standoff with Ohio. In the ACC, Clemson is 6-0.

The Tigers have a team batting average of .361, and are scoring and hitting safely at the rate of 12 and 13 per game respectively.

Power? They've got that too, having smacked 26 homers, 29 doubles and 13 triples. The team slugging percentage is a whopping .639.

All of the Tigs' eight regulars are batting over .300, led by right fielder Keith Waters at .409 and third baseman Larry Cowart's .404. Cowart leads the team in RBI with 21, while sharing the home run lead with left fielder George Sutton at six each. Sutton has 17 RBI.

Clemson Coach Bill Wilhelm will throw his top pitcher, Charlie Watson (5-0, 2.41 ERA) at Carolina's belters, who are led by Danny Talbott's nine RBI and .456 average.

Carolina's lineup will have left fielder Bob Hume (.288) leading off, followed by either Mike McLaughlin or Nolan Leonard at shortstop. Talbott will hit third, with cleanup man Bob Bonczek (.340) in right field, followed by catcher John Shaw (.279). Center fielder Charlie Carr (.286) bats sixth, with third baseman Rod Thomspon (.316) and second sacker Charlie Thomas (.320) preceding Walker in the order.

Beattie Leonard

Lone Hit In Sixth Inning Ruins Beattie's No-Hit Bid

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

Two out. Sixth inning.

Beyond left field football players ran through spring practice drills.

The scoreboard behind the right field fence read Visitors-3, Georgia Tech-0.

The people in the old concrete stands enjoyed the warmth of an Atlanta afternoon. There weren't many spectators at the game. Georgia Tech's record was 4-7. The students had decided to ignore their ball team. One man gazed intently out at the mound and watched his son take a sign from Tar Heel catcher John Shaw.

The pitcher began his motion and his left arm threw a slider into Shaw's mitt. The umpire raised his arm signaling a strike.

"That away Beattie boy," Red Thompson called from his third base position.

"Way to fire Beatt," a player yelled from the Carolina dugout.

The word had spread around the dugout and the bull pen in the fifth.

No Hits

"How many hits have they had?" it was asked. "None." "None?! Moonbeam's pitching a hell of a game out there!"

Now everyone was silent. Leonard threw a ball past shortstop Ken Bonifay's bat for an 0-2 count.

The Tar Hel manager looked over the scorebook. It showed that Leonard had struck out the first man to face him in the ball game. Then he walked the second man and got out the side on a pop fly to shortstop Mike McLaughlin and a force out from second baseman Charlie "Fox" Thomas to McLaughlin.

In the second inning the leadoff hitter reached base on an infield error and then Beattie retired the next nine batters consecutively.

In the fifth, Tech left fielder W. J. Blane reached second on a deep fly ball which dropped from Bob Hume's glove after a long and exasperating chase. Blane died on base as the next three Tech hitters went down in order.

So there it was. Two away in the sixth with two strikes on Bonifay. Leonard might do it, the manager thought, he might throw one.

Through the Hole

Leonard threw the third pitch and Bonifay hit the ball through the hole between third and short for the first Tech hit of the ball game.

"There it goes," a Carolina player said in the dugout. "On an 0-2 count. It's a damn shame. Anyway, the pressure's off."

In the final three innings Leonard continued to rely on his slider.

In the seventh only one Yellow-Jacket reached base, and that was on a walk.

Leonard retired the side 1-2-3 in the eighth.

In the bottom of the ninth inning Beattie walked the leadoff man. Another Thomas-to-McLaughlin combination forced him out at second base. Pete Caldwell, Tech's third baseman, flied out to Bob Bonczek in right for the second out. Then Danny Talbott scooped up Blane's grounder and stepped on first for number three.

The game was over. Leonard had struck out eight men and had given up one hit. No Carolina varsity pitcher has ever thrown a no-hitter since 1950.

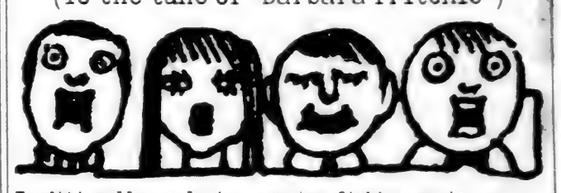
Presenting The Drinking Song for Sprite:

"ROAR, SOFT-DRINK, ROAR!"

(To the tune of "Barbara Fritchie")



Traditionally, a lusty, rousing fight song is de rigeur for every worthy cause and institution. But we wrote a song for Sprite anyway. We'd like you to sing it while drinking Sprite, though this may cause some choking and coughing. So what? It's all in good, clean fun. And speaking of good, clean things, what about the taste of Sprite? It's good. It's clean. However, good clean things may not exactly be your idea of jollies. In that case, remember that Sprite is also very refreshing. "Tart and tingling," in fact. And very collegiate. And maybe we'd better quit while we're ahead. So here it is. The Drinking Song For Sprite. And if you can get a group together to sing it--we'd be very surprised.

Roar, soft drink, roar!
You're the loudest soft drink
we ever sawr!
So tart and tingling, they couldn't keep you quiet:
The perfect drink, guy,
To sit and think by,
Or to bring instant refreshment
To any campus riot! Oooooh--
Roar, soft drink, roar!
Flip your cap, hiss and bubble,
fizz and gush!
Oh we can't think
Of any drink
That we would rather sit with!
Or (if we feel like loitering)
to hang out in the strit with!
Or sleep through English lit' with!
Roar! Soft drink! Roar!
Yeahhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh, SPRITE!

Sprite

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

controls for the planetarium's Zeiss projector, so that the man working in the both can select the area of the sky to be viewed.

Since only one man can work in the booth, the others use hand-held instruments for practice observations.

The Morehead Planetarium has been the exclusive training center for celestial observation for the astronauts since the beginning of the United States manned space flight effort.

The first training program for astronauts was begun in 1960.

By making adjustments on the projector, the planetarium instructors working with the crews can show the men the specifific sky they will see on their launch days or any other selected dates.

Jenzano said that astronauts generally visit two or three times before participating in a mission.

He said that there were no regular schedules for the crews, indicating that they worked between the regularly scheduled planetarium programs open to the public.

Jenzano said the group would probably get about eight hours of intensive training during their two days in Chapel Hill.

He also said that the men will probably sit through some of the public performances and work individually during this time.

The director said that often the astronauts come on little or no notice from various parts of the country, and that the planetarium is alwasys ready to work with them.

Bag Rule Halts Textbook Use

The Institute of Government here has temporarily stopped using a text for law enforcement offices which contradicts the recent state ruling banning liquor outside the home.

Until last month, classes at the Institute had been studying the 102-page "Regulation of Intoxicating Liquors in North Carolina." The liquor ruling, made by State Attorney General Wade Bruton, came last week.

According to the book, written by Ben F. Loeb, "brown-bagging" and "locker clubs" are illegal in counties where residents have voted for ABC stores.

The book, however, clearly states that in counties not accepting ABC sales, brown-bagging and practicing the locker club or key club methods to duck the liquor laws are all illegal.

Constitutional Combo Party

A party planned for Saturday night by Morehead Residence College will be held only if the college constitution is approved by residents and Dean of Men William Long.

The vote on the constitution, held after the Daily Tar Heel went to press last night, must approve the constitution or there will be no funds available.

The Zookeepers, a local combo, are scheduled to play for the college's party.

Approval of college constitutions arose after Long felt that the college structures should be "financially stable."

Letters Abroad Wants You

Letters Abroad, a voluntary, non-governmental organization, is inviting students to participate in its work on behalf of world friendship among young adults.

The organization offers pen-friendship with a college-age contemporary abroad of similar interests. Since 1952 it has rendered this service to 750,000 persons in 145 nations.

DTH Judged As Top College Daily

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The Daily Tar Heel was notified yesterday that it was selected as the best college daily in the Southeastern College Newspaper Competition.

It was also awarded first place for its editorial page, first place for a regular column (Davie Rothman's), first honorable mention for the best news writing and fourth honorable mention for its all-around excellence.

The judging for the awards in the Southeast. The Nashville Tennessean selected the Dth as the best college daily. G. W. Churchill of the Tennessean said that the only newspaper that was a close challenger for the award was The Daily Athenaeum, West Virginia University.

Churchill said, "Both papers are well - written, well laid-out; papers the colleges and staffs which produce them can be proud of. I gave first place to The Tar Heel because of slightly neater layout, somewhat better photography and use of pictures, a slightly greater variety in feature story subject matter and perhaps a bit brighter writing."

The Norfolk Virginian Pilot & Ledger - Star said in giving it the best editorial page award that The Daily Tar Heel had "conspicuously the most professional page of the 30 submitted." the judges noticed that DTH editorials were reprinted in some of the other

William L. Tazewell, Associate Editor of the newspaper, said, "The editorials are relevant and well - writte, the editorial features are lively and varied and the page is attractive to the eye.

"The editorial cartoons of Chip Barnard, which have point and style, are the only ones in the contest papers to display either quality."

The Charleston News & Courier in awarding David Rothman the best regular column award said that his articles were "clever, intelligent satire which appears to be absent from most college newspapers."

Past Tar Heel editor Ernie McCrary and columnist David Rothman have been invited to attend the awards banquet to be held May 13 at the Manor House near Hollins College in Virginia.

Pledges Have Greek Week Fun-And-Games

With grunts, huffs and puffs, nearly 400 fraternity pledges sweated their way through the last day of Greek Week Friday.

But it was a fun-and-games sort of day in Woollen Gym, with the pledges competing for points in a tug-of-war and various relays, like the one where a guy would run around a chair with a baseball bat and when he got back, eight of his pledge brothers would be standing in line waiting to jump over it.

The loudest grunts came from the tug-of-war area. All it took was one foot's slipping and a whole pledge class fell like dominoes and got pulled across the line.

The pledge class with the highest number of points for the field day games, scholarship, extra - curricular activities and carnival booth will be presented with an IFC trophy by Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont at 8 p.m. Monday in Gerrard Hall.

Dave McFadden, of Hickory, a sophomore pledge to Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity, summed up Friday's field day as "a hell of a lot of fun." said, "it strengthens unity."

THE CAMPUS-WIDE CLOTHING DRIVE ended as a success yesterday afternoon as (L to R) Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey and drive chairman Bill Braswell presented the truck load of clothing to Mrs. George Clifford of the Inter-Church Council and Mrs. L. C. Neville executive secretary of the local chapter of the American Red Cross. Braswell, who is also president of House "A" Morrison, which sponsored the drive, said that he appreciated all the generous contributions of clothing that the Carolina students had given. The clothing will be distributed to needy families in the Chapel Hill area by the clothing center of the Inter-Church Council with the help of the Red Cross.

UNC Glee Club Packing For Trip To Europe

By BOB N. GARNER
Special to the DTH

Europe seemed as far away as the moon to the UNC Glee Club last year.

When members first came to Director Dr. Joel Carter with the idea for a European Tour, they found that they would need at least $30,000 to pay for transportation, lodging and meals for the club's 40 men.

It was enough to make strong men quail.

The UNC singers, however, had no intention of giving up. Under the leadership of Concert and Tour manager Alvin Tyndall, they set quietly to work to amass what amounted to a small fortune.

A call for help went out in 200 letters; 1300 to Glee Club Alumni. From these letters alone, $14,000 found its way to the Glee Club office in the basement of Hill Hall. A bill was introduced in Student Legislature which resulted in a $3,000 appropriation from Student Government funds and club members dug good naturedly into their bank accounts and cut down on extra spending to come up with $200 apiece, totaling $8,000 for the entire membership.

Contributions have arrived from unexpected sources and in unexpected forms. One envelope had a Hollywood postmark and contained a check for $500 from a former Glee Club president. It was signed Andy Griffith.

Another alumni sent a congratulatory letter and a certificate for one share of stock in Xerox Corporation. He was Lyman B. Whittaker, a retired businessman from Indianapolis, Ind. who sang in the club from 1907 to 1911.

"As a member of the Glee Club more than half a century ago, I was delighted to hear of the invitations you have received from several European countries to appear as their guest," Whittaker said. "This is indeed a tribute to your organization and the recognition of its accomplishments. You are to be contratulated."

Burlington Industries has offered to outfit the entire group in new summer - weight blazers free of charge, and the Alumni Giving Council sent a check for $1,000.

The departure date for the tour is June 15th and the Glee Club is still around $5,000 short of the $30,000 goal. Final plans are being made with confidence that the money will be raised.

Ehringhaus Recount OK

The Constitutional Council validated Ehringhaus Residence College's oft - counted ballots Thursday and three legislators were sworn in.

The election was being appealed because of charges that someone had tampered with the ballots — causing the tallies to change every one of the four times they were counted.

Earlier this week, the council had upheld former Student Body President Paul Dickson's ruling that fraternities and sororities could not receive funds for colored television sets because of their secret constitutions and by - laws — and, in some cases, discriminatory clauses.

Student Legislature passed a bill in March saying that the Greek letter organizations could receive the aid, Dickson vetoed it, the legislature repassed it and Dickson issued the order suspending it.

What the legislature will have to do now is to repass the bill a third time — this time as an amendment to the constitution, since the constitution now makes funds available only to those organizations which will offer their constiturions and by - laws for inspection.

'Determining Future SG's Goal'—Powell

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Student Government must have as its goal the "shaping of our present and the determining of our future." Student Body President Bob Powell told Student Legislature in his inaugural address Thursday night.

He said Student Government must do more than make life comfortable in Chapel Hill and then outlined four goals which he plans to work toward this coming year.

—A better education.
—Enrichment of life outside the classroom.
—Improved image for the University in the State's eyes.
—Cooperation.

Citing the better schools in the Northeast and Midwest, Powell said, "We are not receiving the kind of outstanding education that marks other schools ahead of us.

"Our curriculum has unnecessary shortcomings that have resulted from poor planning and inadequate examination."

He said the grading system is based on the concept that students should be mechanically trained to digest and reproduce knowledge without learning to think.

"Our University is and should be more than simply a training school," he said.

Powell pledged to continue development of the residence college system and asked for the support of the Legislature in this area.

He also said, "It is imperative that student leaders begin an evaluation of the role of our fraternities immediately, and without pressure, rather than waiting until another crisis forces us to act."

In referring to the University's statewide reputation, he said, "A majority of parents and voters in this state seemingly distrust almost everything about the University."

He said the University must expand its public relations work.

In asking for cooperation, he expressed hope that his administration would be a "Student Government administration.

Elections Show SL Cooperation

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Cooperation was the password at the first session of the 41st Assembly of Student Legislature Thursday night.

The 25 Student Party members cooperated in voting for their party's nominees for chairmen of the standing committee and for other officers of the body. But — 25 University Party members cooperated with their party in voting for their nominees.

Thus, Student Body Vice President Bill Purdy, as Speaker, cast the deciding votes — you guessed it — in most cases, cooperatively for the UP candidates.

The trend of the night was demonstrated from the first vote.

First off, SP Floor Leader Steve Hockfield moved that speeches be limited to a three minute speech by the candidate. UP Floor Leader Ed Wilson asked that this be amended so that there would be no speeches.

A vote was taken on the amendment. The 25 - 25 tie was broken when Purdy voted with his party.

There were no nominating speeches.

The pattern continued: UP nominated Ed Wilson for Speaker Pro - Tem; SP, Sandy Hobgood. Wilson was elected by Purdy's vote.

UP nominated George Isherwood for sergeant at arms; SP, Dan Wall. Isherwood was elected, again by Purdy's vote.

In like fashion, Steve Salmony (UP) was elected chairman of the Ways and Means Committee over incumbent Sandy Hobgood (SP); and Dave Crockett (UP) is chairman of the Rules Committee, elected over George Krischbaun (SP).

There were a few votes when the straight - party cooperation were not shown:

Both parties agreed that chairman of the Finance Committee and elected him by acclamation.

Purdy voted SP in favor of Marie Harris as filing clerk. He said UP candidate Marian Johnson would be busy as secretary of the UP caucus.

The SP tried to split the UP vote for chairman of the Judicial Committee by having one of its members nominate Myles Eastwood (SP) and another to nominate Linda Bernasek (UP).

After a gasp from UP Floor Leader Wilson, he hastily instructed UP delegates to vote as they had originally planned — for Randy Worth (UP). Worth was elected by Purdy's vote after Eastwood had tied him in the vote of the body.

Five bills and resolutions were introduced at the first session.

Krischbaum introduced the first resolution for the SP, "A resolution proposing a constitutional amendment concerning legislative and judicial power to the Student Body for its ratification." The same bill was introduced in the last assembly but was not voted upon.

Programmed Texts Help Students Master Courses

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Do you like to digest your lesson bit by bit?

If so, programmed learning will appeal to you.

It's based on the assumption that students memorize many subjects more easily if they look over the material in little parts.

At least two courses here — Psychology 26 and the writing clinic mention Friday's DTH — use text books employing this technique.

Generally, students studying programmed texts fill in blanks with what they think are the answers, after reading statements that contain hints.

Then, by uncovering cardboard slips or flipping some pages, they compare their answers with the right ones.

If the answers are incorrect, the student restudies the statements containing the hints.

Once he is certain he knows the material, he moves on to another part of the book.

Joseph C. Blumenthal, author of English 3200 (a text used by the writing clinic). method since he gets immediate "reinforcement." This terms refers to the satisfaction the student derives by discovering that his answers are correct.

Blumenthal writes:

"Thinking your way, step by step, through a program is like following a very gradual path up a steep mountain. Without becoming winded or losing your footing, you suddenly discover that you have reached the top . . .

"The steps are so small and their order so logical that, with reasonable concentration, you arenot likely to make many mistakes.

"Should you, now and then, write the wrong answer, you are corrected immeidately—before the error can become established."

Blumenthal's book published by Harcourt, Brace and World, is broken up into 3200 steps.

Dr. John W. Thibaut, head of the Psychology Department, says programmed learning "can be used to master any subject you can organize effectively."

Strange Election

We strongly disagree with the Constitutional Council's Thursday ruling that the Ehringhaus legislative election should stand valid.

The Council explained its obligation to rule on a basis of whether or not it could be factually shown that the election had been sabotaged.

A case was presented showing how the ballots could have been tampered with and indicating that they had, in fact, been tampered with.

But the council ruled that this was circumstantial evidence and could not be accepted.

It is interesting to note that the pledge cards, used to determine the number and names of legal voters, were lost.

This is made more interesting by the statement of a member of the Elections Board who says that the ballots were separated, and the three bundles of Morrison ballots were placed on the top of the stack in a bag.

Three days later, when the ballots — which had been unprotected from any who might want to rearrange them — were removed from the bag for counting, only two bundles of Morrison votes were on top.

The third bundle was near the bottom of the stack, right on top of a bundle of Ehringhaus ballots.

Even if one discounts the fact that four countings of the ballots rendered different results each time as human error, there are still highly questionable circumstances surrounding the affair.

Witness the horse-switching in the middle of the stream done by Don Carson.

After the third counting of the ballots, Carson challenged the validity of the election.

But after the fourth counting, which yielded different results, he was so impressed with the validity of the election he became one of the main bearers of the burdern to have the election upheld.

The Council was convinced.

We're not.

We smell a rat.

Well Done

During the past year, former DTH Editor Ernie McCrary chastised many people for many reasons.

And in keeping with tradition, he probably absorbed more personal criticism than any person on campus — including Paul Dickson and Jim Hickey.

But if he had any scars from the battle, we feel sure they healed in a hurry yesterday when he read a letter from the Southeastern College Newspaper Competition.

It began: "Dear Ernest: Congratulations is putting it mildly. You have just cleaned up in the Southeastern College Newspaper Competition."

And a clean up it was.

The Daily Tar Heel, Sept., 1965-March, 1966, was presented trophies for Best College Daily, Best Editorial Page and Best Regular Column, the latter award going for David Rothman's faithful performance.

A special recognition was also paid to Chip Barnard for his cartoons' "point and style, the only ones in the contest papers to display either quality."

Congratulations to McCrary, Rothman, Barry Jacobs (associate editor who was in charge of the editorial page), Pat Stith (managing editor who provided excellent guidance for the newsroom) and all the staff members who contributed to the production of this prize-winner.

A Bad Start

"Student legislators must always keep the best intersts of the students and the University at heart in their work here."

This, in essence, was what several out-going legislators — including Teddy O'Toole, Miriam Dorsey and Don Carson — told the members of Student Legislature Thursday night in their last session as members of that body.

An hour later, Rep. Steve Salimony (UP) presented one of the first pieces of legislation to come before the 41st Assembly — a resolution requesting that Student Body President Bob Powell refrain from identifying himself as a representative of the students at this University in any way in dealing with the court case to test the Speaker Ban Law.

This resolution caught the entire Student Party caucus and several leading University Party legislators completely off-guard.

And it should have caught them off guard. There is no reason why anyone should have anticipated such a resolution.

It is ridiculous.

As we tried to make clear Wendesday, a vital problem concerning our University can be solved once and for all by this law suit.

But, to borrow a phrase from the early days of the American Revolution, if we do not hang together, we will all hang separately.

It is not in the best interests of the University for any student group — Student Legislature above all — to issue any formal policy statements which would tend to discredit the honest efforts of the plaintiffs in this case.

And it is certainly unfair to ask the duly-elected president of the student body to refrain from identifying himself as the students' representative in matters concerning the University.

It is Powell's duty to represent the student body in such instances.

We feel that Powell and the other plaintiffs in this suit are representing the students' best interests, and We hope he has the backing of the students in this issue.

If this resolution is brought before SL for a vote we hope it is soundly defeated.

Administration Must Seek Viet Nam Policy Change

Senator John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) appeared on the television newscasts last Wednesday, and, in calm, deliberate tones, questioned the entire policy of involvement in the Vietnamese war in light of the current Buddhist demonstrations there.

It would be foolish, as Cooper and others have pointed out, to mistake these demonstrations as sporatic manifestations of Viet Cong agitation. The mere numbers of those involved in this political crisis will attest to its seriousness.

The public's attention should be focused on two aspects of the riots.

First, many of these acts of hostility by the South Vietnamese were directed against American civilian and military personal stationed in that country. This serves to illustrate a growing resentment of Western elements in South Viet Nam, and in a sense is a form of nationalistic reaction. Secondly, the very nature of Gen. Ky's military regime is distasteful to the Buddhists and other groups in favor of civilian control, and it is quite apparent that they are willing to rs impairment of the war effort to attain their objectives.

At this point one could address himself to the problem, which is a common one in Southeast Asia, of achieving government stability in a nation racked by irreconcilable factionalization. But there is a more fundimental and immediate concern which should be dealt with first. Why should the United States take it upon itself to establish Western - style democracy in a nation that it not immediately suited for this form of government and is not willing to sacrifice to establish it?

In a recent interview which appeared in the New York Times, President Johnson in his own inimitable way expressed the desire to develop the Mekong delta area into a series of dams and lakes similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority projects of the '30's. He sounded like a big land developer contemplating a prime piece of suburban real estate. In terms that reminded the reader just a bit of Teddy Roosevelt, Johnson spoke of leaving the "footprints of America" in Viet Nam.

There is little doubt but that his proposals are well intentioned, but this is only one example of the lack of practicality and perspective rampant in Washington. Taking up "the white man's burden" in Viet Nam has involved a committment no one realized three years ago, and it will involve an even greater effort if we continue to press for the objectives as outlined by the administration. We can't do it alone.

We have forces of Korean War proportions in South Viet Nam, our bombing raids increase in magnitude every day, one of our planes has been shot down over the Chinese mainland, the very people we claim to be defending are beginning to reject us. Clearly the Johnson administration is beginning to realize the problems of massive involvement in the internal affairs of a foreign nation. Though Communist subversion in Southeast Asia transcends national boundaries, there is enough of a civil war aspect to this situation to make our position there dubious.

In the midst of this messy business, Americans must daily see the youth of their country leave their homes to risk their lives in one of the most unpopular involvements in American history. Even "patriotic" attempts to arouse national interest in the war effort have not been very successful, Barry Sadler notwithstanding.

Two weeks ago, Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont visited a local fraternity house and, upon questioning by a member of the audience, discussed in general terms the recent suicide attempt by a Carolina student who had received notice of his draft physical. After a moment of reflection, Beaumont came with one of those rare, supremely correct and uncomplicated phrases that one might hear occe or twice in a year's time: "Well, I guess you can't much blame him. After all, the people in Washington haven't decided whether or not the war is right."

Clearly, then, the administration must do an infite amount of soul searching about Asian policy. The public is becoming more convinced that what we are fighting for in Southeast Asia is not "America," but a questionable aspect of U. S. foreign policy. The cost - effectiveness of this policy must be measured more fully in light of our true national inerests its effect on and our international image, for now and in the future.

The conference table looms on the horizon as the only immediate solution to this urgent issue. If we manage to extricate ourselves from it with reasonable guarantees for permanent neutralization of Southeast Asia, then we may be on the road towards George Kennan's "intelligent, containment."

Inequities In Draft Process Need Immediate Correction

Some of the Selective Service's draft inequities became evident this week when the father of eight children said he would complain to Sen. Robert Kennedy (D-N.Y.) about his 1-A classification.

A New York City draft board reclassified Victor C. Distafano from 3-A on April 1 though he had been rejected 10 years ago by the Army upon applying for a commission as a male nurse. Ironically, he was turned down because he then had two children.

Distefano is now 34 years old — eight years above 26, after which few men complying with the draft laws are called into the military.

Explaining the situation, a Selective Service spokesman said the Department of Defense needs 900 male nurses, mainly because: "We're not allowed to draft women yet, and we have to get nurses for our troops."

Women should not be drafted, but hopefully-something can be done to ease the plight of men like Distefano, who was singled out by the Selective Service because of his nursing experience in civilian life. He himself has appealed for a hearing, which will be held if he is determined physically fit for military duty.

Meanwhile, back in Hollywood, George Hamilton, the actor who frequently escorts Lynda Johnson, was reported to have reached his 26th brithday without being inducted; the reason: he is the sole support of his mother. She is one adult, not eight children.

Thus, somebody with at least a five - figure income, escaped the draft by qualifying for a "hardship" exemption.

And there is not much chance of his being reclassified 1-A in the future. The Selective Service says Hamilton won't be subject to induction unless he violates a draft law (which in his case is pretty hard to do) or all eligible men under 26 have been drafted. The last condition would come about only if military manpower requirements rose dramatically.

Hamiton lives in California, but like the unlucky Distefano, he is registered with a New York City draft board.

Lynda Bird's boy friend is merely one person whose holding of a hardship exemption is less justified than Distefano's would be. Hamilton's draft status illustrates the general inequities of the system; he should not be reclassified unless others like him are. Nevertheless, it certainly is not right to let Hamilton add to his substantial earnings while the children of an unfortunate man several thousand miles away may have to be fed with government food because of their provider's being inducted.

Possibly, the best answer to the problem is to draft the George Hamiltons of this country and train them as infantrymen and, if necessary, as male nurses. Training the Hamiltons might be financially expensive, but far greater are the human costs incurred by the induction of the Victor Distefanoes.

"Council? I thought all Student Government had was committees."

The Student Speaks

The NLF Defined

By CHARLES CUNNINGHAM

One of the most crucial and controversial points in the current debate concerning the war in Vietnam and the role of the United States there centers around the character of the National Liberation Front. This aspect of the debate was spotlighted by the recent disagreement between Vice-President Humphrey and Senator Robert Kennedy.

It is fortunate, therefore, that there have recently been published two appraisals of this group and its connections with the Lao Dong (the Communist Party of North Vietnam), with two contrasting conclusions.

Jean Lacouture, in his recent book "Vietnam: Between Two Truces (Vintage Books, 1966)," and George A. Carver, in his article "The Faceless Vietcong" (Foreign Affairs, April, 1966), ultimately disagree as to the amount of influence exerted upon the N.L.F. by the Lao Dong. Lacouture points out that there is general agreement among Saigon intelligentsia that between 80 and 90 per cent of the N.L.F. are South Vietnamese, and that "the leaders of the Liberation Front of South Vietnam today never cease to proclaim their independence and autonomy with regard to the North." Carver, on the other hand, states that "As an organization, however, the N.L.F. is a contrived political mechaism with no indigenous roots, subject to the ultimate control of the Lao Dong Party in Hanoi."

How are these conclusions reached? There are several points at which these two commentator's interpretations differ:

1. The implications of the N. L. F.'s ten - point program: The announcement of this program in December of 1960 heralded the birth of the Front. Carver maintains that "The language of both the ten-point program and the Front's manifesto, as broadcast by Hanoi, made the Front's political parentage abundantly clear," and points to the program's fourth point, calling for land reform and redistribution, as an indication that what the N.L.F. proposed for South Vietnam was the same merciless and terroristic reforms carried out in the 1954-56 in the North.

Lacouture states that the program was "patently the result of a hasty compromise between Southern democrats desirous of gaining the sympathy of the masses and communist cadres anxious to maintain their contact with the North," and cites the accent in the program of the proposed neutralization of the South, pointing out that "the North was not going to declare itself neutral." (It might be noted here that the actual text of the program is availabie in "The Vietnam Reader (Vintage, 1966).

2. The role of the People's (Popular) Revolutionary Party within the N.L.F.: The P.R.P. was established in January, 1962, as one faction of the N. L. F. with undisguised Marxist - Leninist allegiance. Lacouture feels that this in no way indicated Northern leadership of the N.L.F., "since the communists had been sufficiently well implanted in the South for 25 years to set up their own organization." Although the P.R.P. has played a large role in the activities of the front, he continues, it is only one element of the Front and there are "other elements of the Front . . claimed to be based on nationalism, i.e. Southern particularism." Lacouture claims that the important point is that Hanoi did not want leadership over the Front, but merely control of it.

Carver emphasizes the fact that the P. R. P. was created with the mission of becoming the "vandguard" to the southern revolution, "was and is . . . simply the southern branch of the Lao Dong," and "immediately took complete control of the Front". He adds that "the P.R.P.'s own leaders appear to be individuals who themselves occupy ranking positions within the Lao Dong Party hierarchy," and finally, that of the "associated organizations" comprising the Front (of which there are, supposedly, more than forty), "many almost certainly exist on paper, and . . . a goodly number have identical officers, directorates and staffs."

3. The extent of Northern aid to the N.F.L.: Carver points to the function of the more than 50,000 persons "infiltrated into South Vietnam since . . . 1959," who did not become "foot soldiers or cannon fodder" but "trained and indoctrinated cadres and technicians." Describing the key positions held by these men, he concludes, "Without this infiltration from the North, in short, the present Viet Cong organization could never have been developed."

Lacouture emphasizes the fact that the Front receives less than 20 per cent of its aid (and possibly less than 10 per cent) from Hanoi. He points to the difficulty of transporting arms over the long "Ho Chi Minh Trail" between the North and the South, and quotes a Hanoi official as saying "the Front does not need men and has no need of officers either." Lacouture concludes that in 1965, for a few months at least, the Viet Cong "had attained what one might call an "autonomous war."

As brief as this examination of some of the points of controversy regarding the N. L. F. has been, it has raised a number of questions. Was the original ten - point program merely a sugar - coated version of the Hanoi line, or was it in fact a compromise measure between communist and Southern rebels? What is the difference between Hanoi's exercising "leadership" over the N.L.F. and their exercising "control" over it? How essential to the cause of the Front is Hanoi aid?

While these questions are not easy ones to answer, they are extremely important ones. As Carver says, "there are many aspects of the current situation in Vietnam concerning which confident assertion is a mark of ignorance or disingenous intent."

It is hoped that those students who are concerned about the current struggle in Vietnam will puruse these questions further.

Ghosts Haunt Tube

By JOE DEPRIEST

We are haunted sometimes. By the Tube. When the wide white eye there before us shrinks, changes its voice, we rest our heads and keep our seats. Old voices and images echo from laidaway regions of the tube and unfold like lazy cigarette smoke: The Great White Monster yields up its ghosts.

Weekends were the best. The overture began Friday. Closing our eyes we see Ralph Bellamy standing on a bridge, the "Man Against Crime" and remember wondering how anyone had lungs strong enough to smoke those cigarettes that sponsored the show.

When did Peggy Wood come on — before or after Ralph? No matter. We liked "I Remember Mamma" despite its occasional lapses into mushiness. Lars, Katrina, and the whole crowd: good people, we thought. The beginning of the show was good too, when they opened the scrapbook and the theme song began. Every year they did this same Christmas show, the one about animals talking. Got us every time.

Friday nights were "Amos n' Andy" nights. The re-runs are still on, a little ragged by now but almost as funny as the first time we saw them.

The best was yet to come: in the alley, the shadow flashes on the brick wall; "Friend of those who have no friend. Eenmy of those who make him an enemy." Fetch the FF's cookies: "Boston Blackie" is on.

Who was it that flattered you so enormously once when they said that if you had a thin little mustache you'd look like Kent Taylor? This was an impressive lie. There was only one Blackie. A hell of a guy he was, too. During those pre - Goldfinger days his super - sleek sports car was a topic of endless conversation in school. You looked forward to seeing the show each week along with Mary, Blackie's girl and the dog Whitey. And Inspector Faraday, don't forget him.

"Boston Blackie" climaxed Friday nights the same way every week: Blackie running a marathon race with respective villains.

After this, we cleaned up the crumbs and went to bed. Saturday was a big day.

For years you announced with a great deal of pride: "I saw the very first 'Wild Bill Hickock' show on TV". Why people did not share your enthusiasm over this unusual distinction often upset you. The first "Hickock show was a historical occasion. It became a Saturday morning institution. Ah, but you were tere from the start. What a delightful surprise it was when Guy Madison and Andy Devine came galloping into the living room that morning courtesy of the Kellogg Co. This might have accounted for your acute concern over having a plentiful supply of Sugar Pops in the pantry Saturdays.

That Andy Devine got around on Saturdays. Sometime before lunch you'd see him, every smile and pound of him, singing in a kid - crammed auditorium: "I got shoes, you got shoes, everyboy's gotta have shoes. But there's only one kind of shoe to wear — good ole Buster Brown shoes."

And took Smilin' Bill's place on this show. Smilin' Bill, a big guy who looked like Teddy Roosevelt when he smiled, had a heart attack, we heard.

Andy was good. We like to hear him talk: he sounded like he was eating briars. He had a tough job, Andy did, putting up with a rakish little hellraiser named Froggy the Gremlin. Froggy, you'll recall, hit visiting celebrities with custard pies and gave that yuck - yuck laugh of his and wobbled back and forth. The cast of characters included Midnight the cat and a mouse by the name of Squeekey. We always hated to see Andy Devine go.

Ovaltine bgought us "Captain Midnight" and you never missed it because you were in his fan club. Now and then you still see that bean - pole assistant of his in a B-movie, the fellow named Incabod Mudd—". that's Mudd with two d's" he always said.

Enter Johnny Jupiter along with Major Domo the robot: they had a funny thirty minutes all their own.

"Mr. Wizard" managed to make science relatively interesting, but alas, the only thing you remember distinctly about the show were his lectures on the virtues of a good breakfast. He did a good job, too, because there are still times when you grab a donut or a danish pastery in the morning and find yourself thinking: wouldn't Mr. Wizard frown on this?

The apex of the Saturday morning pyramid was "Big Top." Even the circus can be tiring after a while. The ringmaster, Bob Barker, never stopped blowing his whistle. The show girls you liked. When one did a rope act in her tight shiny - scale outfit, you checked to make sure Ma wasn't near so you could sneek a closer look at the fine big bottom of the girl on TV.

Late in the show, after the cottage cheese commerical, "Smiling Dan the Muscle Man" showed us how he could lift weights, pumped his arm muscles a little, and "Big Top" ended.

It was lunch time — bologna time. Recipe: take two slices of bread, smear unmercifully with mustard; apply one cold thick slice of bologna and assemble. Serve with a handful of potato chips and a large grape soda.

You had to be quick about this. Certain men had your afternoon planned. Among them were: Bob Steele. Ken Maynard, Gabbie Hayes, Gene Autry, Pat Butram. Clyde Beatty, Bela Lugosi. Boris Karloff. Peter Lorie. Bruce Cabot, Fay Wray, Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Bud Abott, Lou Costello, the Three Stooges, Our Gang, Tex Ritter, Tom Mix, Roy Rogers. Tor Johnston, Lon Chaney, Jr.

Yes, Saturdays were best. There were isolated gems during the week, too.

Their faces are an avalanche: Buffalo Bob Smith leading the peanut Gallery with "Howdey Doodey", Mr. Bluster, Flubadub, Chief Thunderthud, Princess Summer-Fall - Winter-Spring and the seltzer toting clown Clarabell.

"The Mickey Mouse" show gave us that great drama "Spin and Marty". Mickey's greatest contribution was Annette. We were all in love with her. We followed her development right up to the present day.

There was Clark Kent diving off the top of the Daily Planet building as "Superman".

Here comes a masked man and his Indian side - kick keeping time to the William Tell Overture.

A procession nears, headed by a twenty - mule team pulling an old ranger sitting atop of load of borax. Behind it is Sgt. Preston of the Yukon and Robin Hood, Long John Silver, the Ranger Rider, Hopilong Cassidy, Dick Tracy, the Gang Busters, Pin Head and Houdini, Kukla, Fran and Ollie, Tommy Regig leading Lassie, Sky King, Winkey Dina Fury, Rin Tin Tin. And more . . .

But the white light dies. The heavy, squealing hinges of the "Inndr Sanctum" door closes.

Our tube has regained its natural size, is blaring away in its best stereophonic voice.

Our eyes ache from viewing a bad kinescope dream too long. Before us a 60 minute series draws to a close. One of our favorites. Too bad we missed it. But sometimes we are haunted.

Auto Industry Takes Steps To Improve Cars' Safety

DETROIT (AP) — The U.S. auto industry, hard - hit by critics and facing possible federal regulation of its safety standards, admitted today it was in trouble but sid it hoped to fight its way out.

The industry already has taken some steps to further improve the safety of its product and more are planned.

The industry already has taken some steps to further improve the safety of its product and more are planned.

Industry spokesmen indicated future advertising campaigns probably would emphasize safety feature such as seat belts, shoulder straps, collapsible steering columsn, dual brakes, and hearests. But, they said, there was no guarantee these would markedly reduce the traffic death toll, which the 49,000 last year, unless they were used properly.

As one congressman put it: "It's not the nut on the wheel but the one behind it that causes most accidents. Until we can tighten him up, I don't know that we can do very much about the traffic safety situation."

That the atuo industry is safety conscious as never before probably stems from the long, hard look two U. S. Senate committees have taken at its safety practices. A House committee is to begin its deliberations on the bill April 26.

After the committee indicated they hoped to have highway safety legislation ready for Senate action early next month, Henry Ford II, board chairman of Ford Motor Co.,

That the auto industry is year are killed in auto accidents that is a bad situation.

"No one can say we are not interested in auto safety. We have always built safe cars, but that is not to say we cannot make them safer and we are trying to do so. We are in trouble in the auto industry right now, but w are going to fight our way out."

Ford, who commented at a dedication ceremony in Detroit today, was seconded by a General Motors official who said "don't forget our wives and our children also ride in these cars."

The Senate's public works and commerce committees said, "Where 50,000 people a highway safety for some two months. Their lgislation is expected to go beyond President Johnson's recommendatinns — both in authority for setting auto safety standards and in federal grants for state highway safety measures. The administration program would authorize government spending of about $700 million over the next six year in an effort to cut highway accidents.

The public works committee ended its hearings yesterday. It was told by Ford Motor Co. vice president John S. Bugas, a spokesman for the Automobile Manufacturess Association, of a plan he advanced earlier before the commerce committee, which ended its hearings last week.

Bugas said the industry recognized that "voluntary action will not suffice by itself" and called for a federal - state commission to rule on safety standards drawn up by the auto firms rather than strict government regulation.

A frequent witness at the hearings was auto critic Ralph Nader, a Connecticue lawyer and author of "Unsafe at Any Speed," a book contending a lack of safety on today's cars is the main reason people are killed in traffic accidents.

Nader, who says he does not own a car, got a ublic apology at a hearing from GM President James M. Roche. Roche apologized after GM admitted it hired private detectives to investigate Nader after he attacked the firm's Corvair model as "an unsafe menace." GM, involved in more than 100 lawsuits involving. As much as $40 million in mage claims relating to the design of the Corvair, said it wanted to determine if Nader had any connection with the persons suing GM. Nader said he did not.

During the hearings, the industry confirmed calling back of variety of its cars for additional work. GM said it called back more than a million 1965 Chevrolets and 1964-65 Chevelles to correct sticking accelerator problem and some 500 of its 1965 Buick Le Sabres for brake adjustments; Chrysler called back 500 cars because of a defective front wheel weld, and some 200 Lincoln Continentals were summoned to adjust a braking problem.

The effect of the hearings on auto sales is not clear as yet but preliminary sales reports for the April 1 - 10 period put sales at 200,494 units, compared with 245,917 in the comparable 1965 period. However, there were only eight selling days this year, compared with nine a year earlier.

On a daily selling rate, new cars sold at 25,062 a day in early April, compared with 27,324 a year ago

Ford Calls For Critics To Leave Business Alone

WOODHAVEN, MICH. (AP) —Henry Ford II said today the auto industry could solve many of its safety problems "If critics who know nothing about the business would get out of the way."

The board chairman of Ford Motor Co., scheduled to make a routine speech at the dedication of a $130 million stamping plant, tossed his prepared script away and delivered, instead, an off - the - cuff defense of industry safety policies.

Ford warned what he termed ill - conceived government regulation of auto companies' output could result in considerable harm to the nation's economy.

"This safety issue has become one of harassment of much of the auto industry and we are being attacked from all sides wth many of the attacks unwarranted," he said.

Ford said "It was indeed a bad situation when 50,000 people a year are killed in auto-accidents," but he insisted the industry is taking all possible steps to make cars safer.

Ford's public relations aides were surprised by the way he waded into industry critics.

Ford later told newsmen he scribbled many of the notes for his speech as he rode from his Deaborn office to this Detroit suburb today. "I have been thinking a lot about this subject and it seemed like a good time to get it off my chest," he said.

Ford turned some of his biggest guns on Ralph Nader, an attorney and critic of current auto safety policies. Nader told a senate subcomittee yesterday the Volkswagen's rear axle could be improved.

"I don't think Nader knows much about rear axles but if he does, we have a need for engineers of that type and I would be glad to give him a job," Ford said

Ford praised Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., chairman of a Senate subcommittee looking into auto safety. "Sen. Ribicoff is a sincere man and during his time as governor of Connecticut he advocated things such as car inspections and better licensing procedures with a resultant 50 per cent drop in auto fatalities in that state.

Indonesians Hit Chinese Embassy

JAKARTA (AP) — A mob of 2,000 Indonesian Chinese smashed into Red China's embassy yesterday, routed 30 screaming employes and ransacked the building.

The crowd came from a rally where 40,000 Indonesians of Chinese descent demonstrated that they have no sympathy with Peking's policies toward Indonesia.

With a heavy truck, the mob crashed the 15 - foot high gate in front of the embassy, a fortress - like building, and poured into the grounds.

About 30 embassy staff members threw sontes, bottles and chairs at the attackers and screamed insults. The Chinese retreated to another building in the compound under protection of 60 armed Indonesian soldiers.

The Indonesian Chinese, most of them students, then rampaged through the embassy, breaking windows and hurling out chairs and papers.

Others in the compound yard took papers, chairs and doors ripped from hinges and made a bonfire. Several students pulled down Red China's flag and hoisted Indonesia's red and white banner.

Inside, students drank embassy wine and wiped sweat from their faces with Chinese flags.

Aside from protecting members of the embassy staff, the Indonesian soldiers made little effort to stop the mob. About 30,000 other Indonesian Chinese watched the sacking of the embassy.

As the crowd was leaving, Foreign Minister Adam Malik arrived. An embassy official held up a blood shirt and declared: "You see this blood - stained shirt? I protest with all my heart."

Malik will hear more from Peking, whose notes to Jakarta have become more and more caustic as Chinese were caught up in the violence that swept Indonesia after the pro - Peking coup failed Oct. 1.

Red China and Indonesia enjoyed the closest relations when President Sukarno was in power, but since the anti-communist army has taken over relations have turned cold.

It aws apparent the Indonesian Chinese, some of whom have suffered with Mailand Chinese at the hands of mobs since the October coup attempt, wanted to emphasize that they had no sympathy with Peking.

The rally approved a petition demanding a break with Red China, denouncing Radio Peking for its attacks on Indonesia, and supporting the ban on the Indonesian Communist Party.

The petition appeared to be directed particularly at the powerful anti-communist student groups, whose demonstrations helped bring about Sukarno's downfall and whose campaigns since have closed Chinese schools and shops in Java and Sumatra.

The Red Chinese embassy was stormed by Indonesian students Feb. 3. They smashed windows and the national emblem over the gate. This drew a vigorous protest from Peking. A number of Chinese consulates throughout the nation also have been attacked bringing further Peking protests.

Azalea Festival Officially Open

WILMINGTON, N. C (AP)— Wilmington's colorful azaleas were officially opened to admirers yesterday at a ribbon-cutting ceremony highlighting the 1966 Wilmington Azalea Festival.

Temperatures were in the 60s, but thousands of visitors to the four-day festival began strolling through the sprawling gardens.

Mrs. Dan Moore, wife of the governor, and Queen Azalea XIX, television star Ulla Stromstedt, cut the ribbon.

Gov. and Mrs. Moore arrived Friday for two days at the festival. The governor was to crown Miss Stromstedt as Queen Azalea XIX at a ball Friday night.

If the weather is favorable, festival officials expect up to 250,000 persons today for the annual Azalea Festiva Parade. Following the parade, another ball will be held tonight.

The festival, which is held each spring when this city's thousands of azalea plants are in full bloom, began Friday and will wind up Sunday.

Miss Stromstedt, who arrived Wednesday, is a star of the television program "Flipper." She was besieged by autograph seekers, including numerous children.

In addition to the festival program, the annual Azalea open Golf tournament also is being played at the Cape Fear Country Club.

Can't Find A Safe Car Says Nader

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ask Ralph Nader, an intense young man of 32, if he ever in his life drove a safe automobile, and he says:

"I never could find a safe one to drive."

A half - smile perhaps indicates a realization that this statement could be too sweeping.

But there is every sign that the tall, dark - haired specialist in auto safety is thoroughly convinced that the design of automobiles needs a drastic overhaul in the interest of cutting the 50,000 lives -a - year accident rate.

Nader is the son of Lebanese parents who migrated to Winsted, Conn., and went into the restaurant business. He is an honor graduate of Princetonton, 1955, and Harvard law school, 1958.

Ten years ago, he said, he witnessed the gruesome results of an auto crash — "A little girl was virtually decapitated when she struck the open door of a glove compartment."

That, and other accidents, set him thinking, he says. He plunged into the study of auto design by reading engineering reports, scientific treatises, court cases.

Two years ago he virtually gave up his law practice in Connecticut to devote his time to preparing a book entitled "Unsafe at Any Speed."

FBI Tolerant Of '10 Most Wanted' Jokes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Never noted for a sense of humor, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is highly tolerant of jokes about the fast turnover of its well - known roster of "10 most wanted fugitives."

No, FBI men affably reply, it's not true that desperadoes are placed on the list only after they're surrounded — it only looks that way.

Acutally, the average stay on the list in the 16 years of its existence is 135 days — or about 4 1-2 months. One man remained on the list more than a decade before charges were dropped because of a lack of witnesses.

And the current dean of the top 10, Edwatd H. Mapps — described by the FBI as the "Murderous Beatnik" — will, unless his luck changes, celebrate his fourth anniversary as an FBI celebrity June 15.

Not infrequently, though, members of this criminal elite are picked up within days of their accession. Their pictures appear in local newspapers and on television programs across the nation, and this often helps lead to their capture.

One fugitive was on the list for something like minue-twenty minutes. The FBI prepared a top 10 announcement on Duane Earl Pope, wanted (and later convicted) for a highly publicized Nebraska bank robbery-murder. The FBI scheduled the announement for release by the press at 6:30 p.m. one day, last summer. But less than a half-hour before the appointed time, Pope turned himself in.

While the FBI has no figures for a comparison with the length of time other fugitives remain at large, a spokesman said the pressure on the list's members — and there have been 228 to date — is something special.

Every FBI field agent, he said, carries a cirrular bearing all 10 photos. In the FBI field office considered to have primary responsibility for a criminal on the list, at least one agent is assigned to the case full - time. In other cities, leads on the top 10 are given priority.

Hot Pursuit Called Off

JACKSONVILLE, (AP) — The North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles efforts to get a "hot pursuit" agreement with the Camp Lejeune Marine Corps base apparently have been called off.

In Raleigh, Commissioner A. Pilston Godwin of the Department of Motor Vehicles, said he had talked with the Camp Lejeune commander, Maj. Gen. Herman Nickerson Jr., and the provost marshal, Lt. Col. Charles A. Sullivan. Godwin said both told him that in their opinion the question of "hot pursuit" was not a problem at Camp Lejeune.

Last month a spokesman for the Department of Motor Vehicles said such an agreement was "an absolute necessity." The agreement would provide for state troopers to chase traffic violators onto the military reservation. A similar agreement is in effect at Ft. Bragg near Fayetteville.

When it was learned that efforts to get the agreement might be dropped, a Camp Lejeune spokesman was asked if Gen. Nickerson had approached Gov. Dan Moore or the Department of Motor Vehicles. The reply was "no comment."

In Raleigh, Godwin told a newsman that he had received "No instructions that I can recall" from the governor.

Camp Lejeune authorities have objected to the agreement. State troopers claim they have chased as many as 20 traffic violators onto the base and sanctuary in a day.

Speaker Urges Colleges To Offer Birth Control Services For Students

Observer Carolinas News Service

Should colleges offer birth-control services to unmarried students along with other health services?

Yes, says Massachusetts minister-educator Dr. Joseph Fletcher.

"Nobody is suggesting that pills or interuterine devices or diaphrams should be sold in the campus bookstore," Rev. Fletcher told a University of North Carolina audience Thursday night.

"But they ought to be regarded as a medical resource owed to the student as needed and requested," he said.

In recent years, he said, there has been a considerable black market in oral contraceptives. "They can be had from 'a man on the corner' or from drug stores that just don't ask for a prescription." he said. "Local investigators have learned that more pills are sold in the vicinity of colleges than elsewhere."

Faced with the increasing popularity of birth control measures, Fletcher said most colleges and universities have taken the position that the college should offer information about birth control educationally, but no medical assistance.

He calls this an "ethical evasion by the universities."

"If they accept a flat fee for watching over the students' health," he asked, "is not contraceptive care included? If college health services have treatment to prescribe which is better than students can get in a drug store they ought to provide it.

"They should give all the medical service needed except what is too elaborate or technical for their facilities." he said.

Rev. Fletcher, 61, is professor of pastoral theology and Christian ethics at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass.

He spoke at Chapel Hill In a seminar on population policy sponsored by the Population Program at UNC-CH and the Conservation Foundation.

Fletcher held positions with several churches before he became dean of the Graduate School of Applied Religion at Cincinnati University in 1936. He has been at Cambridge since 1944.

In his activity and his published works, Fletcher has applied religion and ethics to numerous secular affairs such as industry, labor relations, medicine, world peace and Soviet-American relations, and planned parenthood.

Among his published works is an article in the Duke University Law Journal six years ago in which he said "there are only three proper limitations to guide both the civil law and morality on sexual acts.

"No sexual act between persons competent to give mutual consent should be prohibited, except when it involves either the seduction of minors or an offense against the public order."

Fletcher believes premarital sex should not be prohibited and condemned. Whether it should be approved, he believes, depends on each particular situation.

He said he supports the belief that college health services should include contraceptive service "for ethical reasons — chiefly out of respect for personal freedom."

But this does not mean that he supports premarital sex.

"Nothing we do is truly moral unless we are free to do otherwise," Fletcher said. "We must be free to decide what to do before any of our actions even begin to be moral. No discipline but self-discipline has any moral significance. This applies to sex, politics or anything else. A moral act is a free act, done because we want to do it.

"This freedom which is so essential to moral acts can mean freedom from premarital sex as well as freedom for it," he said.

There is a great deal of evidence, he said, showing that the majority of college students today engage in premarital sex or sex exploration.

He cited statistics showing that 50 per cent of teen-age girls who marry are pregnant, that 80 per cent of those who marry teen-age boys are pregnant, and that an estimated 200,000 abortions are performed every year on teen-agers.

At least part of the reason for the extent of premarital sex, he suggests, lies in the changes that are coming about in moral standards and Christian ethics.

"A growing company of church people are challenging fixed moral principles or rules, about sex or anything else," Fletcher said.

U.S. Forces Set Off Two Fireballs

SAIGON (AP) — U. S. Air Force and Navy jets gunning for Communist military supplies set off two gigantic fireballs during a 55 - mission attack Thursday on North Viet Nam, spokesmen announced today. The ground war remained in low gear.

One of the fireballs — estimated to be 500 feet in diameter — surged up from the Ban Pau army barracks, 92 miles northwest of Hanoi. U. S. Air Force Phantom Jet crewmen said they destroyed eight and damaged five of the barracks buildings in addition to setting off the oil and ammunition stores.

The other conflagration, whether from a roadside dump or a stalled convoy, flared on route 15 near the avalanche-clogged Mu Gia pass, 80 miles north of the border. Under Phantom strafing and bombing of the highway, white flashes shot 200 feet into the air and a huge bright orange fireball was observed from a distance of 20 miles.

From operations south of the border came these reports:

—U. S. Marine tanks and armed helicopters killed eight Viet Cong trying to flee in sampans from a coastal village in Quang Ngai province, where thousands of leathernecks were in the third day of operation Nevada.

—Paratroopers of the U. S. 101st Airborne division's 1st brigade killed several insurgents in scattered ambush and patrol actions in Phu Yen Province, 240 miles northeast of Saigon.

The U. S. 2st infantry division closed out Operation Abilene, a 17 - day sweep from 30 to 40 miles east of Saig that developed only one hard fight. In this, a Viet Cong battalion afflicted heavycasualties on an American rifle company. Over - all, the drive yeilded 59 Viet Cong killed and 22 captured along with 1,300 tons of enemy rice.

—B 52 Jet bombers, part of the Guam - based fleet that closed the Mu Gia pass in their first raid on North Viet Nam Tuesday, struck at a suspected Viet Cong troop area in Thua Thien province 20 miles west of Hue.

Thursday raids on North Viet Nam included a new attack on the Red River railroad line from Red China.

U. S. Air Force F105 Thunderchef pilots reported they smashed the Lan Thip railroad yard and bridge, 117 miles northwest of Hanoi, and ripped up 1,000 feet of track.

Others, striking like the Phantoms in the Mu Gia pass area, said they destroyed seven trucks and left others burning.

Navy spokesmen said carrier based planes destroyed a bridge, seven cargo junks and 12 barracks in the region of Vinh and set off numerous explosions in an attack with Bullpup missiles and 1,000 - pound bombs on the Ba Lang underground storage area, 26 miles south of Vinh.

Lynd Refuses Speech Offer

RALEIGH (AP) — Professor Staughton Lynd of Yale University, one of four controversial persons invited to speak on the campus of N. C. State University, notified the university's Young Democratic Club Friday he cannot come.

Lynd was the second of the four to turn down the YDC's invitation to speak on the state campus. Earlier, Robert Welch, head of the John Birch Society, advised that he could not accept.

Lynd received wide publicity recently when he led a delegation on an unauthorized peace mission to North Viet Nam.

The YDC still has not heard from the two other speakers it invited.

UNC Unbeaten In ACC

Trackmen Host Terps

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

Maryland's track team under the direction of Coach Jim Kehoe brings an impressive array of performers onto Fetzer Field today at 3 p.m.

Carolina, which is undefeated in ACC competition thus far this spring, will be up against the to - ranking tracck school in the East in 1965 as well as this year's favorite in the ACC and IC4A.

Maryland is led by Frank Costello, who as a sophomore won the NCAA high jump with a leap of 7'0". This year Costello won the ACC Indoor crown and finished second in the NCAA Indoor Meet in Detroit.

Outdoors the Terps seem stronger than they were indoors. The main reason for this lies in the added strength obtained by Maryland in the discus and the javelin.

Hearon Returns

Ernie Hearon returns in the discus. Last year he set a Maryland school record with a toss of 158'5". Another record-holder, Russ White, gives Maryland exceptional strength in the javelin since he threw 250' last year to rank with the nation's best.

Carolina cannot match the depth of the Terrapins. However, several first - line performers should give Maryland the bitter taste of defeat.

Jon Levin, who is undefeat-

Maryland's Frank Costello

ed in the sprints, has a good chance to sweep the 100 and 220 again. His main problem will most likely come from Maryland's Jack Bickley, who finished fourth in the ACC last year in the 100-yd. dash.

Sophomore Mike Williams gives the Tar Heels a fine chance in the distance events. He is the ACC Indoor Mile Champion and defeated Maryland's top man George Henry in the Indoor Games. Coach Hilton has been using Williams in the half also and in all probability, will continue to do this in today's meet.

Strong Hurdler

Richie Ambrose, who sports an unblemished record in the 440-yd. hurdles, will meet stiff competition from the Terp's Howard Kline. Kline finished 3rd last year in the 330 Intermediate Hurdles at the ACC Outdoor Championships.

In the broad jump Gary Iverson meets Bob Schnetzka, the man who beat him in the Indoor Games. Schnetzka has replaced Mike Cole, who was the national champion in this event a year ago.

The two mile should be an exciting race. Maryland has former North Carolina high school cross - country champion David Starnes, who won the ACC Indoor Games beating Duke's Paul Rogers and Carolina's Jim Meade.

Meade ran the fastest race of his life on the Florida trip when he covered the two mile in a fast 9:15. Starnes has yet to better this and will have to if he expects to out-distance Meade for the second time this year.

Tar Heels Crush Clemson

Walker Stymies Tigers, 6-1; Carolina Takes ACC Lead

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

Basically it was a question of pitching, and North Carolina right-hander Danny Walker had all the answers yesterday as he muffled Clemson's famed power brigade and pitched the Tar Heels into first place in the ACC with a 6-1 win.

While Walker (2-1) worked his silencer on the 12-runs-13-hits-per — game Tiger offense, Bob -Bonczek and Mike McLaughlin switched the long ball shoe to the other foot and found that it fit rather nicely. "Snapper" led off the second inning with a clothesline home run shot over the 15-foot-high wall in straightaway left, and Mac slammed a 3-run blast a little closer to the foul line in the third.

Rodney Thompson plated the other two UNC runs with a sacrifice fly to the 362-foot mark in left - center in the sixth, and a single in the eighth.

There were strong reservations around Chapel Hill preceding the game, for Clemson came into the match with a 12-0-1 overall record and a tight hold on the ACC's top spot with a 6-0 mark. Moreover, Coach Bill Wilhelm's club had a team batting average of .361, two - homers per game, a slugging percentage of .639 — and they had not been beaten since April 30, 1965, when they dropped a 4-3 decision to Carolina on Emerson Field. That's 21 straight games, with only a tie to mar the record.

Mr. Walker and his buddies changed all that yesterday.

Top Pitching

Danny pitched magnificently until the ninth, when Clemson touched him for four singles to avert a shutout. The Tar Heel senior faced only two real threats before the final frame, and worked out of both with tight pitching and sharp fielding by his mates, who played errorlessly. In going the route, he yielded eight hits (seven singles), struck out nine and walked just one.

The first batter to face Walker was second-baseman Rusty Adkins, who led the ACC in hitting last year (.444) and checked into this game at .365 for the season.

The stocky left - hand batter slapped a line single to the opposite field, but was immediately erased when Danny Talbott played Ellis Dantzler's ground smash, tagged first base and threw Adkins out at second.

First - baseman Ron Zupa started the Clemson third by poking a double into the left field corner — also an opposite field hit — and moved to third on Eddie Barbary's towering fly to Bonczek on the warning track in right.

No Score

With one away and a man at third, the Tar Heel infield pulled in to the rim of the grass. Clemson's starting and losing pitcher George Watson (5-1) rapped a two - hopper Thomas. "The Fox" held the runner at third and tossed out Watson, and then Walker nailed Adkins on a pop to Charlie Carr in medium center field.

Watson singled with one out in the sixth for CU's third hit, but a McLaughlin - Thomas-Talbott double play squelched that threat.

In the eighth, Walker gave up his only base - on - balls of the afternoon when he passed leadoff hitter George Sutton. Danny then slipped a called third strike past .409 - hitting Keith Waters, but Zupa grounded a single to center to put runners at first and second with one out.

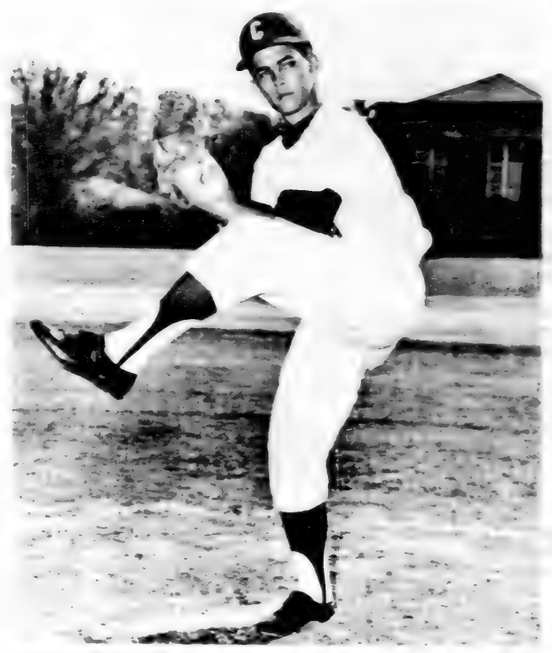
Walker got Barbary on a looper to McLaughlin in short left for out number two, and second baseman Thomas stayed with a hard one - hop shot to throw Watson out at first.

Only in the ninth was Clemson able to reach Walker effectively. Adkins and Dantzler singled, and the former scored on an infield out by Jackie McCall. Two more Tiger singles followed, but Walker fanned Waters for his ninth strikeout, and Zupa grounded to McLaughlin for a force-out at second to end the game.

While the long ball punch of Bonczek and McLaughlin provided more than enough runs for the win, Coach Walter Rabb played strategy baseball right up through his last time at bat.

Bonczek — who was robbed of extra bases in the sixth when Tiger centerfielder Keith Waters made a tremendous diving catch of his right-center liner — led off the eighth with a single. Rabb had Shaw, who doubled and scored the fifth run in the sixth on Thompson's sacrifice fly, to sacrifice the Snapper to second, and Thompson promptly scored him with a single to right-center.

Carolina meets South Carolina on the field - without - a - name this afternoon at 2:30. USC is 2-3 in the ACC, but 9-3 overall, having lost to N. C. State by 6-5 yesterday.



DANNY WALKER hurled the Tar Heels into first place in the ACC yesterday with a 6-1 victory over Clemson. Walker pitched shutout ball until the ninth, when the Tigers got four singles for their only run. The senior righthander from Durham struck out nine and walked only one.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Second Battle Of Atlanta

Atlanta had a brief, but unhappy encounter with a guy named Sherman once before; and Wisconsin's version of the law written by the General's brother is causing that city some trouble now. Judge Elmer W. Roller ruled Wednesday that the Braves baseball club violated Wisconsin's anti - trust law and must return to Milwaukee by May 18 if the National League doesn't promise the beer city a new franchise for 1967.

Atlanta will probably win the Battle of the Braves. Judge Roller may have some difficulty enforcing his state court ruling in Georgia. (After their experiences in 1864, the Georgians are no doubt better equipped to repel another Yankee invasion. Anyway, the Wisconsin National Guard and the Milwaukee police force don't seem as formidable as Sherman's army.) An appeal to the Wisconsin Supreme Court is baseball's next step; and even if that court upholds Roller, the problem of enforcement is still the same. A Federal court decision seems to be Milwaukee's only real hope of forcing the National League to do anything. By the time the final court ruling is made, the 1966 season should be long over.

I have a feeling, however, that some baseball leaders are wishing this whole business had never happened. If there is anything baseball owners hate worse than high salaries, it is going to court. Major league baseball is still operating under a 1922 Supreme Court decision that exempts the National Pastime from anti - trust laws on the grounds that it is a sport rather than a business.

Maybe that was true in 1922; but when you have properties worth upwards of $10 million, as some baseball clubs are today, you are in business — big business — and baseball knows it. While the eventual outcome of the court fight over the Braves may leave the team in Atlanta, it may also put baseball unde arnti-trust regulations. If it does, baseball will have won the battle, but lost the war.

The major item that organized baseball would like to keep out of the scrutiny of the courts, of course, is the reserve clause in each player's contract. Under this section the player is actually bound to the same team for life, unless the team decides to dispose of him. A player who signs his first contract with the Yankees is theirs, to do with as they see fit. Pro football, in contrast, has an option clause, whereby a player can play one year without signing a contract, at 90 per cent of his previous year's salary; and he then becomes a free agent. Baseball likes its system better.

At the bottom of the whole mess is the basic question: Should the Braves have left Milwaukee? If they couldn't have made money there, they shouldn't have been forced to stay. (Baseball's a business, right, gentlemen?) The Braves should be required to produce substantial proof, however, that they will lose their shirts if forced to stay in Milwaukee.

That may not be so easy to do. Of course, attendance has declined since the glory days of the mid 1950's. It's ridiculous to expect a city with a population of 741324 (1960 census) to produce any early turnout of 2,000,000 fans. The Braves did draw 911,000 in 1964, not a disastrous total by any means.

The danger in moving the Braves is that baseball will be branded as a road show, willing to go anywhere as long as there's money there. When the money goes, the team goes. Milwaukee is the first city to be left without major league baseball since the modern era of franchise shifts began in 1953. The Braves are also the first team to move twice. (Kansas City may not be far behind.) Modern business pressures may require these moves, but the owners had better be sure that the momentary gain in dollars will offset the loss of prestige.

Programmed Texts Help Students

"There's no doubt about it —programmed learning is much more effieient."

Dr. Eugene R. Long, whom Thibaut regards as the departmental expert on programmed learning, says the method's effectivenss depends on the subject and the skill with which it is programmed.

Other members of the department say they doubt whether programmed learning really helps students learn faster than they do with conventional techniques.

One professor does not believe the programmed approach can be upsed in mastering material requiring much creative thought.

Psychology 26 students using the programmed version of "Hilgard's Introduction to Psychology" complain that the method is too mechanical.

But even the sketptics frequently use the programmed text book to cram for mid-semester quizzes. And one student claims he has gotten mostly "B's" by ignoring the regular text and concentrating nearly entirely on the programmed work book.

"It's great!" comments a freshman taking Psychology 26. "It really helps me memorize the technology.

Ft. Lauderdale: The Place To Go For Getting Rowdy?

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE — They say this is supposed to be THE place.

They say that this is where you're supposed to go spring vacation to get collegiately rowdy. They say this is "where the boys are" — and the girls.

They say a lot of things. Some of them are even true.

One thing they say about Ft. Lauderdale is that you have to be 21 to drink there. This is very true. It is so true in fact that the police there frown very heavily on you if you are drinking and you are not 21.

Sometimes, they even put you in jail.

Being in jail in Ft. Lauderdale is like being in jail in no other place you've ever been. There's this little room at the municipal swimming pool — right across from the beach—it's not supposed to be a jail, but does a very good job of acting like one. The door is very thick and you have to almost shout through it to tell your buddies how much bail they have to raise.

If you go to Ft. Lauderdale around Easter, there's a chance you may wind up in that little room.

Like this one guy, who was even 21. When a cop asked for his draft card, he said "Wudja believe . . I burned it."

The cop did not think this was funny. He arrested the guy.

Then there are these dances that they have on a big concrete pavillion right out on the beach.

To get into these dances, you have to go by a little booth and show your college I.D. and get this little key chain-type tag that has the American flag on one side and a "Welcome Collegians" message on the other.

Onceyou get inside, there are a lot of these little girls in bikini - topped, bell - bottomed pants that look like they just can't be in college. Many of them aren't.

It gets so bad now and then that you can't tell the high school honeys from the college girls without a scorecard.

But it's still fun to look — even if you can't touch.

There's the beach, too, which is one of the best things about Ft. Lauderdale — even if you can't drink there without ending up in the makeshift jail they have.

During the day, everybody lies around on the beach and gets sunburned and laughs very hard when they hear the radio guy talking about the temperatures up north, which are considerably lower than those in Ft. Lauderdale.

At night, the beach is put to good use to.

Mostly at night, though, everybody just goes into bars and drinks or (if you're not 21) up and down this street across from the beach.

There's not too much to do on the street there at night besides walk. If you stop for more than a minute or so, the cops come along with their nightsticks and bang on light poles and trash cans and tell you to keep moving. It is kind of like a cattle drive.

"A bill to amend general election laws and Student Legislature bylaws to remove the C-average requirement which presently prohibits members in good standing in the Student Body from holding certain elective positions."

9-Year-Old Girl Plays Disc Jockey On Station

BUFORD, GA., (AP) — Robert Joseph owns radio station WDYX in Buford and his wife is chief engineer. And, they have a problem:

Their 7 - year - old son Mark thinks he should be doing the news programs.

After all, his 9 - year- old sister Kathy has had her own show for a year and Mark thinks it is time he hit the airwaves.

Joseph, however, is not quite ready to turn the news over to Mark, even though the youngster has learned to operate the station's control panel by observing his sister and others.

Kathy's show is a 15 - minute disc jockey program every Saturday morning. She had to work to get it. Her father was teasing her one day about her interest in the station's operations and she told him she wanted her own show.

Joseph laughed and told her she could have a show if she could sell it to a sponsor. He thought that would end it.

But Kathy promptly went into Buford and, on her first attempt, sold the program to a clothing store.

Between rock 'n' roll records, she does her own commercials and chats about horses, swimming, school friends, hobbies and her band.

Joseph said he let Kathy have the show because "it's what she wants to do. She just grew up in a radio station.

As for Mark, he'll just have to wait awhile — at least until he can read more fluently.

SPU Plans To Go Hungry Over Viet Nam

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

The Student Peace Union announced yesterday that it has planned a five - day fast, beginning May 2, in protest to U. S involvement in the Vietnamese war.

Some eight students have volunteered for the fast, during which they will drink only orange juice. They will not "demonstrate" in any one place, but will attend classes as usual.

Four or five open - air workshops will also be held during the fast, according to SPU Chairman Chuck Schunior.

The topics for the discussions, which are open to the public, are an overview of Vietnamese history since 1920, the leaglity of U. S. intervention in Viet Nam, the U. S. response to revolutionary movements in underdeveloped countries and the effects of the war on U. S domestic policy.

Schunior announced that in addition SPU plans to put up displays in Y-Court next week to provide information about the war in Vietnam.

Outside speakers, and professors are being invited to talk at the workshops.

In a statement of principle issued to the DTH, SPU said it is fasting "because we cannot be silent and passive in the face of masive injustice . . . The orders which send troops to Vietnam, which destroy the homes and hopes of the Vietnamese come not from a handful of people, but from all of us — all who help maintain a conspiracy of silence about the war.

"The war in Vietnam, with our role being assumed unilaterally and in disregard of the UN Charter and the 1954 Geneva Accords, is destroying the very fabric of Vietnamese society and resulting in the bitter and pervasive misery of that country's people."

The statement further asserted that the "war in Vietnam grotesquely distors our own national priorities, causing beneficial social legislation to be subordinated to the politics of warmaking.

"In such circumstances, to be silent is to consent. Not to dissent as individuals is to participate in collective national gulit."

The statement also said that SPU members will talk with as many people as possible, in dormitories and elsewhere about their position on the war.

11-Year-Old 'Owns Up' – She Owns 'Sebastian'

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

The mystery is solved.

Carolina students for a long time now have been wondering who owns (and feeds) "Sebastian," the huge white Pyrenees, which roams the campus looking very much like a canine polar bear.

The owner is Miss Jill Shankle, 11 years old and in the fifth grade.

Jill recently solved one of this school's greatest mysteries by sending a letter to The Daily Tar Heel.

Dr. Robert J. Shankle of the Dental School, Jill's father, says the mystery really isn't a mystery at all. " 'Sebastian' wore an identification tag until he broke it last month," he explains.

The tag, said Shankle, carried the owner's name, her telephone number and the words "We love him."

Shankle estimates the weight of his daughter's pet at a mere 125 pounds — certainly smaller than the horse-sized creature students think he is.

How much does he feed this legendary (even though he's barely three years old) creature of the Carolina who's highly enough regarded by the Yackety - Yack to have been photographed in front of Davie Poplar and the Old Well?

The answer is "just a few table scraps and six cans of dog food a week. The students and citizens of Chapel Hill supply the rest.

"He's well liked by the people in Victory Village (near the Shankle's Mason Rd. home)," Dr. Shankle says. "They feed him only the finest morsels, I'm sure."

Strangely, though, Sebastian — usually considered peaceful — does not always carry his gentle disposition back to the Shankle home. "He's quite a guard dog." Shankle explains, but the milk man has to carry a stick when he comes to the door. "I guess 'Sebastian' has a split personality."

With The Creature's name almost as well known around here as Dean Long's, it was only natural in 1964 that he plunge into politics.

After President Johnson's record victory at the polls, a disheartened Republican wrote a letter to the DTH insisting that the "Sebastian" was one of the 26 million Americans "Sebastian" indeed wore supporting Goldwater.
a large Goldwater sticker on his collar, says Shankle, who prudently adds: "But don't think I believe Goldwater's for the dogs."

Symposium Features Udall On 'Myth And Politics'

By PETER COWEN
Special to the DTH

One of the earliest acceptances to speak at the 1966 Carolina Symposium came from Democratic Congressman Morris K. Udall, Representative from Arizona's Second District and brother of Secreretary of the Interior Stewart Udall.

Udall will speak Wednesday evening at 8 a.m. in Memorial Hall on "Myth and Politics." Al Capp will speak the afternoon before him on "Myth and the Mythical American."

"Mo" is 6'6 1-2" and grins as he speaks in a modified Western drawl. He enjoys meeting students and is notorious for staying up late on college campuses to engage in discussions on topics of collegiate interest.

The late President Kennedy called Udall's Congressman's Report "the finest job of its kind that I have seen."

The ability of this clearly written and easily understandable report to dispell misconceptions and change the thinking of its recipients gives Udall impressive qualification to speak on the Symposium topic of "Myth and Politics."

Congressman's Report presents this liberal Congressman's cogent arguments on such controversial topics as the weaknesses in today's Congress ("Congress is all brakes and no accelerator"), civil rights, and prayers in public schools.

The Report makes frequent use of evidence and historical precedent in its presentation It's simple language also helps make it a compelling and persuasive bit of propaganda.

In spite of his acknowledged opposition to the forces which limit Congressional legislative action, Morris Udall is a strong believer in our two party system of government.

After pitching last spring in the annual Congressional baseball game in a losing effort for the Democratic team, Udall spoke before the House:

"We need a two party system. The Republican Party is badly divided, it needs harmony and unity.

"I figured that if I threw my "nothing" pitch in there, the Republicans might work together, hit together, run bases together — and perhaps establish a measure of unity in that party and thus preserve the two party system for this country."

Presently serving on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and the Commitee on Interior and Insular Affairs," "Mo's" relaxing personality and unerringly dry wit have enabled him to count both liberals and conservatives among his friends.

His comapnions range in political scope from his fellow members of the ultra - liberal Democratic Study Group (of which he is Secretary) to lican Representative Gross.

Graduating from the University of Arizona in 1948, Udall's basketball talent was employed for a year by the Denver Nuggets. The Nuggets that year, it seems, needed more than Udall's services, for they set a record for the longest losing streak in pro-basketball history.

Morris Udall joined his brother in forming a private law practice in 1949, serving at the same time as County Attorney. His legal prowess quickly made him one of the most successful trial lawyers in the Southwest.

World News BRIEFS

By The Associated Press

Reds Rebuke Plan

TOKYO—Communist China, in effect, rejected today a U. S. suggestion that it is willing to invite Communist Chinese scientists and scholars to visit American universities. It called the American offer "nothing but a fraud."

Peking's New China News Agency said the Chinese rejection of President Johnson's efforts to open contacts between the United States and Communist China was made by a spokesman of the Chinese foreign ministry.

"It is obvious," the spokesman said, that the U. S. aim "is to deceive the American people and world opinion and exploit the American people's friendly sentiments for China in the interest of its policy of hostility towards China."

(In Washington, State Department Press Officer Robert J. McClaskey had no immediate comment.

(However, the Peking rebuff came as no surprise here in view of repeated Red Chinese turndowns of earlier U. S. overtures.)

A U. S. State Department spokesman announced in in Washington Thursday the United States had informed Communist China of its willingness to have Red Chinese scientists and scholars visit American universities.

The spokesman said several U. S. universities—he declined to give the names or a total—had inquired about inviting Chinese Communist scholars to visit those universities. The State Department informed the schools it was prepared to permit the invitations.

Lull Appears In Viet Nam

SAIGON — U. S. Marines and paratroopers killed 16 Viet Cong in two coastal clashes yesterday and American fliers slashed at Communist targets both north and south of the border.

A lull evidently persisted in field operations of South Viet Nam's politically bemused armed forces.

B52 crews sought to take up slack in the 1st Corps area, a northern hotbed of opposition to Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military government. The Guam-based jet bombers blanketed two suspected enemy staging areas in the border province of Quang Tri, 110 miles northwest of Da Nang.

Da Nang is the corps area headquarters, where about 3,000 demonstrators called for the government's immediate resignation despite its capitualtion to the Buddhist hierarchy's demand for election of a civilian regime wthin three to five months.

U. S. Marines bumped into a company of Viet Cong 11 miles southwest of Da Nang and exchanged heavy fire with them for several hours.

Battered Ship Arrives

NEW YORK — Italy's luxury liner Michelangelo, her superstructure ripped open by a 50-foot wave, docked in New York today with three dead and 12 injured after a harrowing battle with the Atlantic's fury.

The 40,900 ton, white-painted ship, in service less than a year, arrived two days late from Genoa, her flag at half mast. A bandage-like Tarpaulin was draped over broken windows and twisted steel.

Hardest hit were the cabins beaneath the captain's bridge where one passenger and a crew man died in a violent wash of sea water.

U. S. Flag Ripped Down

LONDON — An American flag was ripped from its pole in front of Westminster Abbey tonight. A group called action movement For Peace telephoned newspaper offices and siad it had pulled down the flag as a protest against the Viet Nam war.

The flag was flying to mark the appearance of the Washington Cathedral Choir at an Abbey service.

Negro Voter Registration Drive Begins

Some 25 University and Chapel Hill High School white and Negro students started a campaign yesterday afternoon to register Negro voters in Bingham Township, west of Carrboro.

The group was organized by the Chapel Hill Voter Registration Committee, under the chairmanship of Stu Matthews a member of the Students for a Democratic Society steering committee.

The students plan to register Negroes each Saturday until the Democratic primary on May 28.

Negro dairy farmer James Snipes of Bingham Township is among nine other candidates for the three seats on the County Board of Commissioners.

It has been predicted by onlookers that if the 400 unregistered Negro voters in the county register and vote Snipes will have an excellent chance to win.

Matthews said, though, that the registration drive is not solely intended to help Snipes get elected, but is simply to register Negroes in Orange County.

He explained that many SDS members are involved in the registration drive because they represent "SDS's concern for the individual's active participation in politics."

Prof Probation From Flunking Rumors False

There has been a rumor around UNC for some years that professors who consistently flunk a high percentage of their students are in some way censured by their department heads or other university officials.

According to Dr. Wayne Danielson, Dean of the School of Journalism, no such censroship exists.

The rumor, developed in the classroom, stems from the fact that some professors have failed as many as half their students.

Danielson said that "it comes very close to questioning a man's integrity to question the grades he's giving."

He said, "The grading relationship between students and teachers is a very delicate one," adding that "this is something I don't think is very wise to interfere with."

Danielson stresses that he or

DU High Scorer In Greek Games

Delta Upsilon fraternity's 42-man pledge class scored a 23-point first place in the Greek Week field day events Friday, Greek Week Co-Chairman Bill Mucciarone said yesterday with Beta Theta Pi, Zeta Psi and Delta Kappa Epsilon each having 19 points.

The field day points will make up 30 per cent of the pledge classes total score for the IFC's Best Pledge Class Trophy to be awarded at 8 p.m. Monday in Gerrard Hall.

Other criterion for the best pledge class judging will be scored like this:

Campus Chest Carnival Booth —30 per cent
Work Day— 20 per cent
Extra Curricula— 10 per cent
Scholastic Averages— 10 per cent

The reason for so little weight's being given the scholastic averages, said Nucciarone, is that the averages being scored are those of last semester's pledges, most all of whom are full-initiated brothers by now and not members of the competing pledge classes.

Except for the trophy presentation — at which Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont will speak on fraternities — the only thing left in Greek Week is a pledge-faculty tea at the Wesleyan Foundation at 4 p.m. Monday.

Man-Myth Session Opens Here Today

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

John Kenneth Galbraith, author of The Affluent Society, will keynote this year's Carolina Symposium tonight in Memorial Hall.

In line with the Symposium topic "Man, Mind and Myth," he will speak on "Myth and Modern Man."

The Paul M. Warburg Professor of Economics at Harvard University served as Ambassador to India from the spring of 1961 to mid-1963. On his departure, the late Prime Minister Nehru took the unusual step of publicly thanking Galbraith for his help and counsel.

Nine other speakers will be here for the Symposium.

The Very Rev. Alan Richardson, Dean of York Cathedral, will come from Lancashire, England, to speak on "Myth in Religion and the Secular." He has visited and lectured on all five continents of the world.

Dr. Daniel J. Boorstein, who is attempting to uncover the special character of American culture in the triology, The Americans, will speak on "Myth and the Historical Process." He believes historians can help people understand each other by leading them to recognize the distinction among each other's experiences.

"Mind and Myth" will be Walter Kaufmann's topic. The professor at Princeton is known for his book The Faith of a Heretic. He has written, edited or translated a number of other works, most of them dealing with religion and philosophy.

Novelist and short story writer Nelson Algren will speak on "Myth and Mores."

His best seller, The Man With the Golden Arm, received the National Book Award for the most distinguished American Novel in 1949.

Congressman Morris K. Udall will discuss "Myth and Politics." The Democrat is a strong believer in the two party system even though he opposes forces which limit Congressional legislative action.

The creator of Li'l abner will speak on "Myth and the Mythical American". Al Capp has created in Li'l Abner a twentieth century folk tale. The comic strip is one of the top five in the nation. A recent feature of the strip is a group called Students Wildly Indignent about Everything (S.W.I.N.E.).

The author of the recent best-seller Kandy Kolored Tangerine-Flake Streamlined Baby, Tom Wolfe, speaks on "Myth and the American Dream." The collection of articles has helped to establish Wolfe as one of the most talked-about and sought-after writers today.

C. Vann Woodward and Ralph Ellison will compose a panel to discuss "Myth and the South."

Woodard, who received his Ph.D. here in 1937, has been a professor of history at Yale since 1961. His most significant book is The Strange Career of Jim Crow, published in 1955. Among his other works is The Burden of Southern History, published in 1960.

Ellison's first novel, The Invisible Man, has been published in nine languages and received the National Book Award for Fiction and the Russwurm in 1953 and the National Newspaper Publishers Award in 1954.

ABC Waiting Game

"We find no authority in either the Turlington Act or the ABC Act of 1937 which would permit the possession of alcoholic beverages in liquor clubs, locker clubs or any place within a wet territory other than one's dwelling . . ."
—Ray Brady, State ABC Director

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

In Charlotte, they are playing a waiting game with the state attorney general.

Local ABC officials there have decided to hold off on enforcing the new, no-brown bagging interpretation of the state liquor laws until the General Assembly has a chance to change them next spring.

They announced Thursday that they would wait until March 31, 1967, to begin enforcing the ruling that it's illegal to consume liquor outside one's home.

In other parts of the state, however, the March 31 ruling of the attorney general will be enforced. This includes Chapel Hill.

Ray Brady, state director of the ABC, sent a memorandum to officers around the state, directing time to enforce the new interpretation.

Jubilee: A Young Carolina Tradition With Rocky Past

By DAVID KNESEL
Special To The DTH

First In A Series

In less than two weeks Graham Memorial will sponsor Jubilee number four.

So what?

Even in its youth, Jubilee Weekend has become a deep-seated Carolina tradition. But a look at the history of this campus - wide event is anything but traditional.

The idea came about from a need for a big weekend sometime during the year. Planning began in 1962 by the Graham Memorial Activities Board. Bob Reardon, then GMAB President said, "The idea behind the project is to schedule two performances of the regular G.M. Series back-to-back in order to make it a special weekend."

The inspiration for open air concerts came form a 1962 IFC sponsored jazz concert in front of G.M. Reardon said, "We like the idea of having everything in the open so that everyone can attend. We are hoping that people will mill around from one party to another and from one activity to another."

The name? That just bobbed up at a GMAB meeting.

That was in 1963. The Jubilee brochures, prepared by Bill Campbell, called it "A Salute to Spring." The cover featured red and orange "birds and bees." Jubilee was to be held in front of Graham Memorial, on the grass. It would run three days — from April 26 to April 28. The cast included: The Four Preps, Friday Night; The Migrants, The Duke Ambassadors, The Harlequins, and the Men's Glee Club, Saturday Afternoon; Five Combo Parties in five locations, Saturday night; and The Chad Mitchell Trio Sunday afternoon.

Friday's DTH read: "It starts today. Under the trees on the lawn near G.M. we will be serenaded from 2-5 p.m. tomorrow and Sunday.

"And that's only part of it. Top flight entertainment, free for all students of the University is something long needed on this campus and now its here.

"We await the start of Jubilee this afternoon with Jubilation."

There was jubilation, all right. There were also hecklers, drunks, and a fight or two. Not to mention "over-amorousness." Three dump-truck loads of debris were hauled away from McCorkle place the next morning. The DTH editorialized: "This is no way to thank those who've worked so hard to make Jubilee a success. And it's definitely not the way to make sure Jubilee becomes an annual feature at Carolina."

That afternoon, a more sober crowd watched the lawn concert until five. Then, from nine until one, five combos in every corner of campus blasted out. G.M., Y-Court and Ackland, Steele Hall lot and the Planetarium.

There were movies, too. Butterfield 8, Two Women, and The Buccaneer.

The next Tar Heel headlined: "Jubilee Success May Spur Repeat Show Next Year." The text quoted Howard Henry, Director of G.M. "As a whole, attendance was very good. We naturally don't expect to appeal to everyone, but we're quite pleased at the response we got."

Henry estimated the attendance at Friday's Four Preps concert at 4,500 to 5,000, and the other concerts at 2,000 - 2,500. For the next year, Henry said, "That is a GMAB decision, but there is almost no question in my mind that we will go ahead with plans. In fact, I'd bet on it."

The weekend, indeed, was on its way to a repeat performance. The Student Legislature reflected campus - wide approval. "Legislature applauds G.M. for Jubilee," read a story by Fred Seely. Letters to the editor agreed. One writer, S. Weldon Brown, offered a suggestion: "It seems advisable in the future that a successful all - campus weekend have at least one night with late permission for women students."

Graham Memorial had been given a mandate. It began to plan for the next year's "Salute to Spring."

Busy Astronauts Find Light Moments Here

ASTRONAUTS James McDivitt (l.) and Russell Schweickart check weather information before filling their flight plans at the Raleigh-Durham Airport Friday. The two were among five astronauts who studied star recognition at the Morehead Planetarium here. McDivitt and Schweikart flew back to Houston Friday. — DTH Photo By Ernest Robl.

Editor's Note—The three astronauts who will man America's first Apollo space flight and two members of the back-up crew for the same mission were at the Morehead Planetarium Thursday and Friday for special training. DTH staffer Ernest Robl, the only reporter to cover their appearances here, sums up some of his impressions of the group.

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

At first look, one could almost have mistaken them for a group of professors and graduate students.

But that would have been only the first impression. After a few seconds one would recognize that there is something different about the five men who visited the campus this week—even if they weren't wearing their bright blue NASA flight suits at the time.

It wasn't anything tangible. Even if they were sitting still, the five astroanuts who visited the campus this week seemed to be in constant motion.

Working on star recognition training at the Morehead Planetarium, they moved through the campus like a whirlwing, and barely half an hour after their last trairing session Friday, they were already en route back to Houston in their own NASA jets.

Every minute of their time seemed to be allocated to a specific task. Even while they were taking a break from their sessions, they talked shop.

Immediately after arriving on campus Thursday afternoon, four of them headed for Woollen Gym and a handball workout.

Virgil I. (Gus) Grissom, who headed the five-man group, later explained that this game had been selected because it provided good eye-hand coordination training.

But even though the astronauts were always business-like, they also had time for a few laughs—like the time astronaut James McDivvitt gave his version of a space-suit fitting.

The astronauts had just arrived at the planetarium Thursday afternoon and were sitting around a small workshop, munching cookies, when one member of the group asked about the suit fitting.

McDivitt put down his cookie, assumed a bow-legged

A Reminder

Two years of hard work and planning for the 1966 Carolina Symposium is finished.

When John Kenneth Galbraith speaks in Memorial Hall at 8 tonight, he will launch a week of unique educational significance.

One full page and a part of another in today's DTH are devoted to the Sumposium.

But no amount of space can adequately impress upon the readers' minds the inexplicable value of this week's program.

There is little value in a vicarious experience with the noted scholars, authors and statesmen who will speak with students during the Symposium.

Only by attending, only by hearing what these learned men have to say can the student realize the full dividends being offered.

We urge every person on campus to attend as many parts of this program as possible.

It will be well worthwhile.

Colorful TV Bill

First of Two Parts

There is little concern among UNC students about the "TV Bill."

The main reason for the lack of interest is this—nobody knows what's going on.

After talking with former Student Body President Paul Dickson, members of the Constitutional Council and several student legislators, we hope we can clarify the issue.

The original TV bill established the right of residence halls, fraternities and sororities to receive financial aid from Student Government for the purchase of new color or black and white television sets.

Legal Problem

However, Art. I Sec. 10 of the Student Constitution states that any organization receiving money from Student Government must submit its by-laws for annual review and approval.

Since most fraternities' constitutions and by-laws are secret this would have disqualified them from receiving funds.

In order to include the Greek organizations, SL passed a bill suspending that part of the by-laws of Student Government which states that it shall be the duty of the Rules Committee of Student Legislature to review and approve the by-laws of organizations receiving money.

Dickson Steps In

Confused? There's still more.

Dickson felt it unwise to make this suspension of the by-laws of SG, and he vetoed the bill.

Legislature, in turn repassed the bill unanimously over the president's veto.

Then Dickson issued a two-part executive order demanding that the execution of the TV bill be delayed until these provisions be met:

— Any organization wishing to participate shall submit to the Treasurer of the Student Body and the Chairman of the Finance Committee a statement of its willingness to provide upon request to either of these two persons a copy of his organization's constitution.

— No organization which has any discriminatory clauses in its constitution or by-laws shall be allowed to participate in any way wahtsoever.

To The Constitutional Council

At this point no one knew what to do.

Dickson insisted that he was within his authority as student body president to execute all laws necessary and proper for the general welfare of the Student Body and that he was fulfilling his responsibility to uphold the constitution.

Others claimed that he had no right to arbitrarily prevent a bill, passed by SL, from being executed.

So the Constitutional Council — between election appeals — got the job of smoothing this matter over.

The council ruled first that Art. I Sec. 1 of Dickson's injunction was in order. That is, that it was unconstitutional for legislature to suspend that part of its by-laws.

According to the council, the by-laws may be amended but not suspended. This stems from a technical fine line between amending and suspending, the suspension being only a temporary action not subject to executive veto.

Sec. 2 Unconstitutional

The court found secondly that Art. I Sec. 2 of the injunction — the denial of funds on grounds of a discriminatory clause — was unconstitutional, since this section of the order had no bearing on the legality of legislature's act and was, in effect, amending the bill originally passed by SL.

So now the bill must go back through Student Legislature. If they wish to include Greek organizations in their financial assistance, legislators will have to amend the Student Constitution.

Tuesday we will discuss why Dickson included the second section in his executive order and what we think might happen if the amendment is passed.

Poverty Program Is Radicals' Target

The booing of Sargent Shriver at a meeting of poverty organizations showed that Republicans aren't the only ones differing with the Johnson administration on ways of helping the poor.

Shouting representatives from poverty areas greeted Shriver with catcalls when he mentioned the accomplishments of the Office of Economic Opportunities, which he directs.

"Negroes are now on the boards of community action programs, working with white people," he declared.

"Where?" asked the audience.

"We've established a principle that poor people should have a say," Shriver said.

"But what's been done about them getting any answers?" the audience retorted.

Who were the hecklers?

According to civil rights leader Bayard Rustin, the demonstration wasn't spontaneous. "Some of the people shouting about the poor participating were not poor but have a vested interest . . . And some members came into the meeting with a sheet that was printed up several hours before."

In effect, Rustin was implying that so-called representatives from the poverty areas, or many of them, may not be that representative; their interests at times may be as far apart from the poor's as are the businessmen's.

Typical of these people is Saul Alinsky, whose rememdies for the formidable evils of our present society may be even worse than the society itself; Alinsky and others like him mean well, but they frequently seem more interested in social change as an end in itself than they are in helping the poor.

Alinsky's rent strikes, for example, were dramatic, but for the most part unsuccessful. As Alinsky perhaps realized in the first place, the "haves" were simply too well entrenched to lose to the "have nots"; therefore, the latter group from the start was doomed in the battle, which needn't have been started in the first place. Had Alinsky not chosen such radical tactics, he might have kept the support of the business communities in the places where the strikes were held. He probably knew this, but was eager to experiment with the rent strikes to satisfy his own urge to change society rather than to improve it.

As for the poor themselves, some of them perhaps backed Alinsky and his fellow agitators, but the poverty-strken's doing so did not in the slightest indicate they were working for their own self interest; they were working merely for what they thought to be their self interest. Thus, while Alinsky and those heckling Shriver at the meeting may represent the wishes of some of the poor (whose backward minds have been swayed by Alinsky), they do not necessarily advocate the means by which the poor's lot may best be improved.

What are these means?

Most likely, the OEO's bumbling bureaucracy, repugnant as it is to both the Republicans and the agitators, should not be counted out of the war on poverty; give Shriver's agency time — its tactics will become more effective sooner or later. And once the OEO's methods are refined, they will show neither the niggardly fiscal polices of the GOP nor the reckless radicalism of Alinsky. I am confident that OEO can eliminate some of its vast waste to win back the hearts of the tax-minded businessmen while satisfying the politically incompetent poor by determining the correct level of their participation in the government. This is all a matter of achieving still another of the Johnson administration's famed compromises; it has been harder to achieve than any of the others, but eventually, the government will almost certainly bring it about.

Sensationalism Marks Brooklyn Paper

It is a common practice among newspapers to exchange subscriptions with other papers in order to keep abreast of what is going on in the rest of the country. Small as this paper is, the DTH follows this practice, and at least 10 or 15 copies of commercial publications and college periodicals appear in the office every day.

Most of the time they are allowed to accumulate on the associate editor's desk, under the assumption that they will be glanced at his leisure. Most of the time he merely picks them up and tosses them in the waste can.

One of these newspapers was recently saved from immediate disposal by the attractive powers of its bombastic headline: "Rose Ann's Pop Names 2 Others; 'How could my son have done this to his own little sister? He wasn't even there.'" The headline was accompanied by some most unusual pictures.

The paper is a daily tabloid published (Where else?) in New York City. "Brooklyn Times," its gothic banner, graced with a rather imperative American eagle, proclaims. Its publishers claim it is "New York's liveliest, most informative newspaper."

A picture of Rose Ann's pop, a middle-aged Neaderthal who goes by the name of Mark Inesti, Sr., also appeared on page one. He was accompanied by three of his 12 children. The picture was taken in their home in fashionable Coney Island.

If you had the stomach to get beyond the first page and delve into Lou Benton's "exclusive" interview, you would immediately find yourself engulfed in a veritable morass of emotionalism, sensationalism, reportorial opinion, and assorted other forms of journalistic garbage.

Try this for a lead: " 'They tied a black cord around my four-year-old Rose Ann's neck — dragged her into the dingy cellar—pulled off her tiny panties and then damaged her internally with an umbrella. They beat her unmercifully about her head and little body, and, finally, set her on fire.' "

These alledgedly are the words of "blubbery Mark Inesti, Sr." himself. The reporter was unafraid of recounting his own emotions during the interview: "My blood boiled as the parents recounted the nauseating tale." The reporter explained, "Mark Inesti, the unemployed chef who supports his large family on the city's welfare handouts, was particularly disturbed that the police had arrested his son as one of the alleged perpetrators of the crime.

" 'They are liars and hypocrits,' ranted Inesti. 'Two black boys did it. Why Rose Ann herself identified them at the hospital.' "

The rest of the story is peppered with other choice comments by the reporter. He described Inesti's neighborhood as 'hardly one of the nicer sections of town." Nearing the end of the interview, the reporter claims, "This suddenly became too much for me. I wished him well and walked dazedly out of the near squallor that houses nine children and their parents."

It is ironic that the reporter took the trouble to note in the story that "Inesti wasn't too enthusiastic with the manner in which the Brooklyn Times wrote the story in last week's issue."

One can't really blame him. Rose Ann is probably still in the hospital, ignorant of the loathsome journalists (though they shouldn't be graced with that title) and their strange code of ethics which allows a four-year-old child's name to appear in such a context.

Unfortunately this type of trash sells newspapers in New York, and, God knows, it makes its publishers a hell of a lot of money. While tabloids of this nature flourish, the older, more responsible dailies must consolidate to stay in the black.

Most responsible newspapermen will tell you that one of the duties of the press is to educate the public and, in the process, try not to talk down to it. At the same time the press is supposed to print news items that are devoid of the reporter's opinions.

It is doubtful that these principles will ever be adopted by the Brooklyn Eagle, and the quality of American journalism is much the less because of it.

Election Decision

By JIM LITTLE

The Thursday ruling of the Constitutional Council by a 4-3 decision that the Ehringhaus Election was valid hardly cleared the air in this highly irregular election. The council agreed that the ballots could very possibly have been tampered with, but since the defendants could not prove absolutely that ballots were stolen, inserted, or changed, the election was not invalidated.

The vote totals for all five candidates for Student Legislature for the different counts were 1,053; 1,029; 1,036; and 1,052. On each count the votes for every candidate varied, and on each count the winners varied. The final tabulation gave White 252, Richter 203, Dunivant 200, Aiken 199, and Goodfellow 198. Since there are three seats in Ehringhaus, the three candidates with the highest number of votes were declared winners and the final two were losers. Thus there was a difference of one vote out of approximately 350 ballots between the third winner and the two losers.

The ballots were locked up Tuesday, election night, after the first count. The following Monday the Vice Chairman of the Elections Board went to the room in GM where the ballots had been for the past six days and found that the door to the room was unlocked and the cabinet containing the ballots was unlocked, easily accessible to anyone.

In addition the ballots were disarranged and were not in the same condition as when the chairman of the Elections Board had placed them in the room. The ballots were then counted, and there was a discrepancy of 17 votes between that count and the previous Tuesday's count.

Also, the pledge cards of Ehringhaus were missing, and no one on the Elections Board knew for certain where they were. It was impossible to tell if ballot-box-stuffing did or did not occur. Several of the ballots did have different colored ink marks on them, indicating the ballots may have been marked after they were in the possession of the Elections Board.

In a vote so close as this, these innumerable irregularities certainly raise a reasonable doubt about the validity of the election. Both the Governor of Ehringhaus and the Vice Chairman of the Men's Residence Council expressed their serious reservations about the election and asked the council to invalidate it.

This case points out the need for the proposed Supreme Court which would replace the Constitutional Council. The composition would insure that members hearing such election appeals would be thoroughly familiar with the electoral system and would be in a position to render more responsible decisions.

GMAB Is Praised

Editor of The Daily Tar Heel:

Looking back at the entertainment provided this year for Carolina students, one realizes that much fine talent has been brought to the campus by Graham Memorial.

It seems almost unbelievable that such great names as Dave Brubeck, Louis Armstrong, the Supremes, Nancy Wilson, Johnny Mathis, Roger Miller, and Hal Halbrook were brought to UNC in such a short span of time as a semester and a half. And still GM has maintained and sponsored other activities besides these programs.

Now GM is planning to top this year's series of entertainment off with a slate of outstanding performers at Jubilee. The Bitter End Singers, David, della Rosa, and Brooks, Al Hirt, and Charlie Byrd highlight this year's biggest weekend of entertainment.

The Graham Memorial Activities Board is to be commended on their work. We hope the officers next year will do as well.

Ode To Sebastian

(Editor's note — This poem was written by Jill Shankle, 11-year-old owner of Sebastian, a local canine of some note, who might pay you a visit in the classroom before the semester's end. The young lady wanted the DTH to publish this short tribute to an old friend.)

SEBASTIAN

Here comes Sebastian,
A dog not to tease.
Here comes Sebastian,
The great Pyrenees.

He is white and has a black nose.
He looks like a polar bear.
But is as gentle as, who knows!
Whenever you pass, ask him to shake.
He is the greatest dog God
Could ever make.

Man—Mind—Myth

A Capsule On Capp And His Doggone Dogpatch Friends

By JIM CHESNUTT
Special to the DTH

An ample entourage of comedians all but assures the success of any affair.

The Planners of the 1966 Carolina Symposium felt that the burden of making people laugh for five days was too great even for the notorious semantical circus usually put on by Tom Wolfe and the subtle humor of Morris Udall.

Al Capp will speak in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. Wednesday, and this spokesman for the mountain folk (and almost any members of the "other half" of America) is expected to make his audience laugh.

As an artist, creator, inventor and discoverer, Al Capp has made his name a household world in most parts of the contemporary world. His world is real enough for people to celebrate a fictional day set aside by him for male-starved females to be avenged; to manufacture and distribute a drink based (quite loosely, we assume) on one his characters guzzle. And he added a new dimension to the pork chop.

CAPP'S FAVORITE SON
. . . L'il Abner of Dogpatch

Abner Yokum, Capp's invention, and the whole Dogpatch population were introduced to the United States in August of 1944. Capp had gotten the idea for hillbilly characters when Ham Fisher used them in his "Joe Palooka" comic strip, for which Capp did the lettering.

Debuting in eight papers, the Yokums quickly found audience identification — or something — and gained popularity until the war when they were put into active duty to tell the story of Capp as an amputee to others in this condition.

When Capp speaks to the Carolina Symposium on Wednesday, April 20, on Myth and the Mythical American, he will be speaking on the subject which L'il Abner has explored and studied since his beginning.

Abner has satirized the hackneyed foibles and fables of the American public in his portraits of big - time, small-minded politicians (General Bullmoose), in the over-anxious attempts of people to get something for nothing (the Schmoo) and the hysterical rush of young unmarried eligibles to catch a man (Sadie Hawkins Day).

In his frequent appearances on the Johnny Carson "Tonight" show, he openly expresses his opinions on the permissiveness of today's parents and the educational systems.

Capp, born in New Haven, Connecticut, studied at the Academy of Fine Arts, Designer's Art School, Philadelphia Museum of Fine Arts, Boston University, and Harvard. He started working with the Associated Press in 1932, drawing "Mr. Gilpatter" and becoming the nation's youngest cartoonist. After being discharged or quitting (no one seems to remember) he became a ghost cartoonist, eventually doing three strips at once. In 1944 "L'il Abner" appeared for the first time.

Capp says his strip depends on humorous incident rather than adventure for appeal. "It is," he says, "a blend of comedy and fantastic drama." After his first visit to the Cumberland mountain region, and after first tasting preserved turnips, Capp said "The Yokums definitely belong to the submerged one half of the nation."

Capp's main characters — Abner and Daisy Mae — are molded after real people. Refuting the long - held opinion that Yokum is a young, slightly idealized Capp, the artist says that he is an early Henry Fonda. Daisy Mae is either an anonymous AP Secretary, Madeleine Carroll or Veronica Lake. When satirizing celebrities he usually aks their permission. In one of the most celebrated incidents connected with the strip, Capp began a satire of "Gone With the Wind" in the late thirties. He had failed to secure permission (presumably it wouldn't have been given) and was asked by Margaret Mitchell's lawyers to cease the satire. Capp did so immediately with no explanation to his audience.

Capp regards himself as a storyteller rather than an artist. In 1946 when he introduced Lena the Hyena to his reading audience, he found himself unable to draw her face because it was so horrible. So he asked his readers to submit faces, the most hideous being chosen for the stirp.

Fully covered by Life and Newsweek, the incident was one of the most publicized of the year. Again showing his Dickens-like ability to hold an audience, Capp waited several years before allowing Daisy Mae to marry Abner. He climaxed this episode by keeping Daisy up all of the preceding night to sew her wedding veil out of an orange sack. Again in the early fifties, Americans waited anxiously while Honest Abe was born, and later watched as he was washed down the drain.

History Of The Symposium

The Carolina Symposium goes back to 1927 when the Institute of Human Relations presented its first program. In 1937 the committee changed from a quadrennial to a biennial schedule.

The Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Institutes of Human Relations held in 1941, 1943 and 1945, were each devoted to a single theme: "The United States in the World Crisis," "Total Victory and Global Peace," and "The Prices of Peace." Platform addresses, classroom seminars, exhibitions and interviews were organized to present the subjects under discussion, and leaders of the state and nation participated in the Institutes.

The Institute of Human Relations was revived in 1956, and renamed the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs. The scope of topics discussed continued to broaden when in 1958 the tenth program presented 'Dimensions of Survival: American Culture in World Focus."

In 1960, shortening its name to The Carolina Symposium, the topic "Image of Man: The Indiviudal in an Accelerating Culture" was presented. The which student representatives from other colleges and universities throughout the country participated in the Symposium, was introduced by the 1960 planning committee.

In 1962, The Symposium topic "Today's Revolutions" was concerned with an evaluation of the changes occurring in political institutions, in the economic and social order, and in technology and the arts.

Since its inception The Carolina Symposium has enjoyed the support of the entire university community in both its planning and financing. It has won acclaim throughout the state and nation and has attracted speakers from a variety of fields and professions. Some of the notable figures who have appeared at recent Symposia include Senators Henry Jackson, Gale McGee, William Fullbright, John Sherman Cooper, General James M. Gavin, James Reston, Dwight MacDonald, Hans Morganthau, Ralph Bunche, Norman Thomas, Kenneth Rerroth, Crane Brinton, Malcolm Cowley, and Richard Adler.

WUNC-Radio To Cover Symposium

WUNC Radio, the 50,000 watt FM voice of the university, plans extensive coverage of the 1966 Carolina Symposium on Man, Mind and Myth. WUNC broadcasts on 91.5 mc on the FM dial. The station will broadcast live the opening ceremonies at Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. Sunday. The afternoon program for Monday at 3 p.m. will be transcribed and broadcast on a delayed basis at approximately 6:30 p.m. that evening. The following afternoon programs for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will also be carried on this basis. The 8 p.m. programs will be carried live from Memorial Hall.

Algren's Book Probes Real Art Of Knowing Hemingway

(A review of Notes From A Sea Diary: Hemingway All The Way, written in 1965 by Nelson Algren. Algren will speak Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.)

By PAM KESLER
Special to the DTH

"How many times Hemingway might have pressed the trigger before releasing it is just what isneeded for a fuller understanding of Farewell to Arms." . . "the proper study of mankind is man."

Such is writer Nelson Algren's cry to the world as he defends Hemingway and experiences life off andon board the ship "Malaysia Mail" as it batters its way across the Pacific and around many eastern ports.

Mr. Albren's "Notes From A Sea Diary: Hemingway all the Way," written in 1959 is a switch from his other well known works, The Man with the Golden Arm and Walk on the Wild Side.

Where the others present life's story of poverty, delinquency, crime, and dope addiction, the realities of life that Algren knew so well from his childhood days in the slums of Chicago where he came as an immigrant from Poland, Notes From a Sea Diary presents a comment on a life less familiar to him.

Feeling that it was necessary to take the plunge as many other writers had done before him, Mr. Algren does a creditable job of commenting on Hemingway's life. In his book, which is a diary, Mr. Algren expresses a desire that his voyage to the East might be as daring and richly exvoyage through life had been.

Mr. Algren first examines in his diary his lck of familiarity with ship life and he attempts witty comments. "The reason for making a ship pointed is two-fold: it makes the distance between ports shorter and prevents bumping when you run over a whale."

Many such attempts at humor fail to get hearty laughs. Putting fun aside though, Algren shows insight in defending Hemingway, the writer and the man, and disproving his ignorant and shallow critics in an argument well-presented.

Algren protests "He (Hemingway) knew those ports of call where life conflicts with death. He made the voyage. To be qualifed to pass judgment upon his style therefore, a critic would himself have to be a man willing to take the risks. Since no such man appeared during Hemingway's career, his work remains to be judged."

After attacking numerous men claiming to be Hemingway scholars, sparing no feelings, and slitting many a critic's throat, Algren turns finally to the problems and pleasures of prostitution in Calcutta. On the subject of women, his characters shine forth with such statements as "Like I told you — never let a woman get so worldly wise that she loses her leadership."

NELSON ALGREN
. . . the author relaxes

Detailed descriptions of prostitutes such as Martha (with whom Algren has an affair) prove entertaining and realistic. Without so much as a "Land ahoy" the book haltingly ends here.

Algren's insights and comments on Hemingway give the book its meat, for though his tales are real and many times gusty, they seem to serve only as the trimmings. He falls somewyat short on his attempts at wit, his Calcutta episodes being only incidentally interesting, but he does depict Hemingway all the way which makes the Notes From a Sea Diary well worth reading.

Chancellor's Message

"The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is honored to welcome its distinguished guests to the 1966 Carolina Symposium. Since 1927, the Carolina Symposium has provided the University community with exciting discussions on important and timely subjects.

Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson

"This year's theme, "Man Mind, and Myth," is especially appropriate to the inquiring spirit of our times. The week - long program of discussions, seminars, and lectures has attracted an impressive group of guest scholars and men of public affairs. The analyses of the many facets of this year's challenging theme will provide a rich educational experience for the Carolina campus.

"We welcome the opportunity to be hosts to this year's Symposium, and we are confident that the discussions will prove to be both stimulating and valuable."

The Topic—Its Birth And Purpose

In searching for a topic for the Carolina Symposium, the Program Committee examined many proposals to study particular malaises of our times. But in the course of this examination it was felt that underlying all of these was a lack of self confidence in modern man, a failure of nerves.

Where were we going? No one seemed to know; no one seemed to possess any basis for beginning an answer. Then the suggestion that our age had outgrown its myth and had failed to create replacements provided our direction for the answer. Hence the topic, Man, Mind and Myth.

The 1966 Carolina Symposium purposes to examine the problem of myth. We begin our definition of myth as a story which embodies and explains an already existing institution, phenomenon or belief.

Because of its simplicity and the justification it lends to a society's pattern of operation. the myth becomes powerful force, both perpetuating that pattern and shaping the thoughts and values of individuals in that society.

Hence if a society is to attain any measure of intellectual self awareness, it must understand the structure of its mythology and the manner in which the mythology affects the society as a whole, and its members.

The purpose of the 1966 Carolina Symposium is to conduct the university community in such an examination.

State Troopers Ordered To Stop Hide-And-Seek

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina highway patrolmen have been ordered to stop playing hide-and-seek with motorists and to start an aggressive crackdown on traffic violators.

Col. Charles Speed, the patrol commander, said recently drivers are hep to hide-and-seek games, such as the use of speed gauges across the highways.

"But," he added, "the very appearance of a patrolman on or parked beside the highway works wonders."

Speed's directive was included in his statement of policy read earlier this year to all patromen during closed-door sessions.

When the policy statement was first released to newsmen, interest centered on Speed's orders for patrolmen to stay out of politics.

Overlooked was the traffic crackdown sections which will affect nearly two million North Carolina motorists.

As the first step, Speed said every commissioned and non-commissioned officer will be issued a marked car in 1966. In the past, these officers drove unmarked cars.

Speed explained:

It is simply another effort to bring about a public awareness of highway patrolmen. Twenty-five officers traveling 15,000 miles per year will result in 375,000 miles of conspicuous patrol coverage."

The commander said the commissioned officers and the non-coms have been ordered to wear sidearms at all times and to stop any traffic violators spotted on their travels in the state.

While the number of marked cars will be increased, Speed said the patrol also may sharply hike the use of unmarked cars for troopers "who are stragetically and best qualified to use this equipment."

These unmarked patrol cars also will be ordered to stay on the highways, searching for traffic violators.

A trooper, Speed said, is responsible for stopping a violator even when out of his assigned territory.

Patrolmen were ordered to frequently stop vehicles "just to check the safety equipment, operator's and registration cards."

The ones likely to catch the brunt of the crackdown are drunken drivers.

Speed told his troopers, "Intoxicated drivers deserve no sympathy; they are the most dangerous, despicable drivers using our streets and highways."

Soon, Speed said, the patrol hopes to have a chemical test program in every county as another weapon against the driver who drinks.

Education will be a part of the overall crackdown.

Patrolmen have been ordered to note whether the operator and passengers in any vehicle are using seat belts. If they are, the patrolmen are to compliment them for being safety conscious.

"If the car is equipped with belts and they are not being used, Speed said, "the trooper will call this to the driver's attention. If there are none, the driver will be asked to consider the purchase and installation of belts."

Russian Claims Moon Travel Safe

MOSCOW (AP) — Radiation levels around the moon will permit safe manned space flights there, Soviet scientists said today, but they plan to test conditions further with animals before trying for a human lunar trip.

The president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, Mstislav Keldysh, made these observations at a news conference to describe findings made by Luna 10, the Soviet Sputnik now orbiting the moon.

The time will come when biological experiments will be made on such moon ships as Luna 10, Keldysh said, but he did not say how many experimental launchings would be needed before moon travel is possible, nor did he indicate any timetable for Russian plans to put a man on the moon.

The Soviet space program has used dogs to pioneer new conditions before men try space ventures. Keldysh said two dogs orbited within the earth's radiation belts for 23 days suffered "no catastrophe" but tests have not been completed.

Radiation belts around the moon are 100,000 times weaker than the earth's belts, the news conference was told, and Keldysh explained that meant the kind of spaceships already in use around the earth could be used for men to orbit the moon.

The most difficult problem, he said, will be re-entering the earth's atmosphere after a lunar trip. "How many landings it will take to work this out is hard to say."

Alexei Leonov, who became the first man to walk in space on March 18, 1965, said a Soviet cosmonaut will land on the moon as early as 1968. That would allow fore more unmanned probes.

President Johnson has pledged that the United States will beat the Soviet Union in the man-on-the-moon race.

Keldysh told the news conference no attempt will be made to bring the first moon satellite back to earth. There had been speculation that this would be attempted.

The scientist said Luna 10, which he reported works on chemical power, will stay in orbit for several years, but the period of its active transmissions back to earth will diminish.

Luna 10 followed by two months another Soviet space first, the soft landing of Luna 9 on the moon Feb. 3.

Keldysh explained that the more recent spaceship carried a greater payload of instruments than its predecessor. This was possible, he said, because Luna 9 needed more braking thrust to keep it from being smashed on contact with the moon.

The scientist hinted that future Luna satellites will take photographs, something which the present one does not do. Luna 10 has been radioing back data on gamma radiations, magentism and other characteristics of the moon and the space near it.

That data showed, the news conference was told, that the number of meteorites near the moon is about 100 times greater than in deep space, and that the moons magnetic field is weak.

Ford Motors Pulling Out Of Stock Car Competition

DETROIT (AP) — Board chairman Henry Ford II says Ford Motor Co. is pulling out of stock car racing for this year but may return ao competition next year.

Ford revealed the firm's decision Friday in an exclusive interview with the Detroit News. The story was in Saturday's newspaper.

Ford's dispute over new rules concerning its overhead cam engine was blamed for the firm's decision to withdraw sponsorship of such top drivers as Fred Lorenzen and Ned Jarrett.

A formal announcement of Ford's decision not to enter any races this year is expected next Tuesday or Wednesday.

However, some North Carolina and South Carolina stock car racing promoters still hope for a revision in new rules adopted April 6 by the National Association for Stock Car Racing NASCAR and the U. S. Auto Club USAC.

The promoters met with NASCAR President Bill France in Charlotte, N. C., last Saturday afternoon.

"We were hurt last year when Chrysler stayed out and we will be hurt again if Ford does," said A. C. Goines of the Charlotte Motor Speedway. "It won't ruin us but it will hurt all tracks, not just ours."

Goines said he personally believed the new rules will be modified to allow Ford to enter races this year.

The disputed rules say Ford's overhead cam engine is legal but Fords equipped with it must carry an additional 427 pounds.

Shortly after adoption of the rule, Ford withdrew its factory-sponsored cars from races at Columbia, S. C., Greenville, S. C., and Winston-Salem, N.C.

No factory - sponsored Fords were entered in this Sunday's 250-mile NASCAR race at North Wilkesboro, N. C.

In disclosing Ford's decision to pull out of racing this year, Henry Ford said:

"We think the rules are unfair. I believe the racing officials have to develop some new rules that are fair to everyone. Up to now they don't seem very fair."

Only last year, Chrysler withdrew its sponsorship of cars in many major races in a rules dispute over its hemi engine. Chrysler is the only other major manufacturer in stock car racing.

The $17 million Center for Research in Pharmacology and Toxicology at the University of North Carolina is located temporarily in a trailer. A permanent building to house the new center is expected to be ready in late 1968.

ABC Hearing On Liquor Law Slated Monday

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A show-cause hearing is scheduled in Mecklenburg Superior Court Monday to determine whether state and local law enforcement agencies should be restrained from enforcing North Carolina's strict new liquor law interpretation.

Asst. Atty. Gen. James F. Bullock, who in an opinion two weeks ago ruled that consuming liquor anywhere except in one's home is illegal, will represent the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

Other defendants include the city and county police departments and the Mecklenburg County ABC board. Indications are however, that these three agencies will be more or less passive defendants, with Bullock assuming the job of defending his opinion.

In his opinion, Bullock ruled out "brown-bagging" — the practice of taking a bottle into an establishment and buying set-ups — and bottle and locker clubs, where members' liquor is kept and they are served drinks.

The State ABC Board has already begun a drive to enforce the ruling, according to State ABC director Ray B. Brady. But in Mecklenburg County, the County ABC Board has decided not to begin enforcing Bullock's interpretation of the law until March 31, 1967.

Brady said the 51 state ABC agents now are calling on restaurants and private clubs which hold beer or wine permits to "tell them what our policy is and that we intend to enforce it."

He said the officers are to return later to check on the restaurants and clubs to check on them.

"I would assume," Brady added, "that we will hit every place in the state that serves wine and beer. Eventually we will get around to them all."

The conflict between the state board and some county boards on when enforcement of the law should begin opened another chapter of the controversy Saturday.

State ABC Board Chairman Clawson Williams Jr. of Sanford said there are no plans for a special meeting to discuss the conflicting policies, but that the matter would probably be on the agenda when the state board meets May 3.

He refused to comment on the conflict of statements until he has seen a copy of the Mecklenburg action, which was taken Thursday, and said any statement on the matter "would have to be a decision of the full state board."

Mecklenburg County Police are holding off enforcing the ruling until Judge Harry L. Riddle Jr., makes a ruling Monday's hearing.

Michael Plumides, a Charlotte attorney, is seeking the restraining order in behalf of two Charlotte night clubs.

He and Bullock, who will probably be joined by a battery of county and city attorneys, will give the main arguments before Judge Riddle.

State Chemist Claims Refusal To Pay Taxes

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Lloyd Tyler, chief chemist of the State Department of Water Resources, and his wife say they "will refuse to pay our federal income taxes voluntarily" because of the war in Viet Nam.

"They are the first North Carolinians called to my attention that have come out against paying their taxes because of the war there," said J. E. Walker, district Internal Revenue Service director for North Carolina.

Asked if the Tylers would be prosecuted, Walker said there is a criminal statute for "willing negligence to pay taxes." He declined to comment whether the government will take action against the Raleigh couple, "until I learn of the exact circumstances."

He said the I.R.S. has authority to levy taxes on wages or salaries "whenever we can find personal assests to collect."

Walker explained that when one North Carolinian refused to pay, the government, rather than prosecuting him, put a levy on his earnings. This person was protesting all defense spending rather than just the Viet Nam war, he said.

Bill Johnson, assistant director of the Department of Water Resources, said: "A person's political convictions are his own business . . . Lloyd Tyler is a very competent worker."

The couple's names appeared on a peition printed in The Washington Post.

"We're Quakers," Mrs Phyllis Tyler told the DTH yesterday.

She said she and her husband are accusing the U. S. government of "crimes against humanity."

Asked about the "crimes," she explained: "We're going by the American Friends Service Committee report saying there is a great loss of South Vietnamese cilivian life.

"For every Viet Cong that dies, there are 30 civilians killed."

Mrs. Tyler said she and her husband have not set aside money to be collected by the I.R.S., like some other signers of the petition.

The petition, also signed by folksinger Joan Baez and Yale Professor Staughton Lynd, compares the Viet Nam war with "Russia's criminal intervention in Hungary."

Tyler is presently attending a seminar in Illinois.

When Miss Baez refused to pay federal income taxes, the government increased the amount to be collected from her.

Textile Workers Ask Pay Raise

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Textile Workers Union of America is pressing for wage increases at organized textile mills, including the huge Rock Hill (S.C.) Printing and Finishing Co.

Some 3,000 employes are represented by the TWUA at the Rock Hill plant.

Paul Swaity of Charlotte, Southern regional director of the union, said Saturday that wage clauses can be reopened for new negotiation under terms of the contracts with most Southern mills that are unionized.

In addition to Rock Hill Finishing and Printing Co., Swaity listed these other plants where in progress: Pacific Mills of Columbia, S. C.; Mt. Vernon Mills of Columbia, S. C.; Kendall in Newberry, S. C.; and American Thread at Clover, S. C.

Swaity said union locals at most of the other Southern plants that bargain with the TWUA have requested new wage negotiations. He said some 50 plants, including eight at Cone Mills, are organized in North Carolina and South Carolina.

The TWUA initiated a drive for a wage increase last December. Swaity said. The drive was stepped up after several New England mills agreed to salary hikes.

Wage increases in the meantime have been announced at a few unorganized textile mills, including Hanes Dye and Finishing Co. in Winston - Salem, Alamo Industries in Spartanburg, S. C., and Harriet and Henderson Mills in Vance County, N. C.

Officials say they are asking for wage increases in excess of the 3.2 per cent guideline President Johnson has requested in an effort to hold down inflation.

Swaity explained that the 3.2 per cent increase should not apply to the textile industry.

"We want much more," he said. "We feel that it just does not apply to an industry that is as lowly paid as textiles."

Swaity said the average hourly salary for straight time in the textile industry in the South is $1.75 an hour. He stressed that this does not include overtime paid for work beyond 40 hours in a week.

The last general wage increase announced by large and unorganized textile firms amounted to abut 5 per cent late last year. Similar wage hikes were given in 1963 and 1964.

In each year, a wage increase was announced by one of the larger textile firms and the others quickly followed suit.

Former Secret Agent Says British Spies Normal People

LONDON (AP) — Unlike the dashing secret agent of fiction and film, the British spy is a normal, frustrated, hard - worked normal person. That's what one of them claims.

In a book to be pushed April 18, John Whitwell claims his is the first factual book to be printed by a former senior British secret agent. John Whitwell is a pseudonym. Published by William Kimber, the book is entitled, "British Agent."

Whitwell claims his first assignment was to obtain "pickles" for Britain. This was just after Word War I, and the writer said pickles was the code name for the most powerful explosive then known. He said he went to Prague, found the discoverer of the explosive and could have bought the secret. Instead, the project failed when an army officer in London vetoed 1,000 pounds ($2,800) being given to a Czech scientist.

Had he been allowed to pay the scientist the money, Whitwell claims Britain might have been the first nation to split the atom.

He describes adventures that took him around the world, tragedies he experienced and tried to avert, and human incidents in which he became involved. He plays down his successes and is Frank about his failures.

Once he set up a powerful secret radio transmitter in a Latvian apartment house in 1934 and — to his horror — discovered that every time his operator flashed messages to London, all the lights in the apartment house flashed out the messages too.

In the Baltic countries he found Russian spies were never as clever as some people thought they were. They often left messages for one another stuck with chewing gum beneath church pews, and the hiding place was easy to find.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Remember, Clay Can Really Fight

Finding someone who will say something good about Cassius Clay is about as hard as finding someone who thinks the New York Mets will win the pennant — maybe harder. Well, you've found me. I don't like Clay's politics or religion any more than most people do, but those items are somewhat beside the point. The point is Clay's boxing skill, which is considerable.

Cassius may not know what to do with his feet outside the ring — he keeps sticking them in his mouth — but he has them well under control inside that squared circle. The erstwhile Louisville Lip is probably the fastest heavyweight champion of all time. And because of his speed, many people overlook his size. At 6-3 and 210-215 pounds, Cassius is about the same weight as Sonny Liston and much taller. Clay's statistics dwarf those of former champions Floyd Patterson and Rocky Marciano. It's pretty hard to improve on Clay's 24-for-24 record, too.

Via television and theater-TV I saw Clay's fight with Doug Jones and his first bout with Liston. In addition, I have heard some of his fights on radio, including his smashing victories over Patterson and George Chuvalo, and seen films of others. I am impressed. Clay is so fast that he is hard to hit. With his hand speed he can jab an opponent almost at will. He cut Liston up in the first fight and had Chuvalo's face looking like a bad case of the mumps.

Perhaps Clay doesn't have the crushing knockout punch of a Liston or Marciano, but he hits hard enough and often enough to get the job done. Not many of his opponents have gone the distance with him.

Patterson's Reign Was Boxing's Low

Critics like to point to the two Clay-Liston fights as the nadir of professional boxing. These two fights and Clay's antics since then, they say, have brought fighting to an all-time low. Actually, boxing hit bottom during the reign of Patterson.

Nothing makes the sport look more ridiculous than championship fights that obviously have no business being fought. Patterson fought almost no other kind. Cus D'Amato, his manager, realized that Floyd was a mediocre fighter and tried to prolong his tenure by matching him with every bum he could find. Clay and Chuvalo may have been a mismatch, but it looked like the fight of the century compared to Patterson and Pete Rademacher or Patterson and Tom McNeeley.

Patterson ducked Liston for so long he was starting to quack. Clay, on the other hand, seems willing to fight anybody. It was Ernie Terrell, not Clay, who pulled out of their scheduled bout in Toronto. (It was also the belief that Terrell was connected with Bernard Glickman, a friend of former boxing czar Frankie Carbo, that caused New York to reject the fight, thus setting the stage for the three-act comedy in Illinois.)

Don't Blame Clay For Liston Fights

Opponents of Clay customarily refer to the Clay-Liston fights, especially the second one, as farces. Perhaps Sonny should have fought until his arm fell off, rather than quitting between rounds when he injured it in the first fight; but the way the fight ended wasn't Clay's fault.

The second fight, of course, will live in infamy as the "phony knockout." Clay, detractors scoff, couldn't possibly chill a brute like Liston with one punch, especially one that didn't seem to have anything on it. Maybe they're right, although Sports Illustrated ran a sequence of pictures that showed the punch was harder than it looked.

But even if Liston was looking for someplace to sit down because he didn't want to fight, why blame Clay? After all, don't want to fight, why blame Clay? After all, don't forget the Marciano-Joe Walcott fights. In their first encounter, Walcott battered Marciano for the better part of 12 rounds and had the Rock on the floor. In the 13th, Marciano kayoed Jersey Joe. In the second fight, Walcott went out in one. Nobody criticizes Marciano for that fight.

As far as I'm concerned, Clay is the heavyweight champion — and a darned good one — until someone beats him. I don't see anybody around that is likely to, although Terrell must rate a chance. Judge Clay as a man by what he does outside the ring. If you don't like him, boo him when he fights; and cheer for the other guy. Don't, however, let your opinion of Clay as a person color your opinion of his boxing ability. He may well be "the greatest."

Terrapins Smash UNC Cindermen

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

Maryland's highly touted track team showed their strength yesterday as they swept five events and won all but two in routing the Carolina thinclads 115-1-3 to 29-2-3.

The Terps were led by Frank Costello, their fine high jumper. Costello soared 7'1" to easily out jump the field.

Carolin's only wins were in the discus and the mile. In the discus Pete Worthen outdistanced the Terps' Dick Crescher and Hank Noonenburg with a toss of 149'9-¾".

Mike Williams continued his winning streak in the mile as he outkicked Maryland's Melt Matthews and Ruben Becham to win in the fast time of 4:16.

The Terrapin's Ed Marks won the hop, step, and jump and the broad jump with leaps of 46'-⅝" and 23'-⅛" respectively. Carolina's Gary Iverson finished second and third in these two events.

In the sprints Carolina's Jon Levin picked up two seconds as Jim Lee of Maryland won the 100 and 220 in the times of 9.7 and 21.8.

The Tar Heels picked up four points in the shot as Felix Alley and Barney Varner captured second and third respectively behind Maryland's Hank Nonnenburg, who won with a heave of 50'3".

In the javelin Maryland's Richard Dull came within seven feet of breaking the Maryland school record of 250' held by teammate Russ White, won finished third.

Third place finishes by Tom Carpenter in the 880 and Richie Ambrose in the 440-yd. hurdles rounded out Carolina's scoring.

Carolina now stands 3-1 in dual competition. Next Saturday the team journeys to Charlottesville to take on the Cavaliers of Virginia.

Green Bay's Jimmy Taylor has interrupted Brown's string of rushing titles once. Who was the last man to lead the league in this department before Brown?
5. Since World War II, only four major college basketball teams have completed a full season, including tournaments, undefeated. Name them.

4. Vic Seixas, who played tennis for UNC in the late 1940's, won the Wimbledon championship in 1953 and the United States title in 1954.
5. True. No player has ever won all four major professional golf tournaments in the same year. In 1953, Ben Hogan won the Masters, U. S. Open and British Open, but didn't play in the PGA.

may legally purchase tax-paid liquor from an ABC store and transport not more than one gallon to his dwelling in either wet or dry areas, provided the seal and cap of the container is not broken," the memo said.

"Any person may consume said liquor in his private dwelling and serve the same to members of his family residing there and to his bonafide guests.

"We find no authority in the Turlington Act or the ABC Act of 1937 which would permit the possession of alcoholic beverages in liquor clubs, locker clubs or any place within a wet territory other than one's dwelling. . ."

W. C. Ludwick, the special state ABC officer assigned to Orange County, said Saturday that he will enforce the attorney general's ruling as directed.

The thing that comes closest to being a violation here are fraternity house parties with liquor being served.

Ludwick said, though that even these are all right.

Solo Homer Propels USC To 1-0 Win Over Carolina

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

A stocky South Carolina outfielder smacked a solo homer with two out in the fourth inning, and a tremendous southpaw pitcher toyed with Tar Heel bats yesterday as the Gamecocks pushed Carolina off a short-lived perch atop the ACC with a 1-0 victory.

That combination ruined an outstanding pitching job by Tar Heel left-hander Buddy Cahoon, who never got into any real trouble through his entire nine-inning stint — except for that one pitch which Gamecock left fielder Bob Mauro boomed over the left field wall.

BUDDY CAHOON
. . . tough loss

As a result, Cahoon suffered his first loss of the season (his record is now 1-1) although spacing six hits and three walks and fanning five.

UNC Captives

Carolina bats — which had exploded against Clemson just one day earlier — were the captives of USC lefty Bob Bryant, who upped his record to 3-0 and lowered his earned run average to a fabulous 0.56 for 36 innings. The Heels managed just four hits — all singles.

Bryant relied chiefly on a ripping fast ball, and after the first three innings he had the Tar Heels eating out of his hand.

He walked Bob Hume and gave up a two-out single to Bob Bonczek in the first inning, but got out of trouble as John Shaw hit into a force out.

Charlie Carr led off the second with a single, and Cahoon drew a one-out walk. But Bryant was lucky this time, as a Hume line drive was snared by first baseman Mike Fair, who doubled up courtesy runner Larry Mills.

Threat Stopped

In the third, Bryant walked Danny Talbott — who was hitless for the second straight day — and Bonczek, but a double play ball off the bat of Shaw ended the final UNC threat.

Rodney Thompson singled in the fourth and Carr got his second single in the sixth, but they were the only runners to reach base in each inning. Bryant retired the last 10 men to face him after Carr's single.

South Carolina rapped two singles in the first, but the second came with two out, and Cahoon fanned Mike Fair for the inning - ender. Scott Townsend led off the USC second with a double down the left field line, and moved to third on an infield out. But Cahoon retired the side on a short fly to right and a bouncer to first.

After the Mauro homer in the fourth, which came with two out on a 2-2 count, Cahoon let just three men on base, and picked Al Mirando off first for the third out in the seventh.

Carolina is now 2-1 in the ACC and 8-8 overall. Duke is met in Durham next Tuesday, and Maryland and Virginia visit Chapel Hill next Friday and Saturday.

stance, one elbow turned up, and his head cocked to one side. "The neck's too short, the sleeves are too tight, and the torso too long," he commented.

Then with one foot turned in, he wobbled a few steps across the floor. "If they get those things straightened out, it'll be a great suit." The others roared with laughter.

Then there was the time when astroanut Roger Chaffee was sitting in the Apollo simulator. A black box covers the astronaut's head with a small apparture giving him only that view of the planetarium's simulated sky as would be seen from the sapce capsule.

Red-headed astronaut Russell L. (Rusty) Schweickart was leaning over the simulator obstructing Chaffee's view.

"Hm, looks like a red-headed star going by out there," quipped Chaffee from under the box.

Another time someone asked Schweikart how he "drove over." "At 41,000," he replied, then with a wide grin he added, "Is there any other altitude?"

Friday afternoon, as astronauts Edward White and Chaffee stowed their gear in the T38A jet at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, a boy walked up to the astronauts rather timidly and said "I sure wish I could go with you."

"I wish we could take you with us," White replied with a twinkle.

A few minutes later there was only the hot backwash of their jet as they taxied toward the main runway. Seconds later their jet, the last of four, flashed down the runway, pulled up steeply, and disappeared into the clouds.

Walter Kaufmann, Tuesday afternoon's Carolina Symposium speaker, gives his ethical credo in The Faith of a Heretic book.

He claims he has renounced all existing bodies of belief, religious and otherwise, in order to work out his own credo. He says he has not renounced faith. "There are at least two types of faith," he says, "the faith of the true believer and the faith of a heretic."

Kaufmann's heresy is a standard philosophical rejection. It can be taken for what it is worth: it is not The Faith's unique feature.

Kaufmann clearly argues for theological anarchy. He wants no pitched religious camps, no rallying standards. "The practice of seizing on a label instead of considering a man's ideas is common," he says. "The labels, theist, atheist, and agnostic, provide an example. One rarely stops to think (beyond the labels)."

He debunks President Eisenhower's statement that our form of government "makes no sense unless it is founded in a deeply felt religious faith."

Kaufmann, on the contrary, says, "our form of government depends utterly on the widespread abandonment of any deeply felt faith in traditional Christianity."

In introducing his plea for intellectual consistency, Kaufmann says that many commonly held belief-sets are mutually exclusive. "It is popular to assume," he says, "that we can have everything and religion, too; that a maximum of pleasure, science, art, philosophy, music, religion, and poetry can be obtained if only we will learn the art of loving. Whatever you have, Christianity has too."

As a summation of his personal ethic, Kaufmann says men should take a few operant convictions, then rigorously follow them wherever they lead.

He says, "Let people who do not know what to do with themselves in this life, but fritter away their time reading magazines and watching television, hope for eternal life. If one lives intensely, the time comes when sleep seems bliss.

Carolina not included, was to discuss ways of preventing smugglers from purchasing cigarettes in North Carolina and selling them in other states where taxes cause the price to be as much as double the North Carolina price.

One suggestion to come from the Baltimore meeting was to hire undercover agents to spot persons buying large quantities of cigarettes and to notify Northern states of their auto license numbers. Arrests could be made in states which limit the quantity of cigarettes one can have.

Moore has previously suggested that states with smuggling problems could solve their problem by lowering their tax on cigarettes.

AAUP Files Court Brief

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The American Association of University Professors has filed as a "friend of the court" in the suit filed by UNC students seeking to overturn the amended speaker ban.

A representative from the AAUP said yesterday the amicus curiae consists of submitting a brief to the court in either written or oral form on behalf of the plaintiffs.

The brief would not be acceptable as evidence, since the case itself is not concerned with proving or disproving the facts of the case.

Local North Carolina chapters of the AAUP have been raising money for the court case, and the UNC chapter is now receiving donations from University professors to aid in paying for taking the case to court.

The brief, first filed March 31 in the U. S. Middle District Court in Greensboro, claims the gag law has done "irrepairable harm . . . in the deprivation of the plaintiffs' rights.

"The plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law in that the deprivation is present and continuing, and will extend into the future unless enjoined by this court . . ." the brief states."

After the case had been filed, Ralph Moody of the state attorney general's office, asked for and received a 30-day extension to give the defendants time to prepare an answer.

The case is scheduled to be heard by May 15. A three-judge panel will hear the case, according to Duke law professor William Van Alstyne.

Most likely, the three judges will include one from the court in which the case was filed, one from the higher court of appeals, and the third from a federal district court.

The plaintiffs also ask for an interlocutory judgment, a declaratory judgment, and a permanent injunction on the speaker ban.

When it hears the case, the court will be expected to exercise judicial interpretation to rule on the constitutionality of the speaker ban. The ban, according to the plaintiffs, not only violates Herbert Aptheker's and Frank Wilkinson's rights to speak, but also the students' right to hear.

Northwestern Mutual Life again reduces the cost of its life insurance

Another dividend scale increase, the 12th in 14 years, coupled with company growth, has raised our dividends in 1966 to a record $139 million—almost $15 million more than in 1965.

The effect of the increase varies depending on age of insured, type of policy and how long it has been in force. As a typical example, a 35-year-old man who bought a $10,000 straight life policy from NML in 1952 will receive in dividends $134.70 in 1966, instead of $81.10 based on the 1952 scale.

Year after year, high dividend earnings, plus rapidly growing cash values, continue to lower the net cost of NML insurance.

No Real Myths In Christianity, Richardson Says

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Mythology is in flux all around us, according to Dean Alan Richardson, but there is one "notable exception" where there are no real myths—in the religions stemming from the Hebrews, Judiaism, Christianity, and the Islam religion.

Speaking to more than 1,000 persons in Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon, Richardson attempted to show that a true myth is concerned with the forces of nature and is rational, but the Hebrews did not reach the idea of their God through mythology.

"They (simply) arrived at the idea of their God—The Creator," the English theologian said. "It seems to a confusion of capitalism to speak of the parables of God as myths.

"They were not arrived at by a process of myth-making or by a process of rational thinking. They came from Hebrew experience."

He noted that the Hebrews conducted a "long and relentless struggle" against mythology.

Richardson is the Dean of York Cathedral, England. His talk centered around an historical treatment of the development of mythology, including ancient religions, Greek poets and dramatists, Roman intellectual mythology, the "mystery" religions, and the myths of today — nationalism, communism, and facism, for example.

UNC Ranks High Among Prep Schools

A recent study of college choices among members of the prestigious Eastern prep schools places UNC seventh among the top 10 choices.

The study was conducted by the Porter Sargent Co. of Boston, Mass., publishers of the "Handbook of Private Schools."

North Carolina, says the publishing house for educational data, enjoys a high national repubation and in 1965 drew large numbers of new students from prep schools outside the South — taking nearly 40% of its prep - trained freshmen from New England and the Middle Atlantic States.

The 10-college list was compiled from reports submitted by 700 private preparatory schools. Each school named the six colleges enrolling the greatest numbers of its 1965 graduates and stated the number of grads entering each of the six.

The colleges and universities most frequently named by schools and reported totals of 1965 graduates entering each:

1. Harvard, 366; 2. Yale, 340; 3. University of Pennsylvania, 239; 4. University of California, 231; 5. Princeton. 197; 6. Boston University; 7. University of North Carolina, 193; 8. Cornell, 172; 9. Stanford, 171; and 10. Smith, 149.

Long: Potential Is High For Carolina Fraternities

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

Fraternities have a great potential here, Dean William G. Long wrote in the second edition of Green News & Views, which appeared Monday.

Long, Carolina's Dean of Men, offered "a great deal of time and every possible assistance" from the administration.

This Germans Weekend, he said, wasn't any rowdier than past Germans, but "added to a number of weekends over the past years, conspired to convince us that immediate action was necessary so that an attempt might be made to improve the controls exercised by fraternity leaders over social activities."

Long wrote in the front page article that his blanket censuring of the fraternity systme — which "I know that a number of fraternity men have been at a loss to understand" — was "to make it perfectly clear . . . that the fraternity system at this institution must control and regulate it's own affairs."

Long said he was confident fraternity leaders "will carry out the new obligations they have assumed, and that the public indignities . . . will be eliminated."

Long praised the high potential of fraternities to become "among the most significant social groups on this campus."

"Many of our local chapters are currently making fine contributions to the general social adjustment of our students," he said.

Long said in summary that "to survive, fraternities must reassume control over themselves and must actively work towards achieving their recognized goals."

* * *

IN AN EDITORIAL, the paper took issue with the representing of fraternity men as drunken parasites who contribute nothing to this University.

"Fraternity life" pictures in the 1965 Yack, the editorial said, gave this two-fold impression of fraternity men and sorority women:

" 'First, they really party it up on the big weekends, and secondly, they do absolutely nothing of any consequence in between.' "

Galbraith Asks Halt Of N. Viet Bombing

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

Opening the 14th Carolina Symposium Sunday, former U. S. Ambassador to India and close associate of President Kennedy, John Kenneth Galbraith, urged that the United States abandon bombing of North Viet Nam and assume a "holding policy" in the South.

He said he sees no chance for victory in the Vietnamese conflict, and said that the United States could not hope for a "brilliant bargain."

The 58 - year - old Harvard economy professor told a capacity crowd of 1,600 that "We must face seriously the likelihood that there will never again be a government in Saigon which is capable of prosecuting the war in conjunction with our forces.

"Under these circumstances our policy must be a holding action that allows of the best possible bargain between the non - communist groups in Viet Nam and the Viet Cong.

"There is no longer any doubt as to whether negotiations are desirable or not — although I doubt that they will be conducted by us. The bargain," he continued, "will not be brilliant. But we need have no apologies. We can say that we remained as long as we were wanted."

REMAIN ON DEFENSIVE

Galbraith said "We should remain on the defensive for the time being in whatever area we can hold with the present force," suggesting that the United States should not "walk out."

Galbraith said, "We must abandon the notion that we are going to roll the Viet Cong back from areas that they have controlled now for up to ten years. We must not invest lives, even those of other people in any such dubious enterprise.

(Following his address, Galbraith told the DTH in a private interview that he advocated complete removal of American forces from Viet Nam at a future time.)

He said the air attacks on the North should be discontinued because this policy creates "one major and intolerable risk which is involvement with China or conceivably Russia.

WARNS OF INVOLVEMENT

"It will be no comfort, if we find ourselves involved with the Chinese on the Asian mainland, that it resulted from a miscalculation. Let us always bear in mind," the former ambassador noted, "that the phrase "calculated risk' is a military euphemism for total ignorance of the outcome of a particular action."

Galbraith, whose address was greeted with a long ovation, termed the present United States policy in Viet Nam an outgrowth a policy which became obsolete even before the Eisenhower administration.

Galbraith said that the proper time to have reversed this foreign policy would have been before United States involvement in Viet Nam began.

CITES COLLEGES

He cited the growing influence of college communities in protesting the older policy. He commented that there is "increasing doubt that the United States was meant to police the whole world against systems of government that it finds unpalatable."

"We have paid rather heavily for the myth of the older policy in Viet Nam," he said. "But fortunately the cost in money has been larger than that in lives.

"And fortunately, also, the lessons — the dangers of automatic and unselective reaction to communism in accordance with a formula, the dangers of unlimited commitment, the dangers of supporting governments that are unsupported by the people, the shortcomings of military solutions — are all reasonably clear."

'DISSOLVE MYTH"

Galbraith concluded his address by saying "It could be that these distant and inhospitable jungles were well designed to dissolve our myth."

Galbraith's address "Modern Man and His Myth" was the first of a five - day series of talks which will continue through Thursday on the Symposium topic "Man, Mind and Myth."

LBJ 'Adaptable' On Policy Ideas

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

John Kenneth Galbraith sat on the couch with a glass of ginger ale in one hand and a partially - eaten pretzel in the other.

Responding to questions by Carolina Political Union members, he said that President Johnson is very adaptive to suggestions by others on foreign policy matters. By his own admission, the late President Kennedy was "simplistic" and rather hard - set in his attitudes, according to Galbraith.

Johnson is willing to listen to ideas from Secretary Rusk, whom Galbraith feels has become more dominant in foreign policy - making under LBJ than under JFK.

Asked whether he felt that India's policy towards the U.S. would change any in the future, Galbraith replied negatively, suggesting that India would try to be as friendly towards the United States as domestic leaders would allow.

Talking more about India, the former ambassador to that country related an anecdote about his trip there with Vice-President Humphrey for Premier Shastri's funeral.

Galbraith asked Humphrey

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

Fred, Can You Hear Us?

At about quarter of six yesterday evening, 45 minutes before the DTH editorial deadline, Student Body Vice president Bill Purdy entered the newspaper office, cleared his throat and dramatically announced that our noble leader — Editor Fred W. Thomas — has been abducted by the pledges of Chi Psi fraternity. He had summarily elected to take a little "pleasure-trip" to Virginia.

God knows where the poor devil is now, but in a rare showing of courage and spirit, his staff marshalled their forces and managed to perform his duties without him.

It was almost heartbreaking. His little grey typewriter sat alone in the corner of his desk. Clutched within its jaws was an unfinished editorial about the TV bill before Student Legislature. He never had a chance to finish it. (Sob.) It was the second in a two-part series.

No one knows as yet precisely how the fiends managed to get Fred out of the office. They must have utilized the back door, which runs through the ad-staff's domain and counted on the friendly help of Jack Harrington, rich, insidious, vituperative business manager of the DTH.

You can bet he put up a fight, though.

One thing the readers can also bet on is that before the week is up, those pledges will suffer woeful agonies for their transgressions. Fred is bound to make it back to town sometime and when he does, Mephistopheles will look like Peck's Bad Boy in comparison.

All we can say is, go to it, Fred. Hup, two, three, four, deep knee-bends, pushups, squat thrusts, the paddle, the rack, the lash. Give 'em a little something they will all remember for a long time.

And when you get back, please don't fail to write a few candid words about your experiences. Tell the inquiring public what you intend to do about it and make sure that the editorial will be suitable for framing and a position on the mantle as a reminder to pledges everywhere.

It'll make quite a crusade.

Wherever you are this morning, Fred, please remember that our hearts and hopes are all with you. Whether you're standing on the highway with long thumb extended forelornly, or shivering amid the scrub pine in your underwear, or sitting, tarred and feathered, in the Danville jail, we're pulling for you, Fred.

Fred?

Fred?

Can you hear us, Fred?

The CFI Lives

Just to ease the minds of the thousands of Committee for Free Inquiry fans on campus, the DTH conducted a short investigation yesterday and found that the CFI is indeed still alive.

The money CFI promised to collect for the imminent Frederal Court case has been, sadly, a meager amount, but the American Association of University Professors and the American Civil Liberties Union have pledged their support, financially and legally.

The AAUP is busy collecting money for the court case, and has indicated it will file as a "friend of the court," as soon as the state makes its answer next month. The ACLU will probably file an amicus curiae, too.

A meeting is scheduled this week among some of the defendants in the suit. Most likely, it will take place in the attorney general's office in Raleigh.

Where Are The Big Mouths?

The sound of voices yelling "let's go, big blue" echoed in Kenan "valley" yesterday, but something was noticably wrong.

The girls' voices drowned out those of the boys'.

Only five of 30 prospective cheerleaders showing up in Kenan Stadium yesterday were boys. Head Cheerleader Jerry Houle said he was disappointed in the turnout of boys, saying he "expected many more."

There are two male and three female vacancies on next year's varsity cheering squad which will be filled at tryouts next Tuesday.

This week cheerleading applicants are given a chance to learn the cheers and motions accompanying them.

Each day this week prospective cheerleaders will share Kenan Stadium with gridders going through spring practice. Instruction will be given by present varsity squad members from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Houle said there is still plenty of time for other interested candidates to join in the practice sessions.

Wonder what ever happened to all the guys with the big mouths who're forever waving their arms around in the air?

Sinners Get Double Their Money's Worth In Las Vegas

As every good God-fearing American knows, public nudity and gambling are both frowned upon by the Almighty.

Nevertheless, gambling is a well established part of our culture. And public nudity? Well, that's supposed to be the latest trend in bathing suits.

Both sins for yars have been present in corruption - ridden Las Vegas, Nev., where they survive despite the ineffectual pleas of the clergy; as for the police, they've just about given up hope of ever eradicating the vice.

Now, however, the law enforcement agencies are ready to tackle the problen anew.

Harvey Dickerson, attorney general of Nevada, said last week that gambling and sex may be all right separately but the combination is just too overwhelming.

Dickerson commented about some nearly bare-busted blackjack dealers: "I feel very strongly that this effect distracts the player's attention from the hands that he's playing and makes it easier for the house to win."

But if the gamblers considered the almost topless dealers a threat to their winnings, they didn't say so. The Associated Press, in fact, reported: "The outfits, unique even for bold Las Vegas, drew a larger than normal crowd during the early morning shift."

Most of the girls didn't care either. Robert Miller, Silver Nugget casino manager, said that of the seven girls chosen to expose themselves to the gamblers, only one objected.

And a spokesman for the police admitted: "No one seemed to mind, including the women."

Dickerson confessed he hadn't seen the dealers' uniforms, though it's possible he might visit the casino for an inspection.

Discussing Dickerson's protest against the topless uniforms, one cynic asked, "Do you know a better way to get free publicity?"

Dickerson is being perfectly sincere when he protects Americans against this wedding of two different forms of degradation.

The morality-minded attorney general simply realizes that his countrymen can in good conscience stomach only one sin at a time.

Galbraith Calls For Change In US Viet Nam Policy

(Editor's note—The following is an excerpt from economist John K. Galbraith's Sunday night speech keynoting the Carolina Symposium.)

By JOHN K. GALBRAITH

Our involvement in Viet Nam will be, as I say, the last legacy of the automatic anti-communism of the established authority. I have sympathy for President Johnson on this problem; the proper time to have reversed the policy was before our involvement began. No one has suggested that Viet Nam is of strategic or military importance to the United States. No one, I believe, has suggested that this is a disciplined warrior race that we must have on our side. We are there because the old policy called for an automatic and unilateral intervention along the boundary. This being so it did not consider the advantages of the terrain in which we fought or the vitality of the social structure that we defended. Once it was considered sound military strategy to reflect on such matters. But the automatic anti-communism of the established authority precluded such choice—or left it to the enemy.

For the old coalition there was, as I have observed, only one kind of oppression. That was from the communists. Repressive or even incompetent governments on the right were on our side. Although credulity has been taxed by the governments of South Viet Nam as by no others, they have been defended nonetheless. A certain amount of righteous indignation has been directed at their critics right up to the moment of their final collapse.

One of the recurrent and unnecessary errors of our foreign policy going far beyond Viet Nam is the assumption that governments, which seem quite acceptable to excellent New Yorkers and our own diplomats, are euqally acceptable to their own people. . .

We must, of course, abandon the notion —as I am sure most sensible people in Washington already have—that we are going to roll the Viet Cong back from areas that they have controlled now for up to ten years. We must not invest lives, even those of other people, in any such dubious enterprise. It is not all that clear that the alternative for the Vietnamese who happened to survive would be durably better.

We should remain on the defensive for the time being in whatever area we can hold with the present force. This may well be rather small. But it will provide a refuge for those who have joined our enterprise. It will sufficiently establish the point that we cannot be shoved out.

There can be no real doubt as to the military feasibility of this policy. The oldest tendency of military men is to describe as unfeasible what they do not wish to do. If one can clear and hold all of South Viet Nam with a large force, one can hold a limited area with a smaller force.

We should, and this is a clear but vital step beyond present policy, suspend air attacks on the North. This is not for humane reasons although I am not opposed to humanity. Nor is it because air power is both indiscriminate and ineffective, although this is true. Rather it is because these, and the temptation to extend them, create the one major and intolerable risk which is involvement with China or conceivably Russia. The temptation to extend these attacks is especially strong when things go wrong politically in the South. This, above all, must now be resisted. . .

Meanwhile we must face seriously the likelihood that there will never again be a government in Saigon which is capable of prosecuting the war in conjunction with our forces. A government that reflects the interest of the people will encounter their suspicion of foreigners, their struggle for a national identity, and their terrible war weariness. A government that works closely with us and fights the war will not have the support of the people. This is not defeatism; it is a plain reading of the evidence of these last months and years.

Under these circumstances our policy must be a holding action that allows of the best possible bargain between the non communist groups in Viet Nam and the Viet Cong. There is no longer any doubt as to whether negotiations are desirable or not, althought I doubt that they will be conducted by us. The bargain, let us face it, will not be brilliant. But we need have no apologies. We can say that we remained as long as we were wanted. . .

What we should welcome, and in the end will have to welcome, is a regional settlement, as in Laos. At most, the central government will be only a loose federalism between areas under different control. But that is about all Indo-Chinese governments ever have been. . .

We have paid rather heavily for the myth of the older policy in Viet Nam. But fortunately the cost in money has been larger than that in lives. And fortunately, also, the lessons—the dangers of automatic and unselective reaction to communism in accordance with forumla, the dangers of unlimited commitment, the dangers in supporting governments that are unsupported by their people, the shortcomings of military solutions—are all reasonably clear. It could be that these distant and inhospitable jungles were well designed to dissolve our myth.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Open Trials Bad For Student Courts

(Editor's note: This is the third in a series of four articles by the vice chairman of the Men's Council.)

By BILL MILLER

As a last statement dealing specifically with charges made against the Honor System by former DTH editor Ernie McCrary, this article is concerned with both the case for open trials and the area of jurisdiction of the Campus Code.

Our present judicial statutes prohibit the identification of students involved in disciplinary hearings before any student council, and furthermore prohibit the presence of a DTH reporter at a hearing unless the defendant does not object.

In reference to this situation, McCrary has charged, "The honor system is suffering," and has proposed a solution which "would literally stop every student who contemplated cheating or violating any other code offense dead in his tracks." The solution? "Have open trials."

There are numerous substantial reasons why we should not institute a system of open tirals, in which students' names and offenses would be publicized.

First, the major premise set forth by the editor, that students would literally be frightened out of committing an offense if detection of the offense necessarily meant public exposure, is as negative and poor a rationale as one can design. McCrary believes the student "would be aware of his responsibilities under the honor system in a way now unknown at UNC." Most all offenders readily admit an awareness of their responsibility to t he honor system when they committed the infraction. Would the threat of intimidation make them any more aware?

McCrary states that "the number of Honor or Code and Campus Code violators would decrease phenomenally." Does this same threat decrease the number of rapes and murders in civil society?

A better argument for open trials rests on the contention that students have the right to be aware of the proceedings of their judiciary, both for information and critical appraisal. A DTH reporter should be allowed to cover the presentation of testimony and cross-examination of witnesses and defendants (if there is one who would be willing to do so). But anonymity of defendants must still be maintained. Last year's Tar Heel evidently was willing to report cases under these conditions, but only two or three cases were handled in such manner. The fact is that reporters were not sent to the trials. Most defendants, if not all, would have cooperated, but only twice did reporters appear. In an attempt to inform the student Body of Men's Council proceedings, the author wrote and submitted to the Tar Heel accounts of all trials through December which were not published.

The question remains: Why not reveal the identity of Code violators? The answer is found somewhere between the necessity of having disciplinary action and the considerable social damage that sometimes follows such discipline.

An article in the "Yale Law Journal" declares that as a result of certain punishments, "the student suffers the loss of a status and the destruction of a set of relationships which have unique intrinsic worth." Even McCrary implies that "such treatment (would be) too cruel and rude." The AAUP, in its "statement on The Academic Freedom of Students," states in clear terms that "data from disciplinary and counseling files should not be available to unauthorized persons on campus or to any person off campus except for the most compelling reasons." And by far the vast majority of university students uphold this policy.

Exposure is too damaging to the student. This alone justifies anonymity.

A consideration of the area of jurisdiction of the Campus Code eventually boils down to the problem of "in loco parentis:" should the university take over where parents leave off? And if so, how much?

Both legal decisions and prevailing examples agree that the university should (or may) impose behavior requirements on her students. We have ours — e.g., the Campus Code. Can we effectively enforce it by imposing two standards on students, one while in Chapel Hill and one while away

There is no best answer, but students who either officially represent UNC or who will be identified with UNC because of their residency here as a student should be considered under the jurisdiction of the code if they leave the school.

The concluding article will present some important members of the Judiciary and will briefly explain the operation of our court system.

Westaby Says Bike Study Is Not Ban Movement

By DEMONT ROSEMAN

"All of a sudden there seemed to be a lot of motorbikes on the campus and we felt this was bound to be a hazard. But we wanted to be sure.

"We didn't want to invent a problem. We just wanted to be in a position to plan a program before a problem arrived."

With these brief historical remarks, Miss Janice R. Westaby, a specialist in accident prevention at the School of Public Health, began to describe a special study of two - wheeled motor vehilce accidents among UNC students here.

The four - month study was a joint venture involving the Student Health Service, the office of the Dean of Men and the School of Public Health.

"This was not a ban - the - bikes movement," Miss Westaby emphasized. "It was just a look at the motorbike riders and their habits to see if we could save some of them from injuries."

The multiplication of motorbikes on the UNC campus has been spectacular. The most recent count showed one motorbike for every 10 cars — about 600 student motorbikes and 6,500 student cars.

For the motorbike study here, medical reports and accident reports were analyzed and most of the injured students were interviewed.

"We were interested," Miss Westaby explained, "in the nature and the severity of the injuries, the circumstances of the accidents, the time of day and the day of the week, the weather, who owned the motorbike, was a passenger involved, was another vehicle involved and did the injured student own and use protective equipment."

Fifty - eight injury - producing accidents were reported during the four months. This number was considered low because the study period was interrupted by a three - week Christmas vacation and a between - semesters recess.

One of the biggest surprises in the study was a finding that almost half of the accidents involved another motor vehicle. Either the motorbike struck a car or vice versa.

"Our conclusion," Miss Westaby said, "is that we're dealing with inexperienced bike riders and we're dealing with auto drivers inexperienced in coping with a new problem."

Details of the accidents pointed to a failure of the motorbikes to follow generally accepted auto traffic patterns.

"The kids ride motorbikes as if they're following bicycle rules rather than automobile rules," Miss Westaby observed.

Freshmen had the most motorbike accidents (55 per cent).

"This reflects only that this was also the largest group at risk," Miss Westaby hastened to point out. "More freshmen owned two wheeled motor vehicles."

(UNC freshmen are not permitted to own four - wheeled motor vehilces.)

If accident rates during the four - month study are worked out for each adademic class, the seniors actually had the most accidents — 10 accidents per 100 motorbiking seniors compared to 5.9 accidents per 100 motorbiking freshmen.

A surprising number of the injured students were riding borrowed bikes — one of every four.

"An interesting side note of our study is the fact that one vehicle was involved in four injury — producing accident, each accident was a different operator," Miss Westably recalled.

The most accident - free day was Monday.

Half of the accidents occurred on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and about two of every three accidents happened between noon and 8 p.m.

Head injuries were the most serious results of bike accidents but, fortunately, were the least frequent. Injuries to the legs from the knee down occurred most frequently in the study.

Half of the 97 injuries in the 58 accidents were classified as severe. In this category were death, concussion with loss of consciousness, cuts requiring stitches, fractures, second - degree burns and internal injuries.

One student in every four required hospitalization. Two students have died in motorbike accidents so far this school year.

Also interesting was a finding that about half of the operators of lightweight motorcycles surveyed as a part of the study owned protective equipment (helmets, booots, face shields and jackets), but in only one per cent of the accidents in the study was the operator wearing any protective gear.

Four of every five vehicles lacked protective devices such as leg guards, exhaust guards, spill bars and ignition cutoffs.

Out of the four - month study have come three possible courses of action to prevent motorbike injuries among UNC students: (1) regulation of the activities of the riders; (2) education of the drivers to safer riding habits and protection from injury; and (3) a combination of education and regulation.

"Regulation alone won't solve the problem," Miss Westaby maintains. "Regulation of itself adds additional problems of enforcement, inspection and so forth.

"In addition, regulation of motorcycle use on the campus and - or in Chapel Hill may be of little value."

She believes that regulation must be statewide and must cover all motorcycle riders if it is to have any meaning.

She would place the main focus on education but she favors limited regulation, with emphasis on special licensing.

"If the motorcycle operator understands why he should follow certain safety precautions and is motivated to follow them," she said, "the cause will be better served than if he is forced to do something he doesn't understand and resents."

Are Greeks Losing Place On Campus?

By JUDY BOLCH

Are fraternities and sororities losing their place on the modern university campus?

The Panhellenic Council doesn't think so.

In an effort to express their confidence in the continuing importance of the sorority-fraternity system and to implement ideals to be followed to further improve the groups, the council and their Inter - Sorority Alumnae Board recently approved a guide and declaration of principles for its members.

"We believe that the fraternity - sorority system is an important group work experience which contributes toward the development of a sense of responsibility, a concern for the welfare of others and a deep interest in good campus citizenship," the council said.

Noting that the all - fraternity scholastic average has consistently been higher than the all campus average, the council added that it planned to continue to stress scholarship by refusing to pledge anyone whose grades are lower than a "C", by creating a proper study climate in their houses and by recognizing and rewarding good scholarship above any other campus activity.

In the area of personal conduct, the sororities pledged to both remind their members of the existing rules and expect them to follow these rules. They also said that they hoped to instill a sense of personal obligation to the University and to impress upon the girls that the moral and social values implicit in the teaching of the sororities provide standards they should uphold.

Student Chases UFO's

Curtiss Moore, a UNC journalism student, spent last Sunday chasing flying saucers.

Well, not exactly, but awfully close to it.

Curtiss, the Chapel Hill correspondent of the Associated Press, astonished his news sources by calling them up and asking them whether they'd heard of any UFO's sighted around here lately. But only after an explanation to police chiefs, radio stations and others he contacted:

"Hello — this is Curtiss Moore, the Associated Press correspondent in Chapel Hill.

"I'm in this writing contest. I'm out to win this $1,000 award, and they've asked me to find out who I could contact in case somebody saw flying saucers."

Crazy? Of course I'm crazy, but wouldn't you be for $1,000?

Curtiss, who works for The News and Observer, on weekends, has a good chance of winning the money, too.

He's already collected $450 from the Hearst Foundation by participating in other contests.

Furthermore, Curtiss has demonstrated a superb news judgment. Asked whom he'd contact after the chief of police to check up on a flying saucer rumor he said:

"Who says I'm going to call the police first? Naturally the first place I'd call would be The Daily Tar Heel."

Supreme Court Strikes Arizona Loyalty Oath And Accepts Passport Case

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Arizona requirement that state employes take a loyalty oath was struck down by the Supreme Court today as a threat to "the cherished freedom of association protected by the first amendment."

And, in another action in the civil liberties area, the justices agreed to rule whether citizens who travel to Communist Cuba without state department permission may be punished with fines or imprisonment.

Justice William O. Duglas, announcing the 5-4 decision declaring that the 1961 Arizona loyalty-oath law cannot stand, said such a requirement "rests on the doctrine of 'guilt by association' which has no place here."

Speaking for the four dissenters, Justice Byron R. White said Arizona has the right to "prevent its employes from affiliating with the Communist Party or other organizations prepared to employ violent means to overthrow constitutional government."

The Arizona law subjected to perjury prosecution and loss of his job any state employe who took the loyalty oath and "knowingly and wilfully becomes or remains a member of the Communist Party" or other organizations dedicated to overthrowing the state government. However, anyone who refused to sign was not subject to dismissal but could not be paid.

Mrs. Vernon Elfbrandt and her husband, teachers in separate schools in Tucson, refused to sign but have taught without being paid for nearly five years.

Their salaries have been held in special trust funds set up by their two school districts — Mrs. Elfbrandt's totaling $33,483, her husband, $27-46. They have gotten by on contributions from Quaker and civil rights groups.

Mrs. Elfbrandt, learning of today's decision, first said she was "speechless" but recovered soon to tell newsmen in Tucson:

"It was never a question of loyalty but rather one of the basic freedom of every Arizonian. I am very excited and pleased. I am filled with gratitude for the many people who stuck by me for many years, especially officials of the school district who were so patient."

Douglas, in explaining the court's reason, said the law suffered from a "constitutional infirmity" — it broadly covered membership in the Communist Party and similar organizations rather than "a specific intent to further the unlawful aims" of the organizations.

Nothing in the oath, he said, attempts to "exclude association by one who does not subscribe to the organization's unlawful ends." Douglas added:

"Those who join an organization but do not share its unlawful purposes and who do not participate in its unlawful activities surely pose no threat, either as citizens or as public employes . . ."

The Cuban travel case the court agreed to hear, but not until next fall, stems from a 1961 ban the State Department put on travel to Cuba without a passport and a department declaration then that all passports are invalid for travel to the island unless specifically endorsed by the Secretary of State.

Last May, the court ruled the State Department has the authority to impose area restrictions, including a ban on travel to Cuba. But it did not rule on whether crminal action under federal law could be taken against people who went there without approval.

The criminal action, now being tested by Helen Maxine Levi Travis of Los Angeles, was under a 1952 federal law that controlled travel "in time of war or national emergency."

After two trips to Cuba in 1962 via Mexico, she was prosecuted under the law, fined $,1-000 and sentenced to six months in prison, but put on probation.

In a third significant action today, the court cleared the way for trial of a Chicago police captain's $350,000 libel suit against Time, Inc.

The captain, Frank Pape, claimed he was libeled in an article in the Nov. 24, 1961, issue of Time magazine, which discussed the civil rights suit brought against him by a Chicago Negro.

The U. S. circuit court in Chicago ordered a trial, but Time appealed to the Supreme Court, citing its 1964 decision in the New York Times case that actual malice must be proved before a public official can collect damages.

The court did not explain its action, except to note that justice Hugo L. Black would have reversed the circuit court.

U.S. Warplanes Destroy Missile Sites Near Hanoi

SAIGON (AP) — The raids that brought U. S. warplanes the closest yet to Hanoi destroyed two Soviet - built anti-aircraft missile installations and left two of the North Vietnamese capital's key rail and highway links in ruins, a U. S. spokesman said today. Navy pilots reported the probable destruction of another missile complex 160 miles to the south.

Word of the results of the attacks reached Saigon today, 24 hours after the U. S. Air Force and Navy aircraft carried out the raids. The reports of the devastation highlighted the day's war communique. Action in South Viet Nam continued on a low key and political pressures against Premier Nguyen Cao Ky eased further.

In what the spokesman called a highly successful strike around the northern capital, U. S. Air Force pilots reported only one surface - to - air missile (SAM) got into the air but it missed the diving, swerving pack of F100 Super Sabres and supersonic F105 Thunderchiefs.

The plans pounded the sites 15 and 17 miles south and southwest of Hanoi with rockets and 20mm cannon fir after unloading 750-pound bombs on primary targets.

They were in the sixth and seventh SAM installations reported destroyed by U. S. planes since July 27 when the first site came under attack. Eight others have been reported damaged.

Planes from the U. S. 7th fleet carrier Kitty Hawk struck at the same time around Vinh, the major junction on North Viet Nam's supply line to communist fighters in South Viet Nam. They hit at a suspected SAM location 27 miles south of the coastal city and reported huge secondary explosions and fire. A spokesman in Saigon said the planes apparently hit liquid fuel used in the missiles. He added that the explosions and fire apparently destroyed the entire complex.

The Soviet Union is believed to have shipped 86 stationary and mobile SAM installations into North Viet Nam. Up to now, officials say, more than 160 missiles have been fired at U. S. raiders but only 10 planes have been downed by them.

An unknown number of SAM sites ring Hanoi and Haiphong, the vital North Vietnamese seaport. Many mobile SAM launchers are moved around as needed.

The attacks on the sites near Hanoi came after the Super Sabres and Thunderchiefs pounded a bridge on the main highway between Hanoi and Haiphong and another south of the capital on the main railroad line between Hanoi and Vinh.

The U. S. spokesman said both bridges were put out of commission.

Hanoi and Haiphong are officially off limits to U. S. air raiders by order from Washington because of a potentially high civilian casulty rate in any bombing attack.

The closest American war planes had come to Hanoi previously was on Nov. 7, when the raiders destroyed a SAM support facility at Dong Em, 22 miles southwest of the capital.

The closest any raid has come to Haiphong was 14 miles in December when U.S. planes attacked the Uong Bi thermal power plant.

The U. S. spokesman said no American planes were lost in the attacks around Hanoi. But five planes were knocked down by conventional fire Saturday through Monday. Elsewhere over the north, two airmen were listed as missing. The others were rescued.

The strikes in Hanoi's suburbs prompted a North Vietnamese charge that U. S. officials were "deliberately intensifying and expanding their war of aggression in an atempt to save their drastic situation in South Viet Nam."

The Hanoi regime fired off a protest to the international control commisssion for Viet Nam, which consists of representatives from Canada, India and Poland.

The loss of five U. S. planes over the weeked brought to 210 the number lost in the 15 month old air war against North Viet Nam.

In addition to three planes lost Sunday in raids around Vinh and Dong Hoi, a U. S. spokesman reported two airmen were missing after their plan was hit Saturday near Dong Hoi.

On Monday a Navy AIH Skyraider was hit near Tiger Island just north of the frontier but the pilot was rescued by a helicopter.

Air activity in the south included another attack by Guam - based B52 bombers —this one against a suspected Viet Cong marshalling point 65 miles northwest of Saigon near the Cambodian border.

U. S. Marines were involved in the only reported ground action.

A Marine spokesman said they killed 36 Viet Cong in three clashes near Da Nang Sunday. Marine casulaties were reported light.

On the political scene, Thich Tri Quang, the nation's most militant Buddhist leader, traveled about the country counseling his followers to refrain from new demonstrations. He said the promise of Ky's militions in three to five months "fulfilled our main demand."

Superior Court Judge Rules Klan Rally Legal

LUMBERTON (AP) — Superior Court Judge William A. Johnson ruled today that the Ku Klux Klan has the legal right to hold its cross - burning rallies in the Lumbee Indian country of southeastern North Carolina.

Denying a state request that a temporary injunction against Klan rallies in Robeson County be made permanent, Johnson said:

"I do not believe that the court can assume the role of policeman or sheriff. Freedom of speech and freedom of assembly are so vital, I cannot see how this court can deny an organization the right to meet, regardless of my personal feelings about the organization."

The state had filed 170 affidavits, signed by Robeson County citizens, Indian leaders, state law officers and county authorities, warning of violence and bloodshed should the KKK rally near any of the Lumbee settlement.

The Lumbees long have been bitter enemies of the Klan. In 1958, near the predominantly Indian community of Maxton, the Lumbees scattered a Klan rally with warwhoops and gunfire.

Judge Johnson said his decision "was not an easy one, but there still remains the fact that because the Indians of this county object to the KKK, they have no right to protest by taking up arms or through violence."

The Superior Court ruling came after a one hour hearing Monday. An earlier hearing March 31 had taken some two hours.

Klan attorney Lester Chalmers of Raleigh filed no affidavits today contesting the state's testimony of possible violence and bloodshed.

Chalmers centered his argument on the freedom of speech and freedom of assembly, stating that the Klan planned no violence and that any trouble would be initiated by the Lumbees.

An attempt by the American Civil Liberties Union to enter the case was denied by Judge Johnson.

ACLU attorney Anthony Brannon of Durham, asked to file a brief as a friend of the court. Both Chalmers and Malcomb Seawell, representing the state, protested Brannon's motion. Judge Johnson ruled the ACLU action came too late and "would only result in another delay in this case."

Chalmers told the court if there was any threat at a Klan rally, "the state has time to provide police protection."

The Klan attorney said the State of North Carolina has sent law officers into Henderson to protect a mill owner who allegedly was threatened by union pickets.

"If the state can provide protection to a mill owner," Chalmers added, "I believe it can provide equal protection to the KKK for an exercise in freedom of speech."

UNC Battles Duke Today

The Carolina baseball team journeys to Durham today for its first meeting of the season with Duke. Game time is 3 p.m.

The Tar Heels carry a 2-1 conference record into the contest. The overall mark is 8-8. Duke is 1-5 and 5-11.

If UNC beats the Blue Devils and Wake Forest tops N. C. State, the Tar Heels will go into a percentage tie for first in the ACC with Clemson.

Lefthander Beattie Leonard (2-3) is the probable starting pitcher for UNC. In his last start, on April 11, he threw a one-hitter at Georgia Tech. Carolina pitching has allowed only two runs in the last three games.

Leading hitter for Coach Walter Rabb's Tar Heels is first baseman Danny Talbott. Through 16 games, Talbott is hitting .406. An 0-for-7 slump against Clemson and South Carolina cut Talbott's mark from .456.

The conference standings through games of Sunday, are as follows: (Conference records first)

Clem 6-2, .750; 12-2, .857
N. C. State 3-1, .750; 6-6, .500
Maryland 4-2, .667; 7-5, .583
UNC 2-1, .667; 8-8, .500
USC 5-3, .625; 10-3, .769
Wake Forest 1-4, .200; 5-7, .417
Duke 1-5, .167; 5-11, .313
Virginia 1-5, .167; 3-10, .231

Russell Named Celtics Coach

BOSTON (AP) — Bill Russell, former All - America whose defensive wizardry built the Boston Celtics into a perennial power, was named coach of the National Basketball Association club yesterday, becoming the first Negro to head a major league sports team.

The 32-year-old Russell, who is completing the first season of a three-year contract paying him $100,000 annually, will move into the role of player-coach after the Celtics wind up their championship series with the Los Angeles Lakers.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Spring Sports Count, Too

Most of the publicity and interest generated by college sports centers around football first and basketball second. Such emphasis is only natural. Football has been played on campuses for nearly a century, longer, for example, then major league baseball has been played. Basketball also has a long history as a college sport.

Most importan, both of these sports became popular as college sports. Professional football and basketball developed later and used college players ofr material almost exclusively.

In contrast with the big sports, spring sports tend to be played down. Collegiate baseball, tennis and golf get little national publicity. The primary area of interest for these sports is outside the colleges — professional baseball, professional and amateur tennis and golf. (There is interest in college track, but it is the individuals, not the teams, that receive most of the attention.)

There's nothing really wrong with playing up the "Big Two" sports, but the little sports shouldn't be forgotten. A school with mediocre football and basketball teams is branded as weak athletically, despite fine records in other sports.

At Carolina, the football and basketball seasons were not exactly resounding successes this year. The gridders were 4-6 and were crushed, 34-7, by Duke. The basketball team did wind up with a winning season (16-11) but lost three straight to the Blue Devils.

The Tar Heels may be able to recoup some lost glory this spring. The tennis team is having its usual outstanding season. Coach Don Skakle's netters have reeled off six straight wins since having their 33-match win streak snapped by Florida State. Next month they will defend their ACC title in the tournament at Clemson.

On the diamond the Tar Heels are currently in a tie for third in the Conference. Walter Rabb's boys have lost only one ACC game — by a 1-0 count. Three conference games this week, with Duke, Maryland and Virginia, should give a clearer line on the Tar Heels' title chances. Danny Walker and Buddy Cahoon showed some top-caliber pitching in the weekend series with Clemson and South Carolina, and the victory over the previously unbeaten Tigers gives Carolina fans something to get excited about.

Spring could be a bright season for UNC sports.

Meaningless Rankings

Speaking of college baseball, one of the more interesting exercises in nonsense is the bi-weekly ranking of the top ten college ball clubs. The teams are ranked by a poll conducted by a national newspaper devoted to college baseball.

Football and basketball polls don't mean much, but at least the people voting have had an opportunity to learn some thing about what they are voting on. They can see some games live and others on television or film, and what they don't see, they can read about.

Baseball balloters, on the other hand, are really voting blind. They probably see some of the games that take place in their area and are familiar with the merits of the teams around them. About teams from other parts of the country, however, the voters can know very little, if anything. Sports writers in North Carolina know which teams are good in the Atlantic Coast Conference, but what about the South West Conference or the Big Ten?

The tendency, of course, would be for the voter to rate the teams in his area high, since he knows them. He may feel like giving his team a boost if it is any good. The only way he can rate teams from the rest of the country is by their won-lost records, which may be out of date when he gets them. Caliber of competition is impossible to assess.

The ratings themselves are rather old when they come out, since the publication is a bi-weekly and balloting is done by mail. They are subject to wild fluctuations; teams can go from seventh to first to tenth in three polls.

The baseball rankings don't really hurt anybody, of course. They can be nice if your favorite team gets a high rating. Remember what they are, though, and take them with two grains of salt.

Danny Weaves A Spell

Walker Controls Tigers

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Assistnat Sports Editor

And then there was Danny Walker.

Clemson had breezed to an unbeaten record through 13 games, and had everybody fearing that the ACC title race would become a shambles before it got started.

But last Friday the Tigers ran into an old nemesis, and they never had it so tough.

An old nemesis? You'd better believe it.

When Walker beat the big boppers from Death Valley by 6-1 the other day, it wasn't the first time Clemson had seen the Tar Heels' senior righty. Their formal introduction took place April 30, 1965 on old Emerson Field, when they tried to hit him for a full 13 frustrating innings, managed only five safe blows for their trouble and got beat 4-3.

Last Friday wasn't the second time for Walker and the Tigers either. He pitched three innings of hitless relief against them at Clemson later in the '65 season in a game the Tigs finally won off another UNC pitcher.

In fact, Coach Bill Wilhelm's team had not been beaten (19-0-2 record) by anybody since that April day some 50 weeks ago—until they came back to Chapel Hill.

Quite A Spell

And then there was Danny Walker on the hill again, rockin' and firin' and weaving his spell.

And quite a spell it was, too.

The six - foot, 185-pounder struck out nine and walked but one while working his second straight complete game in as many starts. He allowed eight hits, only four until the ninth inning.

Although he lowered his earned-run-average to a solid 3.12, that is still a ballooned figure when compared to the type of pitching which is the 21-year-old's usual standard.

He worked 44 innings in eight games for Coach Walter Rabb last year, yielding 28 hits, fanning 38, walking just 16 and posting a brilliant 1.02 ERA. His record was 3-1.

During the past summer he pitched for New Market in the Shenandoah Valley League in Virginia, hurling nine complete games for a 7-2 record and finishing with a 2.04 ERA in about 100 innings.

50% Fast Balls

Danny calls the slider his best pitch, but, "Against Clemson my fast ball was working best, and I guess I used it about 50 per cent of the time. I threw my slider about 30 per cent and used curves and some change-ups too. They got five or six of their hits off breaking pitches, so I relied on the fast one when I needed the pitch real bad."

Sluggers Stopped

Of particular interest in Walker's performance last Friday was the way he handled the heart of the Tiger batting order. The third, fourth and fifth-place hitters had combined for 16 home runs, 51 RBI and a batting average of .360 in 13 games.

But in 12 trips to the plate against Danny, the power boys got just two singles and a walk, and hit only one ball out of the infield. The first two times Walker faced the three, he struck them out in order. The third time around, he whiffed third-place hitter Jack McCall also.

The only man to reach base from the fourth through the seventh was opposing pitcher Charlie Watson, who smashed a single off Walker's right foot with one out in the sixth — and then was killed on a double play.

Great Support

"I had great support both at the plate (Bob Bonczek and Mike McLaughlin gave him four runs with homers) and in the field (no errors), and you can't win without that," Danny declared.

Better Vs. FSU

Strangely, Danny says that he probably pitched better in his 4-1 loss to Florida State during the vacation tour. How so?

"They (FSU) had even better hitters than Clemson," he began, "and only got four hits. Also, they had seven left-handed batters and I jammed them pretty good and they only got one hit between them.

"But as far as control goes, I was around the plate much more against Clemson. I walked six at Florida State (he passed just one Tiger), and do you know that three of them scored! That was the game, working so hard on the lefties, a right - hander sliced a two - run homer to the opposite field!"

That homer was the only one Danny has yielded in 81 innings of pitching at Carolina.

Control Problem

Danny Walker's biggest criticism of himself is his control, which until last Friday definitely left a lot to be desired. He's walked 20 batters in 36 innings — 19 in 27 before Clemson.

"I think I'll do all right if I can keep finding the plate as I did against Clemson," Danny says.

Louisburg Tops Freshmen In First Game Of Two, 2-0

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's freshman baseball team could not take advantage of two golden opportunities and lost to Louisburg in the first game of a doubleheader yesterday, 2-0.

In the second game, Tar Baby pitcher Gary Hill hurled a perfect game for six innings before giving up a hit in the seventh. Carolina led, 9-0.

The game was scheduled for seven innings, but went eight before Louisburg managed two runs off of hard - luck pitcher John Yancey. Both runs were unearned.

In the eighth, pitcher Eyer got on base when UNC shortstop Joe Swain let the ball go through his legs for an error. More bunted, but Yancey fielded quickly and nailed the runner at second for the first out. Sears popped up to the pitcher and it looked like the Tar Babies were out of trouble.

But Moore stole second and went to third on catcher Skip Hull's throwing error. Lanier then walked. Cleanup hitter Vick drilled a single to left, scoring Moore and Queen followed with a single to center, scoring Lanier.

The Tar Babies had a great opportunity in the seventh inning. Koch pinch hit and singled to right. Yancey moved him to second with a sacrifice. Clem Medley drew an intentional walk and Mike Vannoy got an unintentional walk, loading the bases. Koch got caught off third for the second out and Ron Lemonds flied to center, ending the inning.

In the fifth inning, Swain walked and was sacrificed to second by Neal Wester. Yancey walked and Medley dribbled one to the pitcher, who threw out Swain at third. Vannoy drew a walk, flied out bases, but Lemonds flied out to right.

The Tar Babies stranded men on second and third in the fourth inning. They managed only four hits off starter Gardner and relief man Eyer of Louisburg. The defeat dropped their record to 3-2. Louisburg is now 9-4.

In the second game, Tar Baby pitcher Gary Hill hurled a perfect game for six innings before giving up a hit in the seventh. Carolina led, 9-0.

Louisburg could not touch Hill for the first six innings. The big righthander struck out eight men and only one ball was hit out of the infield.

In the seventh, leadoff hitter Moore, who had struck out twice, took two strikes and then poked a hit down the right field line. It was a dinky hit, but it was clean and it counted. Hill got out of the inning with no runs.

Lacrosse Team Wins First

Pete Williams fired in two third-period goals within 30 seconds Saturday and paced Tar Heel scoring as the rebounding lacrosse team toppled Washington and Lee at Lexington, Va., 6-5. UNC's record is now 1-3.

Williams topped all scorers with three goals, but the victory was a unified team effort —five goals were scored with the aid of assists.

Less than a minute had elapsed in the opening period when Williams moved through W&L for his first score. Then with a minute gone in the second round, Tim Balch snapped a 1-1 tie with a tallying shot and the Heels were never headed.

Sandy Reider scored on the face-off following Balchs goal, and UNC led at the half, 3-2.

Reider got his second marker with five minutes gone in the third period, and seven minutes later Williams hit his two-goals-in-30-seconds blitz to push the lead to 6-3.

Balch added to his one score with two assists, and Ben Howe, Jake Hubbard and Loring Swasey also assisted.

Coach Don Skakle's netmen scored their sixth straight tennis win last Saturday. The 9-0 victory over Virginia was the third straight shutout for Bronson Van Wyck, Gene Hamilton and Co.

–Richardson–

Richardson, who received his doctorate from Oxford, has worked with the Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland and has visited and lectured on the five main continents of the world. He was editor of the "Theological Word Book of the Bible," and author of many important theological works.

Introduced by Nash

His topic yesterday, in the first afternoon session of the 1966 Carolina Symposium, was "Myth — Religious and Secularized." Philosopher Walter Kaufmann will speak today at 3 p.m. in Memorial Hall on "Mind and Myth."

Richard son was introduced by Dr. Arnold Nash of the UNC Religion department.

Richardson said myths become most powerful when men are unaware of their existence. The first mythologies were religious, when man tried to "take hold of his pre-intellectual reality."

The myths were handed down, subjected to little criticism, and eventually they formed the first organized religions based on the "mystery of nature."

The Greeks had the most elaborate mythology, Richardson said. The poets and dramatists perpepuated the Greek myths, which included explanations of natural events, the seasons, and the environment.

Greek Myth Fades

Popular folklore and fiction became a necessary part of myth and God-stories eventually turned into folklore. With the Roman civilization taking over the Greeks, the myths of the Gods became more and more popularized, until the intellectuals finally began criticizing their rationality.

Greek myth faded into Roman critical intellectualism. Myths like Stoicism, Epicurianism, and Neo - Platinism took over as drama and poetry died along with Greek religion.

The Romans called many of the new religions "mystery" religions because of their lack of apparent rationality. They scorned the idea behind most of the "mystery religions," since they not only opposed the state—they could not withstand rational criticism.

"By participating in (mystery religions) you got the 'password' to enable you at death to enter the world of light. You were assured of a safe passage after death," Richardson said.

The "one notable exception" to these mystery religions was the Hebrew religion, he said. "God for the Hebrews was no mere eminent power in nature. The God of Israel was the God of history — their history — one who had spoken His power in the creation, salvation, and redemption of His people."

Christianity Not Myth

Christianity, like Judaism, did not have a mythical God, a God who was a "personalized natural force," Richardson claimed.

Later, during the Eighteenth Century, the Age of Enlightenment, myth played an even more important role than it did in the ancient world, Richardson said.

"Useful" myths — those which historians have always provided for civilization — were the only link with the past, and in turn, the only guide for the future.

"The main difference between (historical myths) and ancient myths is that the ancient myths were 'pre-historical,' and had nothing to do with history at all," Richardson said.

Separating modern myths into "unconscious" and "conscious," Richardson contended that men like Hitler and Mussolini preached conscious myths.

Mussolini said his myth need not be true or must deal with reality rationally, since the myth was the power of the state itself — this is the part which becomes reality.

his impressions of his as vice-president, and Humphrey answered that he had learned to tell Johnson, Good morning, Mr. President," rather than "How are you, Mr. President." If he asked Johnson the latter question, the president would eye him quizzically, Galbraith said.

He criticized the Viet Cong for their obvious systematic torturing of local village leaders in Vietnam, but noted that much of their fervor for warfare is derived from very strong nationalistic desires.

Asked about reports of inflation in the U. S.'s still booming economy, the economist said that it was a problem, especially since there were elements of "craziness" that were present before the "Great Crash" of 1929, which he described in one of his books. Since the Depression, the trauma of the crash has steadily lessened, Galbraith asserted.

Although there were rumors earlier this year that the prominent Democratic adviser would seek the governorship of Massachusetts, he laughed and said he hadn't considered it very seriously at all. He left the matter open for a while, he added, because he wanted to worry the Republicans and keep people interested in him.

The conversation took place at the home of Political Professor J. W. Protrho yesterday afternoon just before Galbraith left Chapel Hill.

Two Accidents Reported Here

Dr. Clifford B. Reifler, chief University psychiatrist, was among several UNC-connected persons involved in accidents over the weekend.

Reifler's car was hit on the side by an automobile pulling out of an illegal parking place on Rosemary Street on Friday. His car suffered minor damage but Reifler, 35, was uninjured, according to Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake.

Blake also reported an accident involving two graduate students on East Franklin Street near Roosevelt Drive on Saturday. The students were Sharon Anne Waite, McAllen, Texas, and Matthew V. Skulicz; Buffalo, N. Y. No injuries were reported, but Skulicz was "charged with reckless driving," Blake said.

Two cars were stolen during the weekend. A gold 1961 Corvair Monza owned by Michael Fells, a freshman from Beirut, Lebanon, was stolen from Gimghoul Road where it was parked late Saturday night.

A green two - door 1953 Ford was stolen from the Memorial Hospital parking lot on Friday. The car is owned by Perry A. Heath.

The cars had not been found by late yesterday afternoon, Blake said.

Blake also reported an "epidemic" of stolen purses and places as the library, fraternity houses and stores. Three suspects have been picked up for questioning, he said.

WHAT THE HECK? — Is it a bird, a plane, Batman? A flash of wierdly colored light streaks across the heavens, arousing suspicion and curiosity in everyone. But, never fear: The photograph above is of an unidentified flying object, but it's a man-made UFO, created by technicians at the Morehead Planetarium.

UFO's In Planetarium— Are You Kidding Me?

The director of Morehead Planetarium here doesn't have to look into the night sky for his "flying saucers."

He can make them in his private laboratory.

"Ours are not UFO's," he says, "because we can identify ours. But our laboratory models may partly explain the recent flurry of UFO (unidentified Flying Object) sightings."

You name the shape you want and he can make it . . . saucer, cigar, spinning top.

And using various gases he can custom mix the colors . . . red, blue green, yellow.

With a four - foot - long glass tube, gas (air) and electricity, A. F. Jenzano can produce the "saucers" in singles or in fleets. He can make them hover or blaze out of sight in a flash of colorful light.

Janzano came up with the laboratory "appartions" when he saw a correlation between them and the reported UFO sighting. With the same equipment he explains the Northern Lights.

Jenzano fires a high-voltage charge through a partial vacuum inside a five - inch - diameter glass tube to create the "apparitions." This electrical charge excites particles of air (gas) inside the tube which glow and form in various shapes depending on how much air and electricity is fed into the tube.

'I believe something like this is what UFO observers are seeing rather than space ships from another world," Jenzano says.

He explains that static electricity may accumulate in the air above the earth throughout the year. But he says that these particles in our air are more highly electrified during March and September when the earth is over the more dense sunspot region of the sun.

He also notes that it is during these two periods of the year when UFO sightings seem to hit a peak

In the early spring the earth, which has been warmed all day by the sun, rapidly disperses heat into the air, often creating areas of momentary low pressure, Jenzano says.

"It is in these areas of low pressure that apparitions might appear just prior to being occupied by air from an adjoining high pressure area," he explains. "What we actually see is excited (electromagnetically charged) air that glows because it is at low pressure in a single, moving pocket.

The degree to which this pocket of air is evacuated combined with the amount of electricity present controls the brightness of the apparition's glow. The color depends on the type of gas in the pocket like the various colors achieved in neon tubes. And the shape and size depend on the vacuum pocket's shape and size.

Jenzano explained that apparitions appear only when a delicate balance is achieved; the condition of the air, the electrical charge present and the prevailing gas in the air at the time has to be "just right."

"These gases are usually waste material from homes, autos, industrial plants or a combination of these," Jenzno says.

called the pictures "a terrible insult to associated effort on our campus."

"Immediate action" must be taken to end this kind of publicity, he said, suggesting such things as keeping party noise down, displaying discretion when drinking and having pledges keep house grounds clean.

"Secondly," he said, "we must work hard to project our true image by increasing our influence on The Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack.

"By doing this we can show the University community the facts about fraternities — that fraternity men consistently have higher grades than non-fraternity men, that they hold important positions in almost every campus activity, and that the big weekend is but a small part of fraternity life."

Debate Team Ends Season

The UNC debate team concluded a successful season last weekend with a triumph at an important national tournament at the University of West Virginia.

Craig Bradley, a junior from Wingate, and Jerry Wagner, a senior from Statesville, won 5 debates against only one loss to tie for second place out of some 40 teams who attended.

The tournament was won by Western Reserve University, one of the outstanding debate powers in the nation.

The debate team this season has attended over 25 tournaments. Although final statistics have not yet been compiled, it is estimated that the team has been victorious in over 2-3 of the debates in which it has competed this year.

Honor Society Selects 87 UNC Students

Phi Beta Kappa has notified 87 Carolina students that they have been selected as eligible for membership in the honorary society, but nine students have still not responded to the notification letter.

The requirements for membership in the society are a 3.3 minimum average for seniors and a 3.6 minimum average for juniors. In order to be classified as a junior, a student must have completed 75 semester hours. He must have completed 105 semester hours to be classified as a senior.

Anyone who transfers to Carolina is eligible for Phi Beta Kappa only after completing 45 semester hours here with a minimum grade average of 3.5.

Dr. E. L. Mackie said that any student who feels he has met the requirements for the society and not received notice of his invitation to join should contact him. He will be in his office in 378 Phillips tomorrow and Friday mornings from 10-12.

The initiation into the society will be held sometime around the middle of May.

SG Interviews

Interviews are being held this week for Student Government committee chairmanships for next year.

The five committees with the Department of Internal Affairs are Campus Affairs Committee, Residence College Commission, Orientation Commission, Orientation Reform Commission and Student Co-op Commission.

The co-op commission will continue its investigation of the book exchange operations and furthering its proposals for a student - faculty - administration review board for the exchange.

Within the Department of Educational and Cultural Affairs are the Academic Affairs Committee, Honors Committee, Fine Arts Festival Committee, Carolina Forum, International Students Board, Toronto Exchange Commission and the National Merit Scholarship Committee.

The Honors Committee will continue to evaluate the honors programs at UNC; the International Students Board will establish an international students house; and the National Merit Scholarship Committee entertains National Merit semi-finalists for a three-day program.

The Department of External Affairs contains the State Affairs Committee, Discounting Commission, NSA Campus Committee, Consolidated University Student Council Campus Committee, VIGAH (Volunteers in Giving a Hand) and Student Credit Commission.

The Discounting Commission works for better prices from merchants for student organizations and individuals; the State Affairs Committee will continue its speaker programs in improving relations of the University in the state; and VIGAH works on community improvement projects, especially tutoring.

The committees within the Department of Administrative Affairs are the Student Audit Board, Budget Committee and Communications Commission.

The audit board supervises the Student Activities Fund Office and the Communications Commission will keep Student Government informed about the feelings of the University community by conducting opinion polls.

Students interested in these chairmanships should contact Bob Travis, Student Government Administrative Assistant.

AAUP Suit Drive Tops Expectation

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

A fund drive for the Speaker Ban suit is exceeding expectations, the local head of the American Association of University Professors said Tuesday.

Dr. Joseph W. Straley declined, however, to place a dollar-value on the drive's success.

"I think that people will put an interpretation on any amount that we quote," Straley said.

"I can only tell you that the drive is going a little bit better than we first expected and there's no question whatsoever as to whether this will be properly funded—this court action," he said.

Referring to a "friend of the court" brief which the local AAUP was reported as having filed March 31, Straley said the brief has not yet been filed but is ready and will be presented to the AAUP executive committee Thursday.

Meanwhile, in Greensboro, a three-judge panel has been named to hear the suit, filed March 31 by 14 student leaders at Carolina.

The order naming the panel was signed Monday by Judge Clement F. Haynsworth Jr., of Greenville, S. C., the chief judge of the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The panel consists of Haynsworth; Judge Edwin M. Stanley, of Greensboro, chief judge of the Middle North Carolina District; and Judge Algernon L. Butler, of Clinton, judge of the Eastern North Carolina District.

No date has been set yet for the hearing.

The suit charges that the Speaker Ban Law is unconstitional and seeks an injunction against the enforcement of either the law or the rules the trustees adopted from it.

Named as defendants in the suit are Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, Consolidated University President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

The defendants have until May 15 to file an answer.

'Brown Bags OK' —Charlotte Judge

CHARLOTTE (AP) —Judge H. L. Riddle Jr., yesterday granted an injunction restraining police in Charlotte and Mecklenburg County from enforcing the latest stricter interpretation of North Carolina liquor laws.

That interpretation, issued March 31 by Asst. State Atty. Gen. James F. Bullock, said liquor could be consumed legally only in one's home.

It said, in effect, that long standing practices of taking liquor bottles to restaurants and keeping them in bottle or locker clubs were illegal.

A group of Charlotte nightclub and restaurant owners sought the injunction. Judge Riddle heard arguments in Mecklenburg Superior Court Monday.

The injunction is effective until further notice by the court.

James Kiser, Charlotte city attorney, and Tom Rutherford, county attorney, said they would appeal to the State Supreme Court.

They said, however, the case probably would not be heard by the high court until September when Mecklenburg cases are scheduled to be heard next.

Ray Brady, chairman of the North Carolina Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, confirmed last Saturday that his office was in the process of warning restaurant and club owners over the state that brown bagging was illegal.

Mecklenburg ABC officials had said, however, they would not enforce the law until March 31, 1967, by which time the new legislature would have met.

Judge Riddle, of Morganton, granted an order April 7 temporarily restraining Mecklenburg police from enforcing the law until Monday's hearing in Charlotte.

That order was granted at the request of Michael Plumides, who represented the Charlotte restaurant and club owners.

At Monday's hearing, Plumides told Judge Riddle:

"The governor refuses to move. The Legislature is not in session. What are my clients going to do? Get on their knees and beg?"

He said if the law were enforced according to Bullock's opinion, there would be "mass confusion, mass arrests and a mass number of trials."

Delta Upsilon Pledges Take Greek Award

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Delta Upsilon social fraternity dominated the Greek Week awards given Monday night by the IFC taking the first place trophies for the best pledge class, the best Campus Carnival booth and the best field day.

Phi Delta Theta pledges placed second in the best pledge class competition and Beta Theta Pi pledges came in third.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon pledges received the trophy for the second place in the Campus Carnival while Phi Delta Theta pledges received the third place trophy.

Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont spoke at the presentation of the awards which was held in Gerrard Hall Monday night. He spoke on the subject of pledges carrying on the tradition of the fraternities and strengthening them in the years to come.

Scholarship counted ten per cent, field day counted 30 per cent, Carnival rank counted 30 per cent, Greek Week work day counted 20 per cent and extra curriculars counted ten per cent.

Duke To Hear Yugoslav Talk

DURHAM—A former member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia will give his views on the Sino-Soviet conflict Thursday night at Duke University.

Dr. Vladimir Dedijer, who later lost favor with his close friend Marshal Tito and subsequently was expelled from the party, will appear at 8:15 p.m. in Page Audtorium.

His appearance is spnosored by the Educational Affairs Committee of the Student Union at Duke.

Dr. Dedijer is a recognized authority on the history of Communism and was one of the revolutionaries who set up the Communist regime in Yugoslavia. He was Tito's official biographer, editor of the party newspaper and was a member of the Yugoslav delegation to the United Nations.

In 1955, Dedijer split with Tito when he defended the rights of Yugoslavs to criticize their government. He was expelled from the party.

Van Loon, Travis To Assist Powell

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Student Body President Bob Powell announced his appointments yesterday of Eric Van Loon as presidential assistant and Bob Travis as presidential assistant for administrative affairs.

Van Loon, a junior from Nashville, Ten., is an honor student who has been on the debating team for three years, National Student Association coordinator on campus this year, a resident adviser in Morrison, chairman of the Carolina Political Union.

He is also treasurer of the Carolina Symposium, a member of Student Legislature, an NSA delegate and a member of Order of the Grail.

Travis, treasurer of Kappa Alpha, is a sophomore from Lyons, Ga. He has served on the Student Government Discounting Commission for two years and was chairman this year.

He has served as youth aide to Ga. Governor Carl Sanders and helped to found the Georgia Youth Council, a group of 500 young people interested in working for the state government.

Travis was president of his high school student body of over 1000 students and lieutenant-governor of the Georgia Youth Assembly.

He has been busy this week in reorganizing the Student Government Executive Offices, "to stop waste, to provide more efficient offices for Student Government and to eliminate the confusion seen there in the past," Travis says.

"The "inner office," the room next to president Powell's, will contain the two presidential assistants, Student Body vice-president Bill Purdy and the Student Government executive secretary.

The "outer office," one door down, will house Student Body Treasurer Don McPhaul, and Student Body Secretary Judy Fletcher, who will act as receptionist and greet people.

Travis will handle all of Powell's appointments and correspondence and will distribute the secretarial work load. Only one appointment will be in the inner office at one time, he said yesterday.

He asserted that the executive offices were greatly improved under president Dickson, but that desk space is insufficient and funds are insufficient for office machinery.

"The parties should have their own offices," Travis declared, "and Student Government Executive Offices are not intended to be a meeting place for student politicians to discuss their own selfish interests but rather the welfare of the student body as a whole.

"But the doors of Student Government are always open to those who have a sincere interest in seeing the president and allowing Student Government to serve them."

Philosopher Calls Religious Beliefs Outgrown Myths

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

In an apparent direct refutation of Dean Alan Richardson's Monday talk, philosopher Walter Kaufmann yesterday cited at least three major "myths" of the Christian religion which he said our society has outgrown.

Kaufmann warned that as myths become universally believed their influence on a society increases, but added "our society has outgrown its myths."

The virgin birth, the resurrection of Christ, and the "idea of hell," have all been used to evoke "fashionable thoughts and values," Kaufmann said, and "in different environments the same kind of myths can be used to prop up this or that value."

Richardson said Monday that the Christian religion contains no actual myths, however, his definition of myth was much narrower than that of Kaufmann's.

Kaufmann, a Princeton professor, was the third speaker for the 14th Carolina Symposium. His lecture centered around a definition of myths as stories that offer "images of the human condition in deceptively simple but archaic forms."

"If our age has outgrown its myths, let us ask what replacement is possible," he said.

"New myths?" he asked. "That is not possible. We have gone too far. We must refine our intellectual constants by asking people if they would believe them."

Kaufmann suggested a reliance on philosophy and literature "to examine the old ideas of human values as best they can. Let the chips fall where they may, but not necessarily in defense of old myths."

Kaufmann spoke to a full house in Memorial Hall, after an introduction by UNC Classics Professor Kenneth Reckford.

Saying he was a philosopher and not a theologian, Kaufmann said "the philosopher is like a blind man in a dark room looking for a black cat which is not there. The theologian would find him."

Kaufmann used literary examples to illustrate his point — that a myth lacks impact when it is not actually believed and accepted by society.

Sophocles' Oedipus Rex embodies man's "radical insecurity," his "blindness" to actuality, and that man can be "utterly blind only about the people closest to him, Kaufmann said.

The "curse of honesty" shown in Oedipus' pursuit of the truth, the assumption that tragedy is inevitable, and that justice must prevail all might have had greater impact had the story of Oedipus been fully accepted as truth, Kaufmann argued.

"Because the story has not been believed, it has become 'mere' literature," he said, even though Oedipus Rex is possibly the greatest literary effort of all time.

"The same is true of Kafka," Kaufmann said. He mentioned The Metamorphosis and The Trial as two of Kafka's "literary myths" which lost their impact "simply because people don't believe them."

He commented that in the realm of philosophy Plato's "Parable of the Caves" would have failed if it were labeled as an invention.

Kaufmann said in a sense the parable is truthful, since it portrays an essential fact of human condition. As a result, he said, Plato's parable had a "tremendous impact."

In fact, "more people were convinced by Plato's myth than by his arguments," Kaufmann said. Since readers believed that in a sense experience was unreal, they believed that the world of universals is true reality.

Kaufmann separated the myths in the Old and New Testaments by noting that "by the time we get to the New Testament the adrenalin gets in the way of our comprehension."

Because of this, he said, the New Testament was less effective because of its emotionalism. The partial success of the Old Testament myths, such as Jonah in the whale and the creation of man was possible because their morals were more acceptable, he said.

"The myth of Jonah expresses some values," Kaufmann said. "The main point is that even people in captivity can be forgiven for total repentance."

He said the myth in Genesis of the creation of man was the most effective myth in the Old Testament. This myth tells us that man is found in the image of God, "but the moral became more and more questionable," Kaufmann said.

"This suggests that our age has somehow outgrown its

Top Historian Hits Method Of Colleagues

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Asst. News Editor

One of the foremost American historians criticized members of his profession here Monday evening for tending "to mythologize history."

University of Chicago Professor Daniel J. Boorstin, speaking before the third session of the Carolina Symposium, said "Americans are the most historically oriented but the least historically minded of all modern people."

Boorstin spoke to an audience of approximately 1,600 in Memorial Hall.

He cited as one of the top myths in the field of history an assumed correlation between what is significant and what survives. He said that on the contrary, the most often used artifacts are the least likey to survive.

"What are the conclusions that future historians will draw from auto graveyards which will, by far, be the most prominent features of the archeological landscape?" he asked his audience.

Another of Boorstin's major criticisms was that historians often over emphasize formal ceremonial events over informal everyday life. "Historians only talk about what historians have always talked about."

"There is a thinness of American history," he said, "even

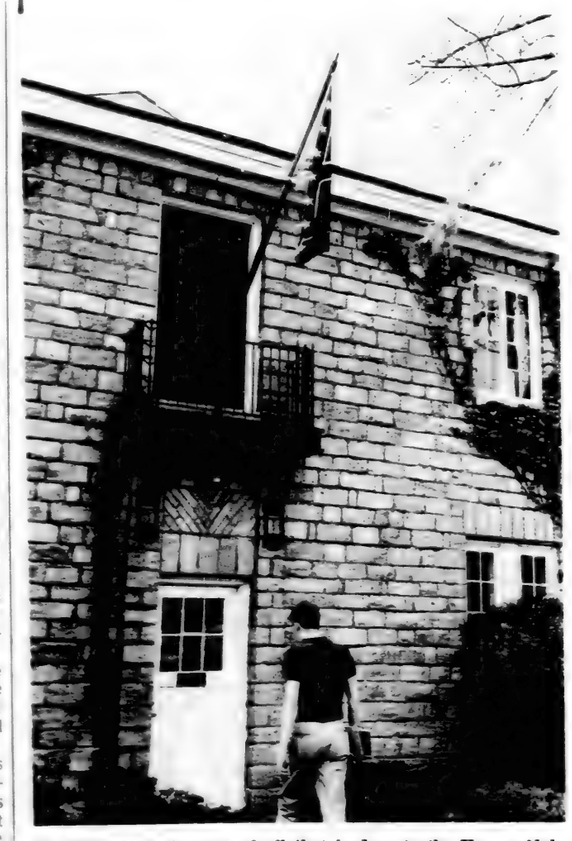
Stars & Bars Under Fire



IN VIRGINIA, the seat of all that is dear to the Kappa Alpha Order, the state is making the KA's strike their colors. Robert E. Lee, who signed the KA charter at Weshington & Lee, would be hurt. At Carolina, though, the Stars-n-Bars continues to fly —even if it does seem to be drooping a little.

"Absolutely no display of the Confederate flag in public," said a directive sent to Virginia chapters of Kappa Alpha Order, Sunday.

A spokesman for the Virginia chapters said the directive was received from national headquarters of the fraternal order. In addition to banning the flag, the statement forbade the wearing of confederate uniforms in public.

The purpose of the turnabout in policy was reportedly so that Kappa Alpha could maintain "it's proper position in today's society."

The Greensboro Daily News reported yesterday that "it was believed the directive was sent to all of the fraternity's 82 chapters in the nation."

But at the KA house at North Carolina yesterday the flag still flew.

President Fred Genung said that he had received no word from anyone about the ban. He commented that he planned to take no action until he heard something definite.

One KA member agreed that they had heard nothing about the ban, and speculated that the directive applied only to one or two chapters who may have had trouble over the display.

He said that the Chapel Hill chapter had received mild complaints on occasion because the flag is flown from a second story window facing West Cameron.

He added that "about a month ago" the order had received word from national headquarters that uniforms should not be played up at the order's "Old South Ball."

6,400 Cars Registered

Since the beginning of the school year when over 4,200 student's cars were registered to park on campus, more than 2,200 other cars have been registered by students bringing the total to over 6,400 student's cars registered to park on campus.

About $25,000 has been taken in this year by the University as money charged for the campus parking stickers. This amount has accumulated from the $5 fees charged for all student parking except the $2.50 fees charged for the "T" sticker parking.

The money collected from these fees and through penalties imposed upon persons whose motor vehicles are towed is deposited in a special University fund. It is used to defray the administrative expenses from the control and supervision of traffic on the campus and for the construction of parking facilities.

This year two of the major lay-outs of the money have been to secure and install parking area signs and to construct scooter parking areas behind the library and around the residence halls on South Campus.

The greatest increase in cars registered here during the year has been from the "C" parking areas where over 1000 additional cars have been given stickers.

UNC Law Professor Dan Pollitt is one of the speakers at a conference at North Carolina College in Durham this weekend on "Students and Labor."

The conference, sponsored by the Southern Student Organizing Committee, will acquaint students with the labor movement, especially in the South. Some 15 to 20 UNC students, mostly members of NAACP and SDS, are expected to attend.

Other speakers include Norman Hill of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Department, Peter Brandon of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Myles Horton of the Highlander Center and Marty Moran of the International Ladies Garment Workers.

The conference, to be held in the Education Building, starts at 6 Friday night and ends at 2 Sunday afternoon.

Greeks And Tubes

Conclusion Of A Two-Part Series

WE LEFT THE DISCUSSION of legislative acts, executive orders and Constitutional Council Rulings Sunday just in time to catch the ABC color presentation of the Yankees-Orioles baseball game—on a black and white set.

The history of the controversial TV Bill has been disassembled and presented.

Let us conclude the explanation of the bill's past and touch on its future.

According to former Student Body President Paul Dickson, after the bill was passed authorizing the distribution of Student Government funds to residence halls, fraternities and sororities for the purchase of new television sets, he was approached by a Negro under-graduate student who asked him to veto the bill since it included fraternal organizations with discriminatory clauses in their constitutions or by-laws.

DICKSON TOLD THE STUDENT he thought he would probably sign the bill anyway.

Later the student and a friend of his met with Dickson and informed him they would appeal the matter to the federal government on grounds that Student Government, which is sanctioned by the administration, which in turn receives money from the federal government, would be giving funds to discriminatory organizations.

After discussing the matter at length with Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey and corresponding with the U. S. Department of Education, Dickson decided that the University could indeed be placed in jeopardy.

So in one fell swoop he 1) signed the TV Bill into law; 2) vetoed the bill suspending legislature's by-laws; and 3) since he had been informed that legislature would override his veto, issued the executive order holding the execution of the TV Bill.

LAST THURSDAY NIGHT Rep. Steve Salmony (UP) introduced a new bill to amend the legislative by-laws in such manner as to make fraternal organizations immune to compulsory annual review and approval of their by-laws if they receive SG funds.

However, no bill has been introduced into this assembly to prevent the issuing of funds to discriminatory organizations.

Such restrictions existed in the legislative budget each year until last spring when it was deleted because legislators felt the passage of the Civil Rights Bill ended the necessity of including it.

But this is obviously not the case.

Ex-Rep. Hugh Blackwell (SP) introduced such a bill into the 40th assembly, but with the swearing in of new SG officers and legislators all old bills died.

If any action is to be taken, the bill will have to be re-introduced.

IT WOULD BE RIDICULOUS for legislature to amend its by-laws, putting the TV Bill into effect for all Greek organizations without first taking such precautionary steps.

Let's face it.

There are now eight fraternities and three sororities who have not complied with the administration's ruling that they must either free themselves from discriminatory clauses or move off campus.

So 11 Greek organizations would not be able to take advantage of the funds for new TV sets this spring.

But all 11 of these houses will be free of discriminatory charters by next September—or else they will be moved off campus.

They've gone seven months with the old sets. We think they could wait two more months.

Why take even the smallest risk of getting the university involved in a smelly case of violating federal statutes when we can wait less than two school months and reap the same harvest without the painful repercussions.

WE URGE LEGISLATURE — if they are to include fraternal groups in the program — to take steps that will insure that no house with a discriminatory clause in its charter receives any money.

But this brings up a very interesting question — should any fraternities and sororities receive money from Student Government?

We say no.

It can be argued that fraternity and sorority members pay the same student fees as residence hall students and should receive the same benefits.

But we feel that when a student decides on his own volition to move out of University housing into a fraternity or sorority house, he accepts the fact the he will not receive all the benefits afforded residence hall students.

It is generally assumed that a student who joins a fraternity is not in dire financial straits. And it can be equally easily assumed that fraternal organizations — which receive money from alumni groups and from national offices — should be able to afford television sets.

Carolina fraternities enjoy a position of great freedom from Student Government supervision.

There are and will be problems more pressing on UNC fraternities than securing new televisions.

The Greeks will solve these problems without the aid of Student Government, and we would like to see them take care of their TV problem without the help of SG.

CERTAIN MEMBERS OF LEGISLATURE and other branches of Student Government disliked the idea of including the Greeks in the program from the beginning.

But, they told us, they did not feel the bill could be passed if it were amended to exclude them.

Perhaps we are wasting energy now to encourage amending the bill in this fashion.

If so — if student legislators feel they must give Student Government funds to the Greeks — we would certainly hope that they will have the foresight to avoid a sticky situation that might arise if money goes to a house that has not yet complied with the ruling on discriminatory clauses.

Grades Are Wrong Draft Criterion

(Editor's note — This editorial, written by the editor of the Saturday Review, appeared in this week's edition of SR.)

By NORMAN COUSINS

Until very recently, students were not subject to military call. A new change in the regulations, however, makes grasdes a determining factor in the draft. Thus the United States is tying national policy to what is perhaps the weakest and certainly the most easily abused feature of American education.

Even before the change in regulations, inequitites and inconsistencies of administration of the draft produced widespread dissatisfaction. Students saw the draft not in the context of peacetime military training but in the context of a rough, tough war in Viet Nam, the issues of which were ripping colleges apart in white hot debate. Viet Nam, moreover, emptied the draft of all peacetime niceties. Now that school marks figure in the call for military service, a fast-growing storm is building on the nation's campuses.

Understandably so. There is a natural conflict between marks and the basic purposes of education, especially on the college and university level. In fact, grades run counter to the most important lesson a teacher can impart, namely, that respect for learning and not high grades is what education is all about. A school can consider itself successful not when a student attains top marks but when he begins to develop the mysterious and intricate capacity for conceptual thought. Obviously, the fact of a high grade doesn't mean that conceptual thought has been defeated. But emphasis on high marks serves to create an atmosphere in which the infinite possibilities of learning are obscured and sometimes blocked. The student tends to veer away from the bypaths of knowledge and from the voluntary quest for vital interrelationships of learning that come from unrequired reading and lonely thought. When top grades become the summit of education, the school falls to the bottom of its possibilities.

And now it is officially decreed that good grades are required for draft deferral. The effect is to make military service a form of banishment. The government is thus in the bizarre position of anathematizing the very activity it considers essential to its security and well-being. Under the circumstances, it should be no surprise if morale should sag. For the government has proclaimed in effect that its draftees are intellectually inferior and therefore fit for the fighting front rather than the classroom. The young men remaining in school have been encouraged to believe that they were smart enough to make good marks pay off.

The Great Grade Chase had gone far enough long before the United States government got into the act. At a time of exploding college enrollment, an obsession with high grades had begun to permeate the secondary school population and everyone directly or indirectly connected with it. Pressure on students in some places had taken on the aspect of an anxiety neurosis. Fortunately, a number of colleges were less concerned about grades than about other evidence of aptitude and worthiness: intellectual curiosity; rounded interests; leadership ability; good citizenship; creative potentiality. But there are not enough of such far-seeing colleges. Most admission office policies are still dominated by emphasis on grades. The result has been a distortion of educational values, spilling over into areas far beyond the classroom.

Obviously, the school must have some basis for appraising scholastic performance. This can be done with a reasonable degree of effectiveness on a non-grading and general basis, with the emphasis more on guidance than on reward or punishment. But even such an advisory system is not strong enough to sustain the weight of helping to decide who goes to war, carrying with it as it does the implication of a possibly fatal choice.

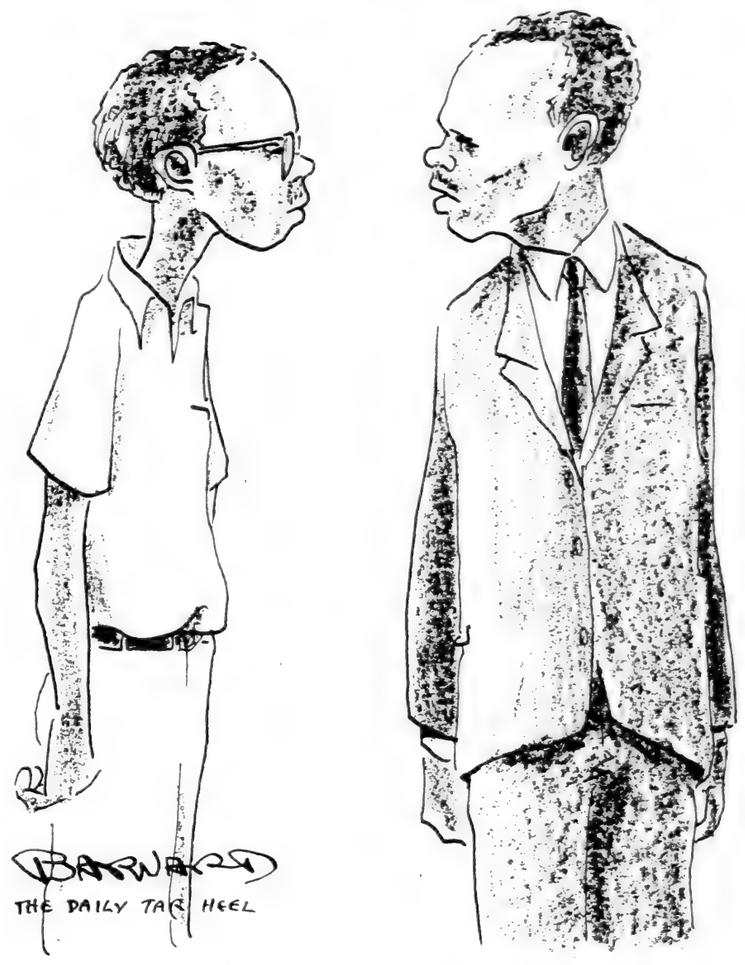
Almost every shocking event in education in recent years has been tied in one way or another to grades or grading systems. Scarcely a semester passes without front-page accounts of wholesale cheating scandals, or of high marks being bought and sold, or of faculty members doing what is expected of them by giving passing grades to professional athletes masquerading as students. Only this month, the United States Naval Academy admitted that grades of failing students had been doctored in order to get more officers into the field.

The teacher doesn't exist and the computer has yet to be devised that can peer deeply enough into the mind of every student to calibrate precisely what is happening to him in the process of learning. To be sure, some teachers can make a reasonably good guess; but when the determination involves which youngsters are to go off to fight in Viet Nam or elsewhere and which youngsters are to be allowed to continue their education without interruption even the best guesswork isn't g o o d enough. No self - respecting teacher will welcome this kind of power. The danger is not that the teacher will share grades one way or the other to favor or punish. The danger is that an external consideration inexorably now hangs over the educational process. It converts the report card into a scorecard for Russian roulette.

It is difficult to see how the government can justify putting teachers on this kind of spot, any more than it can justify using so variable and random an index as scholastic grades to select its soldiers. Everything considered, it would not be surprising to find teachers digging in against the new rulings and protecting the integrity of their profession by dispensing altogether with ratings in favor of evaluative advice to students, or even by giving out good grades to all on the theory that teachers cannot be expected to do the work of draft boards.

The new draft regulations are helping to reduce to an absurdity the role of marks in the making of an educated man. They may, however, accomplish a useful purpose if they bring about a full re-examination of what education is for and how it functions.

"Not colored – COLOR TV issue!"



The Student Speaks

Greeks Are Eligible For Color Tubes

(Editor's note — this is a statement of personal opinion by a University Party legislator.)

By STEVE SALMONY

Student Legislature has introduced an amendment to its by-laws which will allow organizations with "secret" constitutions and by-laws to receive color televisions under a previously passed bill.

An objection has been raised concerning the fact that some of these constitutions contain discriminatory clauses. Some fear that to expend funds under these conditions would leave UNC open to another court case.

Having done a degree of research into this matter and having defended the actions of the Student Legislature before the Constitutional Council, I still feel the legislature must represent the best interests and the general welfare of all the students. With this in mind, it seems that each member of the student body should have equal access to the benefits of the TV bill.

To address myself to the problem of a possible court case, I would just say that the courts have ruled that when a charge of discrimination has been raised, only a "showing of good faith," the accused's intenition to rectify the discriminatory situation, is necessary to halt litigation. The Faculty Commttee on Sororities and Fraternities has ruled that by September, 1966, all discriminatory clauses must be removed from Greek constitutions and by-laws. This, in fact, is a "showing of good faith."

A further question has been raised concerning the interim period between now and September. Here, the legislature must not shirk its responsibility to the students. The Student Legislature is dealing with color televisions, not the implementation of the Civil Rights Act. I feel that fraternities and sororities are acting in good faith and in accordance with the decision of the faculty committee and the federal courts.

Otelia Mans Umbrella; Threatens Student Pigs

By OTELIA CONNOR

I am so sorry I missed the delightful smorgasbords that Chase Cafeteria put on for the students last Sunday, for according to some people who went to eat, Chase may not be able to continue the smorgasbord meals on Sunday as planned.

Four different meats were served, including rare prime roast beef, several vegetables, salads, and desserts, for $1.60.

The special attraction of a smorgasbord is that you can serve yourself to every dish if you do desire, which is more than most people can eat, and you may go down the line for more servings if you can eat more.

Instead of the students appreciating this gesture on the behalf of Chase Cafeteria to give the students a real treat, and acting as they would at a public restaurant, they gorged themselves. Some of them went down the line five times. Some demanded two or more slices of prime rib beef as they went through the line the first time. Some had milk cartons piled on the table like pyramids.

I haven't checked with the cafeteria to see how it came out financially, but I am sure it lost money.

What a shame we couldn't show our appreciation for what could be a regular Sunday occasion, by behaving like gentlemen, instead of pigs.

If there is another smorgasbord, I hope to go. Maybe I better take my umbrella.

I hope I won't need it!

Readers' Letters

Otelia Again

(Editor's note — This letter was sent to the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen recently by Otelia Connor. Mrs. Connor requested that we publish it here.)

Dear Sirs:

I am writing this letter because I don't know if I will be able to attend the public hearing Tuesday night to consider the request of the sorority for a special use permit on Cottage Lane.

I don't like to disagree with property owners in Chapel Hill, but Chapel Hill is the University, and the University is Chapel Hill — there would be no Chape Hill but for the University. Therefore, what is best for the students is best for Chapel Hill.

The only logical location for sorority houses is that section of North Rosemary St. from Columbia St. up to, but not including, the old Mangum house.

The fraternities can expand in the Finley Golf course section, but that is not practical for sororities. Girl's habitations should be located adjacent, or close to the campus. East Franklin and West Franklin St. are out of considerstion, which will leave the above described section of Rosemary St. the only choice left. The people who own these house and live in them should be given permission to stay on as long as they live, but they could not be sold to individuals after that.

Before the meeting is held on Tuesday night, it might be wise to consult with the University officials on this matter of the probable future expansion of sororities at the University, and let the board be governed on Tuesday night by their counsel.

Best wishes for arriving at wise decisions at the Tuesday night public hearing.

Anonymous Grant Gives UNC Child Care Center

By LYNNE HARVEL
Special to the DTH

Child care administrators, children's institutions and social service staffs are now receiving aid from the University, thanks to an anonymous donor.

It is in the form of a Child Care Information Center which "was added as a new service late in 1965 and is a clearing house for information on group care and treatment of children. Publications, journals, papers and newsletters are being collected and indexed by the computation center of the University for fast retrieval," according to a pamphlet published by the center. The system is designed to accommodate storage of five to ten thousand documents plus special additional material.

Project director H. H. Hollingsworth, said "Requests for information are now being handled on a limited basis until collection is more complete and an equitable fee system can be established."

Hollingsworth said the "work is slow but it is keeping up with the proposed timetable." The two - phase timetable is to be completed by the end of this summer.

The already - completed first phase includes identification of literature, listing locations of all items, indexing and classification of documents, books, and pamphlets, selection of a practical machine system to satisfy anticipated retrieval purposes and a limited processing of requests.

Phase two, now in progress, consists of indexing, classification and annotation of material from January 1960 through January 1966, processing requests on a limited basis and organization of the computer program for immediate access to documents.

Future plans include addition of foreign language documents, wider use of existing services and addition of special information such as directories and lists of available training programs.

"The scope of the center has had to be somewhat limited for the first one or two years in order to accomplish the objectives which ultimately will include information services other than simply retrieval of bibliographies," said Hollingsworth.

Present staff includes the director, one part - time secretary, two part - time computer programmers and one student research assistant.

The child care center is a non - profit organization established through a grant supplied by an anonymous layman associated with a child care organization.

Arizona Oath Unconstitutional

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

The State of North Carolina's "oath of allegiance," which all state and University employees are required to sign, is different from Arizona's "loyalty oath" which was declared unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court on Monday.

The Arizona law subjected to prosecution and loss of his job any state employee who took the loyalty oath and "knowingly and willfully becomes or remains a member of the Communist Party" or other organizations dedicated to overthrowing the state government.

Justice William O. Douglas, announcing the 5-4 decision, said the law "rests on the doctrine of 'guilt by association' which has no place here."

He added that the law suffered from a "constitutional infirmity" — that it broadly covered membership in the Communist Party and similar organizations rather than a "specific intent to further the unlawful aims" of the organizations.

North Carolina had such a loyalty oath for state employees some years ago, but it was discontinued. The present stiputlation for university personnel is an "oath of allegiance, not a loyalty oath," according to personnel director Fred B. Haskell.

The requirement is part of a 1941 resolution of the University Board of Trustees, which requires "all officials, teachers and other employees of the University of North Carolina, who are citizens of the United States" to sign the oath.

The resolution, which is printed on the back of the oath, further states that "no official, teacher, or other employee (who is a citizen of the United States) shall be considered an employee of the University of North Carolina or receive payment for any services rendered unless, or until, he or she has taken the oath."

The oath asserts that the signee "do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States; so help me, God.

"I do solemnly and sincerely swear (or affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the State of North Carolina, and to the constitutional powers and authorities which are or may be established for the government there of; and that I will endeavor to support, maintain and defend the constitution of said state, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, to the best of my knowledge and ability; so help me, God."

The oath is to be "subscribed and sworn to (or affirmed)" before a notary public. All employees of the University, including student employees, must sign it.

Haskell said yesterday that some employees have signed the oath under protest, for religious or political reasons.

"Some Quakers (Friends)" he noted, "say they could not swear," according to the precepts of their religion, so they "affirm" the oath rather than "swear" to it.

The wording is also changed for some people, he added, if they find it offensive.

Neither Haskell nor Miss Billie Curtis, secretary to the University Trustees, foresaw any change in the N. C. oath. Miss Curtis had "no comment" about the Arizona law.

Professor of Law Daniel H. Pollitt said the Supreme Court's decision should have "no affect" upon the N. C. oath.

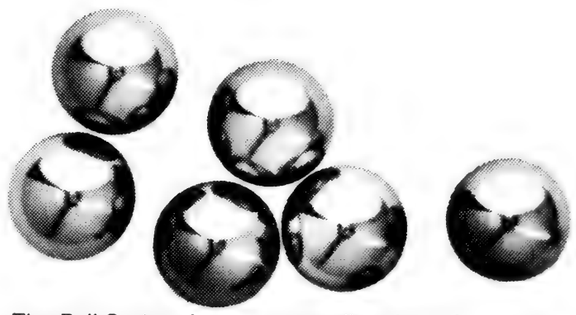
We set out to ruin some ball bearings and failed successfully



The Bell System has many small, automatic telephone offices around the country. The equipment in them could operate unattended for ten years or so, but for a problem.

The many electric motors in those offices needed lubrication at least once a year. Heat from the motors dried up the bearing oils, thus entailing costly annual maintenance.

To stamp out this problem, many tests were conducted at Bell Telephone Laboratories. Lubricant engineer George H. Kitchen decided to do a basic experiment that would provide a motor with the worst possible conditions. He deliberately set out to ruin some ball bearings by smearing them with an icky guck called molybdenum disulfide (MoS_2).

Swock! This solid lubricant, used a certain way, actually increased the life expectancy of the ball bearings by a factor of ten! Now the motors can run for at least a decade without lubrication.

We've learned from our "failures." Our aim: investigate everything.

The only experiment that can really be said to "fail" is the one that is never tried.

A Matter Of Opinion

By John H. Jennrich

Yesterday the Daily Tar Heel printed two important articles pertaining to Greek-letter social organizations.

On page three, a story about the Panhellenic Council began:

"Are fraternities and sororities losing their place in the modern university campus?

"The Panhellenic Council doesn't think so."

The fourth paragraph gave the reason why. "We believe that the fraternity - sorority system is an important group-work experience which contributes toward the development of a sense of responsibility, a concern for the welfare of others and a deep interest in good campus citizenship," the Council said.

The Council may well be correct in its defense and appraisal of the fraternity - sorority system. But the readers of the DTH will undoubtedly remember longer the lead editorial, written by Associate Editor John Greenbacker, which explained the absence of Editor Fred Thomas' editorials.

Thomas was taken on a ride by the pledges in his fraternity. Two of these pledges, hot and sweaty from their endeavors, came into the DTH office shortly after the news broke. They proudly announced that they had shipped him off to some unknown place in Virginia. When Greenbacker asked who they were, they decided that discrete anonymity was the better part of valor and ran out of the room.

Their names aren't important. What they did is. These quasi - members of the fraternity could have that particular fraternity put on social probation. And their irresponsible act serves as an indictment of the entire fraternity system.

Taking people on rides is not unusual in either fraternities or dormitories, but the University administration frowns on the practice and the matter is usually hushed up as quickly as possible.

However, anyone stupid enough to snatch the editor of the DTH an hour before deadline has to expect a certain amount of publicity, even if it's no more than an explanation of the editor's absence.

In this case, it's bad publicity for an entire fraternity system already under attack throughout the country.

Reliable sources indicate that the pledges have received a certain amount of constructive punishment within the fraternity. They did work around the house and received severe lectures from several members, including the president and the pledge marshall.

If the dean of men feels additional reprimands are in order, we suggest he give them to the individuals involved: the pledges who kidnapped Thomas and carried him over the state line.

General punishment of the whole fraternity or the entire fraternity system will serve no purpose. Only until pledges realize that they are individually responsible for their acts — in college as well as in the outside world — will they begin to realize the Panhellenic Council's dream: the development of a sense of responsibility and a concern for the welfare of others.

'Grinders' And 'Flakes' Get Best New Car Deals

Next time you have a yen to buy a new car, take your old pal from the neighborhood garage along.

You may be glad you did. A UNC economist, who just completed a novel research project relating to car buying, made his findings public today in Austin, Texas.

Dr. Gerald Bell concluded that those people with little experience in buying cars should seek the help of a friend who knows automobiles and how to buy them.

"And if you are not already a 'grinder' you should work to become one before you start to buy a car," Bell said.

He identified a "grinder" as one who knows how to put up a good defense as well unleash a strong offense when dealing with a car salesman.

The term "grinder" is one given by salesmen to those who know how to put up a good sales fight. At the other extreme are the "flakes" who know nothing about cars and believe everything salesmen tell them. They have the least sales resistance, Bell's research showed.

Of the two groups, the "grinders" get the best auto buys, Bell said, because of their fight. But the "flakes" do almost as well.

"Salesmen feel sorry for the 'flakes,'" Bell reported. "And because they do, they are more likely to give them some of the extras that the 'grinders' fight so hard for. Little things like floor mats, wheel covers or maybe deluxe appointments."

The guy who really catches it is the average guy who tries to buy a car without a purchase pal, Bell says. He's the easiest to sell. He knows just enough about cars to agree with the salesman that the trade being offered him is a good one.

And this is the kind of guy the salesman will "take," he says.

The salesman's attitude seems to become "Sorry, old buddy, but I've got to make a dollar somewhere and you seem to be a soft touch."

Bell warns the car buying public, "Don't underestimate an automobile salesman. Most of them are good actors, and the successful ones are good judges of personality."

Bell's research was conducted last summer on the West Coast during June, July and August during which time he interviewed 234 new car buyers. The 234 represented 81 per cent of those who purchased new automobiles from a single dealer. During this same period he interviewed the firm's 20 salesmen daily.

He presented his findings before the Symposium on Consumer Behavior at which six other university professors presented research findings.

"O.K. Fella, If You Really Love Me, You'll Turn Around And Listen To The Speaker!"

'Does Your Socid Bother Ya, Bunky?'

CHARLOTTE (AP) — You may be sicker than you think —especially if you aren't sick.

Your "socid" may be bothering you, Dr. Robert Collier Page said in Charlotte today.

What is your socid?

"That's your body, spirit and mind — you house, your job, your spouse, your likes and dislikes. It all adds up to you," Dr. Page said.

Sickness of your socid is a lot more common than cancer and most other diseases.

It may show up in a bad cold and cause you to tell your boss you're sick and won't be in.

One of the primary causes of socid sickness is basically disliking your work, said Dr. Page who has written a book entitled "Occupational Health and Mantealent Development."

"Work is generally the most important aspect of a person's life," he said.

"How can a person tell if he is happy in his work? He should do what he likes to do and what he knows he can do well."

This doesn't mean that work should never include "scut work."

"Any chap who wants to get ahead will do two days of scut work to enable him to work three days on things that he really wants to do. It's all in your attitude," Dr. Page said.

But if you spend the decade of your twenties in a job you dislike, "the years slide by and when you hit 30 you're gone.

"At 30 a person becomes pretty rigid. If he or she doesn't like his work, he becomes a drone."

It may be appearing in "bad drinking habits" that will lead you to alcoholism, the doctor said.

Or emotional conflicts that will put you in a mental hospital. Or obesity that will end in heart attacks.

Especially if you're in the seemingly healthy period of life between 22 and 32 years of age, you ought to take note.

For sickness of the socid often begins its "slow and insiduous onset" during this period, said Dr. Page, author of several popular medical books who has been medical consultant for several leading American firms.

The disease of the future is "boredom," he said.

"Everybody is living longer and money isn't the real problem. What to do with your time is the demon."

How can sickness of the socid be avoided?

"It's a preventive thing," Dr. Page said. "Medicine must become concerned about maintaining health, rather than curing illness.

"Labor, management and medicine must sit down and talk about health. There has got to be teamwork.

"A lot will fall back into the lap of the individual. But industry should fit the job to the men — not the man to the job."

Dr. Page is touring the country as consultant to a company which has developed an eight-hour aspirin tablet.

BOAC Cancels Seven Flights Of Boeing 707s

LONDON (AP) — British Overseas Airways Corp. (BOAC) today announced finding hairline cracks in the tail assemblies of four of its Boeing 707 jet airliners. Seven flights to New York and the Far East were cancelled.

The cracks were discovered during a worldwide examination of the big jets. The examinations were ordered by their American manufacturers and the U. S. Federal Aviation Agency following the March 5 crash of a BOAC 707 on the slopes Mt. Fujiyama, in which 124 persons lost their lives. This was the third crash involving 707s in six months.

BOAC said a fifth plane of its fleet of 19 707s was suspected of having a crack and a sixth was being examined with special electrical equipment.

A BOAC spokesman said that only a small part in the tail assembly must be replaced but "it is a lengthy job." The first crack was found Friday, he said, and Boeing supplied a replacement yesterday. It will take about a week to install.

"We have replacement parts for two other Boeings but we have to get a new part for the fourth and possibly for a fifth," he said.

BOAC cancelled seven flights between now and Saturday, including two from London to New York and two from New York to London.

In announcing the examinations, Boeing said there was no danger in the small cracks, which were found in some of the two seel forged rear fittings that hold the vertical tail assembly to the body of the plane.

Boeing said extensive tests showed the fittings more than met flight requirements. It added that the cracks were limited to the two top bolts of 20 bolts in the fitting.

Goldberg Announces US Approval Of Viet Nam Talks With Communists

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Johnson administration embraced today Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield's proposal for an Asian peace conference on Viet Nam with the United States, China, and North Viet Nam represented at the table.

This was done through Arthur J. Goldberg, U. S. Ambassador to the United Nations, after a 45-minute talk with President Johnson and State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey.

Goldberg, asked by reporters whether the White House welcomes the suggestion of the Senate Democratic leader from Montana, replied:

"The White House always welcomes what Sen. Mansfield has to say. The President is in agreement that a meeting outght to be held. He hopes Sen. Mansfield's statement will further that cause."

Goldberg in effect was saying that Mansfield was endorsing what the administration has been seeking. He said that time after time Johnson has appealed for transferring the conflict from the battlefield to the peace table and that "Sen. Mansfield's proposal would transfer it to the table."

"That we endorse," Goldberg said.

At the same time at the State Department Mansifled's proposal for a conference in Japan or Burma was welcomed.

McCloskey, the State Department press officer, told newsmen that American willingness to hold peace discussions had been stated many times by Johnson and Secretary of State Dean Rusk over the past year.

"Our offer to meet with the concerned parties remains open," he said.

In a statement that obviously had been prepared in anticipation of questions on the proposal Mansfield made in the Senate yesterday, McCloskey said:

"We welcome the remakrs by the distinguished Senate majority leader and agree with the sentiments he expressed We would further welcome any Asian initiative toward discussions, and the site of any such peace conference as suggested by Sen. Mansfield would not pose any difficulty.

"President Johnson and Secretary Rusk have said on numerous occasions there would be no difficulty in the views of the Viet Cong being heard. We are also of the view that the lack of positive response and the rebuffs with which the Communist side has met our efforts to arrive at an honorable solution of the problem in Viet Nam are no reason for us not to continue these efforts."

At the White House Goldberg replied in the negative when asked whether there is agen eral feeling that the United Nations no longer has a role to play in trying to arrange peace negotiations. He said the essence of Mansfield's proposal was sound and that it was in line with Goldberg's own mandate from the President to use every channel to further the cause of a peaceful solution. But he said that the U.N., regretfully, has not shown the capability of taking hold of this.

Obscene Phone Caller Convicted

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Ronald Maxie Coleman, 31, of Charlotte was sentenced Tuesday to 18 to 24 months after being convicted in Superior Court of making an obscene telephone call.

The jury of six women and six men returned the verdict after considering the evidence about 15 minutes.

Sgt. C. W. Ross testified Coleman was arrested last December after police had set up a special telephone with a device which emits sound waves and allows a telephone company to trace calls if the receiving person doesn't hang up. He said the telephone company and The Charlotte Observer cooperated in the enterprise.

Ross said a phony classified advertisement was inserted in the newspaper, offering a mink stole for sale. The telephone number was that of the special telephone at headquarters.

Mrs. Mary Thompson, a police department employe, testified Coleman dialed the number Dec. 5 and used obscene and abusive language to her. She also testified she recognized Coleman's voice after she talked with him in the detective division after he was arrested.

Judge W. K. McLean denied a defense motion to rule out the testimony. Defense lawyer John Plumides likened the device to "wire-tap laws and argued its constituted "a fundamental invasion of the defendant's privacy."

Plumides said the verdict would be appealed.

The device was set up after police had been flooded with complaints, mostly from housewives, that telephone callers had used obscene words.

Russell's A Logical Choice, But –

One of the last remaining color lines in sports has been broken with the appointment of Bill Russell as coach of the world's best basketball team, pro tem, the Boston Celtics. Big Bill will become the first Negro to lead a team in a major professional sport.

There is, of course, no more reason why a Negro shouldn't be given such a job than there is why he should be. It's wrong to keep a man out a coaching or manuaging position because he's colored, just as it would be wrong to put him in a similar position because of his skin.

The encouraging thing about Russell's appointment is that he apparently got it on merit. There's no indication that the Celtics were trying to make a grandstand play to impress the civil rights groups. In fact, it's no secret that Russell was not the first choice to succeed Arnald "Red" Auerbach when the cigar industry's best walking advertisement becomes a full-time general manager next year. Auerbach wanted Bob Cousy or Frank Ramsey to take over the team both starred for, but neither was interested.

RED WANTED A CELTIC

With Cousy and Ramsey out of the picture, Russell was a logical next choice if Auerbach wanted a Celtic to succeed him—as apparently he did. Several times this season Russell served as acting coach when Auerbach was either away from the team or thrown out of the game.

Unfortunately, Russell's appointment is one more step in making pro basketball coaching the least professional job in sports. Almost without fail now, coaches are coming directly from the playing ranks, without any training in coaching. Frequently, in fact, owners are turning to the player-coach. (Russell himself will continue to play.) The extreme in this sort of thing was reached when the Detroit Pistons made Dave Debusschere a player-coach at the tender age of 23. (Nothing, however, can hurt the Pistons.)

The list of players that have either become player-coaches or hung up the uniform one game and become a coach the next is long and getting longer — Alex Hannum, Paul Seymour, Dolph Schayes, Richie Guerin, and now Russell, to name several. Some of these men have won championships, but how much of the victory is attributable to coaching and how much to talent? Most of them have not remained long in one place.

MOST SUCCESSFUL LEADERS HAVE TRAINING

There are cases in other sports when recruits from the ranks have become successes as leaders. Lou Boudreau won a pennant at Cleveland and managed in the big leagues for a long time. Norm Van Brocklin has done a good job with the Minnesota Vikings in the NFL. For the most part, though, the successful managers and coaches are the ones with some experience in the field. This rule holds true in all sports, including basketball. Casey Stengel managed in the minors. Vince Lombardi was an assistant coach before taking over the Packers. In the NBA, Auerbach has always been a coach. The next most successful coach in the league, Fred Schaus of Los Angeles, played pro ball, but came to the Lakers from a successful tenure as coach at West Virginia.

Russell probably knows as much about basketball as any other player in the league. He's been around a long time. Since the Celtics are going to follow the trend of promoting a player from the ranks, no one can fault the choice of their star center. Basketball would do well, though, to give more thought to this system of selecting coaches. A good player doesn't always make a good coach, expecially when he has to start his coaching career at the top.

Tar Heels Smash Duke, 8-1

A Run Scores For The Tar Babies

UNC Frosh Score Early To Down Blue Devils, 8-5

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's freshman baseball team scored in the early innings to beat Duke, 8-5, in Chapel Hill yesterday.

Chuck Cole was the winning pitcher for Carolina, going five innings and giving up four runs. Robert Rhodes pitched four excellent innings of relief, being touched for only one run.

The Tar Babies greeted Duke pitcher Bob Steinbrugge with four runs in the first inning. Clem Medley reached on an error, advanced to second on Mike Vannoy's sacrifice and scored on Ron Lemond's single. Lemonds went to third on Skip Hull's single and scored on Dan Leigh's sacrifice fly. Gary Tilley lashc. triple to left center, scoring Leigh. Tilley came in when the Duke second baseman fumbled Ron Strickland's grounder.

In the third inning, Hull was safe when the first baseman dropped the shortstop's throw. He went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Leigh's single to center. Leigh stole second and came home with the sixth run when Strickland rapped another single up the middle.

Medley led off the fourth with a single, went to second on a passed ball, to third on a wild pitch and home on Lemonds' sacrifice fly to put Carolina up by 7-0.

Cole coasted through the first four innings. He gave up a single and walk in the second, then fanned the side. He walked the first two men in the third, but a double play helped out.

In the fifth inning Duke caught up with Cole. Gross singled and Dennington doubled and both came in on Gibson's single to right. Smith belted a triple to score Gibson, then came in on Cole's balk to cut the lead to 7-4.

Steinbrugge struggled through three innings without a run, but the Tar Babies scored again in the eighth. Vannoy wormed his way on with a walk, went to second on a balk, moved to third on an infield out and scored as Leigh grounded out.

Rhodes breezed through three innings, finally giving up a run in the ninth on a single by Gross, a wild pitch and a pinch single by Wilhelm. That wound up the scoring for the day.

The Tar Babies ran their record to 5-2 with the win. Shortstop Ron Strickland had three hits for the day.

Duke committed six errors in the game and added to the merriment with four wild pitches and two passed balls.

On Monday, Garry Hill fired a one - hitter as Carolina beat Louisburg in the second game of a doubleheader, 9-0. Hill has not allowed a run in three games and has surrendered but four hits.

Talbott, Bob Hume Snap Bat Slumps

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

DURHAM — A couple of Tar Heel hitters snapped prolonged batting slumps and Charlie Carr continued to hold the hottest stick on the club as North Carolina slammed 12 hits and routed Duke yesterday 8-1. The win gave UNC a 3-1 ACC mark and a tie for first place with Clemson (6-2).

Danny Walker (3-1) started and won for the Heels, but was forced to retire in the top of the eighth when he reaggravated a pulled muscle while scoring from second base.

Not As Sharp

Danny was not as sharp yesterday as he was in beating Clemson last Friday, but yielded just three hits — none until the fourth inning — before leaving the game. He was charged with Duke's run when he gave up a leadoff double and single in the sixth.

George McRae stopped Duke on one hit and three strikeouts in the final two frames.

Hume, Talbott Hit Big

Bob Hume and Danny Talbott charged from the throes of base-hit slumps with a barrage of extra-base blows.

Hume was 0-for-7 in the last three games going into this match, and the first three times up he bounced out, fouled out and fanned. But in his last two trips he slugged long triples to right-center and center, driving in two runs with the second blast and scoring both times.

Talbott lined a shot into the third baseman's glove in his first appearance, and drove a deep liner to left in the third to run his three - game drough to 0-for-13 before bursting loose in the seventh.

BOB HUME
. . two triples

He came up then with runners at first and second, and bounced a ground-rule double over the left-center field fence. Then in the eighth with the bases empty, Danny poled a high drive to the base of the center field fence — some 420 feet away — for his second double.

Charlie Carr, who was 5-for-11 in the last three previous games, continued his batting streak with a pair of doubles and a single. He scored the first UNC run in the fifth when he tagged Duke starter and loser Jim Liccardo (2-5) for a double to right-center. The ball got through Duke centerfielder Larry Davis and Carr circled the bases.

Several Players Scramble For Football Center Spot

Center is the center of a manhunt on the UNC football squad. A rising sophomore currently commands the pivot, but the issue is far from settled.

Chip Bradley of Asheville, a starter for last fall's frosh squad, was at the offensive center spot in the most recent intrasquad scrimmage. He is a 205-pounder with a sizable amount of promise. Greg Batistello, a senior, earns the No. 2 call and Dave Emirias, a veteran who has played both guard and tackle, has been shifted for the No. 3 whistle.

"We're still looking," admits Coach Joe Mark, who heads the offensive staff, "but Bradley has been most adequate for a youngster without varsity experience. He's a good snapper and that's important."

George Barclay, who coached last year's unbeaten Tar Babies, calls center "the most overlooked position on the football field." Barclay says the man who does the job properly must work constantly.

"We have made a number of shifts to help ease our center problems," said Coach Mark. "One won't be able to transpire until next fall, but we definitely plan to test Chuck Alexander there." Alexander, a 230-pounder who played tackle, will soon undergo a leg operation.

Tackle Mike Richey, a 250-pound rising soph, gave center a try last week but had difficulty with his snaps. He's now back at his old post.

Ed Stringer made All - Atlantic Coast Conference last year as a Tar Heel pivotman, but he shared the starting role with Batistello. Coach Jim Hickey notes: "Batistello is a fine football player but he weighs 195 pounds. Against a 195-pounder he will more than hold his own. But against a 215 - pounder he is just too light. And we see lots bigger men than that."

Before the Jones boys came along, this backcourt pair led the Boston Celtics to the NBA championship. Who were they?

Arnie Second In Winnings

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP) — Arnold Palmer, who beat Gay Brewer in the Tournament of Champions play-off Monday, took over Brewer's No. 2 spot yesterday in the top 10 money winning list of the Professional Golfers' Association.

Palmer collected $20,000 for his four-stroke victory at Las Vegas, Nev., pushing his total of money considered official by the PGA to $47,967 and his grand total to $66,778.

Doug Sanders, whose finish in the Tournament of Champions earned him $2,600, remained in the top spot among official money winners with $49,540 and a total of $69,258.

Law IV Takes Case Finals

By Bill Hass
DTH Sports Writer

Bill Brown and Pud Hassell led a second-half charge that gave Law IV a 58-48 victory over Kappa Alpha Monday night in the intramural all - campus basketball final.

The KA's put up a stiff struggle and were tied with the Lawmen at the half, 25-25. Law started as if it would run KA off the court, jumping to a 7-1 lead, but Cliff Butler and Billy Travis brought KA to an 8-8 tie. Law spurted to a 14-8 lead, but KA gnawed away and took the lead at 18-17 on a jumper by Travis.

Oeshlager put Law back in front, Travis put KA up again and Hassell moved Law out by 21-20. Wills hit a foul shot and Butler canned a basket to put KA ahead, 23-21. Brown hit two foul shots to tie, Bruce Barragan gave KA the lead and Charlie Shaffer hit a driving layup to tie the game, putting the finishing touches on an exciting first half.

Shaffer and Bill Dockery hit field goals and Hassell had a free throw to move Law out by 30-25 at the start of the second half . . . Cliff Butler's corner swisher brought KA to 32-31, but Bill Brown scored five straight points to make it 37-31.

Butler and Barragan brought KA to within 39-36, but the roof fell in from there. Dockery, Brown, Oeshlager and Hassell all hit to make it 47-36. KA cut it to 48-40, but Law went on an 8-2 spree, with Pud Hassell getting six points, and it was all over but the shouting with Law in front by 56-42.

Brown scored 18 points and Hassell 17 for Law, while Shaffer hit 11, Dockery 7, Oeschlager 4 and Vinroot 1. Cliff Butler scored 21 points in a superb effort for KA. Barragan netted 12, Travis 9 and Wills 6.

The shots just would not drop for KA in the second half. Superior rebounding took its toll for Law, limiting KA to one shot in many cases. KA's best rebounder, 6'5" Craig Allison, was not able to play in the game. High-scoring Billy Travis could not hit in the second half, scoring just two points.

A Matter Of Opinion

By John H. Jennrich

Yesterday the Daily Tar Heel printed two important articles pertaining to Greek-letter social organizations.

On page three, a story about the Panhellenic Council began:

"Are fraternities and sororities losing their place in the modern university campus?

"The Panhellenic Council doesn't think so."

The fourth paragraph gave the reason why. "We believe that the fraternity - sorority system is an important group-work experience which contributes toward the development of a sense of responsibility, a concern for the welfare of others and a deep interest in good campus citizenship," the Council said.

The Council may well be correct in its defense and appraisal of the fraternity - sorority system. But the readers of the DTH will undoubtedly remember longer the lead editorial, written by Associate Editor John Greenbacker, which explained the absence of Editor Fred Thomas' editorials.

Thomas was taken on a ride by the pledges in his fraternity. Two of these pledges, hot and sweaty from their endeavors, came into the DTH office shortly after the news broke. They proudly announced that they had shipped him off to some unknown place in Virginia. When Greenbacker asked who they were, they decided that discrete anonymity was the better part of valor and ran out of the room.

Their names aren't important. What they did is. These quasi - members of the fraternity could have that particular fraternity put on social probation. And their irresponsible act serves as an indictment of the entire fraternity system.

Taking people on rides is not unusual in either fraternities or dormitories, but the University administration frowns on the practice and the matter is usually hushed up as quickly as possible.

However, anyone stupid enough to snatch the editor of the DTH an hour before deadline has to expect a certain amount of publicity, even if it's no more than an explanation of the editor's absence.

In this case, it's bad publicity for an entire fraternity system already under attack throughout the country.

Reliable sources indicate that the pledges have received a certain amount of constructive punishment within the fraternity. They did work around the house and received severe lectures from several members, including the president and the pledge marshall.

If the dean of men feels additional reprimands are in order, we suggest he give them to the individuals involved: the pledges who kidnapped Thomas and carried him over the state line.

General punishment of the whole fraternity or the entire fraternity system will serve no purpose. Only until pledges realize that they are individually responsible for their acts — in college as well as in the outside world — will they begin to realize the Panhellenic Council's dream: the development of a sense of responsibility and a concern for the welfare of others.

'Grinders' And 'Flakes' Get Best New Car Deals

Next time you have a yen to buy a new car, take your old pal from the neighborhood garage along.

You may be glad you did. A UNC economist, who just completed a novel research project relating to car buying, made his findings public today in Austin, Texas.

Dr. Gerald Bell concluded that those people with little experience in buying cars should seek the help of a friend who knows automobiles and how to buy them.

"And if you are not already a 'grinder' you should work to become one before you start to buy a car," Bell said.

He identified a "grinder" as one who knows how to put up a good defense as well unleash a strong offense when dealing with a car salesman.

The term "grinder" is one given by salesmen to those who know how to put up a good sales fight. At the other extreme are the "flakes" who know nothing about cars and believe everything salesmen tell them. They have the least sales resistance, Bell's research showed.

Of the two groups, the "grinders" get the best auto buys, Bell said, because of their fight. But the "flakes" do almost as well.

"Salesmen feel sorry for the 'flakes,'" Bell reported. "And because they do, they are more likely to give them some of the extras that the 'grinders' fight so hard for. Little things like floor mats, wheel covers or maybe deluxe appointments."

The guy who really catches it is the average guy who tries to buy a car without a purchase pal, Bell says. He's the easiest to sell. He knows just enough about cars to agree with the salesman that the trade being offered him is a good one.

And this is the kind of guy the salesman will "take," he says.

The salesman's attitude seems to become "Sorry, old buddy, but I've got to make a dollar somewhere and you seem to be a soft touch."

Bell warns the car buying public, "Don't underestimate an automobile salesman. Most of them are good actors, and the successful ones are good judges of personality."

Bell's research was conducted last summer on the West Coast during June, July and August during which time he interviewed 234 new car buyers. The 234 represented 81 per cent of those who purchased new automobiles from a single dealer. During this same period he interviewed the firm's 20 salesmen daily.

He presented his findings before the Symposium on Consumer Behavior at which six other university professors presented research findings.

"O.K. Fella. If You Really Love Me, You'll Turn Around And Listen To The Speaker!"

'Does Your Socid Bother Ya, Bunky?"

CHARLOTTE (AP) — You may be sicker than you think —especially if you aren't sick.

Your "socid" may be bothering you, Dr. Robert Collier Page said in Charlotte today.

What is your socid?

"That's your body, spirit and mind — you house, your job, your spouse, your likes and dislikes. It all adds up to you," Dr. Page said.

Sickness of your socid is a lot more common than cancer and most other diseases.

It may show up in a bad cold and cause you to tell your boss you're sick and won't be in.

One of the primary causes of socid sickness is basically disliking your work, said Dr. Page who has written a book entitled "Occupational Health and Mantealent Development."

"Work is generally the most important aspect of a person's life," he said.

"How can a person tell if he is happy in his work? He should do what he likes to do and what he knows he can do well."

This doesn't mean that work should never include "scut work."

"Any chap who wants to get ahead will do two days of scut work to enable him to work three days on things that he really wants to do. It's all in your attitude," Dr. Page said.

But if you spend the decade of your twenties in a job you dislike, "the years slide by and when you hit 30 you're gone.

"At 30 a person becomes pretty rigid. If he or she doesn't like his work, he becomes a drone."

It may be appearing in "bad drinking habits" that will lead you to alcoholism, the doctor said.

Or emotional conflicts that will put you in a mental hospital. Or obesity that will end in heart attacks.

Especially if you're in the seemingly healthy period of life between 22 and 32 years of age, you ought to take note.

For sickness of the socid often begins its "slow and insiduous onset" during this period, said Dr. Page, author of several popular medical books who has been medical consultant for several leading American firms.

The disease of the future is "boredom," he said.

"Everybody is living longer and money isn't the real problem. What to do with your time is the demon."

How can sickness of the socid be avoided?

"It's a preventive thing," Dr. Page said. "Medicine must become concerned about maintaining health, rather than curing illness.

"Labor, management and medicine must sit down and talk about health. There has got to be teamwork.

"A lot will fall back into the lap of the individual. But industry should fit the job to the men — not the man to the job."

Dr. Page is touring the country as consultant to a company which has developed an eight-hour aspirin tablet.

BOAC Cancels Seven Flights Of Boeing 707s

LONDON (AP) — British Overseas Airways Corp. (BOAC) today announced finding hairline cracks in the tail assemblies of four of its Boeing 707 jet airliners. Seven flights to New York and the Far East were cancelled.

The cracks were discovered during a worldwide examination of the big jets. The examinations were ordered by their American manufacturers and the U. S. Federal Aviation Agency following the March 5 crash of a BOAC 707 on the slopes Mt. Fujiyama, in which 124 persons lost their lives. This was the third crash involving 707s in six months.

BOAC said a fifth plane of its fleet of 19 707s was suspected of having a crack and a sixth was being examined with special electrical equipment.

A BOAC spokesman said that only a small part in the tail assembly must be replaced but "it is a lengthy job." The first crack was found Friday, he said, and Boeing supplied a replacement yesterday. It will take about a week to install.

"We have replacement parts for two other Boeings but we have to get a new part for the fourth and possibly for a fifth," he said.

BOAC cancelled seven flights between now and Saturday, including two from London to New York and two from New York to London.

In announcing the examinations, Boeing said there was no danger in the small cracks, which were found in some of the two seel forged rear fittings that hold the vertical tail assembly to the body of the plane.

Boeing said extensive tests showed the fittings more than met flight requirements. It added that the cracks were limited to the two top bolts of 20 bolts in the fitting.

Goldberg Announces US Approval Of Viet Nam Talks With Communists

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Johnson administration embraced today Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield's proposal for an Asian peace conference on Viet Nam with the United States, China, and North Viet Nam represented at the table.

This was done through Arthur J. Goldberg, U. S. Ambassador to the United Nations, after a 45-minute talk with President Johnson and State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey.

Goldberg, asked by reporters whether the White House welcomes the suggestion of the Senate Democratic leader from Montana, replied:

"The White House always welcomes what Sen. Mansfield has to say. The President is in agreement that a meeting outght to be held. He hopes Sen. Mansfield's statement will further that cause."

Goldberg in effect was saying that Mansfield was endorsing what the administration has been seeking. He said that time after time Johnson has appealed for transferring the conflict from the battlefield to the peace table and that "Sen. Mansfield's proposal would transfer it to the table."

"That we endorse," Goldberg said.

At the same time at the State Department Mansifled's proposal for a conference in Japan or Burma was welcomed.

McCloskey, the State Department press officer, told newsmen that American willingness to hold peace discussions had been stated many times by Johnson and Secretary of State Dean Rusk over the past year.

"Our offer to meet with the concerned parties remains open," he said.

In a statement that obviously had been prepared in anticipation of questions on the proposal Mansfield made in the Senate yesterday, McCloskey said:

"We welcome the remakrs by the distinguished Senate majority leader and agree with the sentiments he expressed. We would further welcome any Asian initiative toward discussions, and the site of any such peace conference as suggested by Sen. Mansfield would not pose any difficulty.

"President Johnson and Secretary Rusk have said on numerous occasions there would be no difficulty in the views of the Viet Cong being heard. We are also of the view that the lack of positive response and the rebuffs with which the Communist side has met our efforts to arrive at an honorable solution of the problem in Viet Nam are no reason for us not to continue these efforts."

At the White House Goldberg replied in the negative when asked whether there is agen eral feeling that the United Nations no longer has a role to play in trying to arrange peace negotiations. He said the essence of Mansfield's proposal was sound and that it was in line with Goldberg's own mandate from the President to use every channel to further the cause of a peaceful solution. But he said that the U.N., regretfully, has not shown the capability of taking hold of this.

Obscene Phone Caller Convicted

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Ronald Maxie Coleman, 31, of Charlotte was sentenced Tuesday to 18 to 24 months after being convicted in Superior Court of making an obscene telephone call.

The jury of six women and six men returned the verdict after considering the evidence about 15 minutes.

Sgt. C. W. Ross testified Coleman was arrested last December after police had set up a special telephone with a device which emits sound waves and allows a telephone company to trace calls if the receiving person doesn't hang up. He said the telephone company and The Charlotte Observer cooperated in the enterprise.

Ross said a phony classified advertisement was inserted in the newspaper, offering a mink stole for sale. The telephone number was that of the special telephone at headquarters.

Mrs. Mary Thompson, a police department employe, testified Coleman dialed the number Dec. 5 and used obscene and abusive language to her. She also testified she recognized Coleman's voice after she talked with him in the detective division after he was arrested.

Judge W. K. McLean denied a defense motion to rule out the testimony. Defense lawyer John Plumides likened the device to "wire-tap laws and argued its constituted "a fundamental invasion of the defendant's privacy."

Plumides said the verdict would be appealed.

The device was set up after police had been flooded with complaints, mostly from housewives, that telephone callers had used obscene words.

Russell's A Logical Choice. But –

One of the last remaining color lines in sports has been broken with the appointment of Bill Russell as coach of the world's best basketball team, pro tem, the Boston Celtics. Big Bill will become the first Negro to lead a team in a major professional sport.

There is, of course, no more reason why a Negro shouldn't be given such a job than there is why he should be. It's wrong to keep a man out a coaching or manuaging position because he's colored, just as it would be wrong to put him in a similar position because of his skin.

The encouraging thing about Russell's appointment is that he apparently got it on merit. There's no indication that the Celtics were trying to make a grandstand play to impress the civil rights groups. In fact, it's no secret that Russell was not the first choice to succeed Arnald "Red" Auerbach when the cigar industry's best walking advertisement becomes a full-time general manager next year. Auerbach wanted Bob Cousy or Frank Ramsey to take over the team both starred for, but neither was interested.

RED WANTED A CELTIC

With Cousy and Ramsey out of the picture, Russell was a logical next choice if Auerbach wanted a Celtic to succeed him—as apparently he did. Several times this season Russell served as acting coach when Auerbach was either away from the team or thrown out of the game.

Unfortunately, Russell's appointment is one more step in making pro basketball coaching the least professional job in sports. Almost without fail now, coaches are coming directly from the playing ranks, without any training in coaching. Frequently, in fact, owners are turning to the player-coach. (Russell himself will continue to play.) The extreme in this sort of thing was reached when the Detroit Pistons made Dave Debusschere a player-coach at the tender age of 23. (Nothing, however, can hurt the Pistons.)

The list of players that have either become player-coaches or hung up the uniform one game and become a coach the next is long and getting longer — Alex Hannum, Paul Seymour, Dolph Schayes, Richie Guerin, and now Russell, to name several. Some of these men have won championships, but how much of the victory is attributable to coaching and how much to talent? Most of them have not remained long in one place.

MOST SUCCESSFUL LEADERS HAVE TRAINING

There are cases in other sports when recruits from the ranks have become successes as leaders. Lou Boudreau won a pennant at Cleveland and managed in the big leagues for a long time. Norm Van Brocklin has done a good job with the Minnesota Vikings in the NFL. For the most part, though, the successful managers and coaches are the ones with some experience in the field. This rule holds true in all sports, including basketball. Casey Stengel managed in the minors. Vince Lombardi was an assistant coach before taking over the Packers. In the NBA, Auerbach has always been a coach. The next most successful coach in the league, Fred Schaus of Los Angeles, played pro ball, but came to the Lakers from a successful tenure as coach at West Virginia.

Russell probably knows as much about basketball as any other player in the league. He's been around a long time. Since the Celtics are going to follow the trend of promoting a player from the ranks, no one can fault the choice of their star center. Basketball would do well, though, to give more thought to this system of selecting coaches. A good player doesn't always make a good coach, expecially when he has to start his coaching career at the top.

Tar Heels Smash Duke, 8-1

Talbott, Bob Hume Snap Bat Slumps

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

DURHAM — A couple of Tar Heel hitters snapped prolonged batting slumps and Charlie Carr continued to hold the hottest stick on the club as North Carolina slammed 12 hits and routed Duke yesterday 8-1. The win gave UNC a 3-1 ACC mark and a tie for first place with Clemson (6-2

Danny Walker (3-1) started and won for the Heels, but was forced to retire in the top of the eighth when he reaggravated a pulled muscle while scoring from second base

Not As Sharp

Danny was not as sharp yesterday as he was in beating Clemson last Friday, but yielded just three hits — none until the fourth inning — before leaving the game. He was charged with Duke's run when he gave up a leadoff double and single in the sixth.

George McRae stopped Duke on one hit and three strikeouts in the final two frames.

Hume, Talbott Hit Big

Bob Hume and Danny Talbott charged from the throes of base-hit slumps with a barrage of extra-base blows.

Hume was 0-for-7 in the last three games going into this match, and the first three times up he bounced out, fouled out and fanned. But in his last two trips he slugged long triples to right-center and center, driving in two runs with the second blast and scoring both times.

Talbott lined a shot into the third baseman's glove in his first appearance, and drove a deep liner to left in the third to run his three - game drough to 0-for-13 before bursting loose in the seventh

He came up then with runners at first and second, and bounced a ground-rule double over the left-center field fence Then in the eighth with the bases empty, Danny poled a high drive to the base of the center field fence — some 420 feet away — for his second double.

Charlie Carr, who was 5-for-11 in the last three previous games, continued his batting streak with a pair of doubles and a single. He scored the first UNC run in the fifth when he tagged Duke starter and loser Jim Liccardo (2-5) for a double to right-center. The ball got through Duke centerfielder Larry Davis and Carr circled the bases.

A Run Scores For The Tar Babies

UNC Frosh Score Early To Down Blue Devils, 8-5

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's freshman baseball team scored in the early innings to beat Duke, 8-5, in Chapel Hill yesterday.

Chuck Cole was the winning pitcher for Carolina, going five innings and giving up four runs. Robert Rhodes pitched four excellent innings of relief, being touched for only one run.

The Tar Babies greeted Duke pitcher Bob Steinbrugge with four runs in the first inning. Clem Medley reached on an error, advanced to second on Mike Vannoy's sacrifice and scored on Ron Lemond's single. Lemonds went to third on Skip Hull's single and scored on Dan Leigh's sacrifice fly. Gary Tilley lashc. triple to left center, scoring Leigh. Tilley came in when the Duke second baseman fumbled Ron Strickland's grounder.

In the third inning, Hull was safe when the first baseman dropped the shortstop's throw. He went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Leigh's single to center. Leigh stole second and came home with the sixth run when Strickland rapped another single up the middle.

Medley led off the fourth with a single, went to second on a passed ball, to third on a wild pitch and home on Lemonds' sacrifice fly to put Carolina up by 7-0.

Cole coasted through the first four innings. He gave up a single and walk in the second, then fanned the side. He walked the first two men in the third, but a double play helped out.

In the fifth inning Duke caught up with Cole. Gross singled and Dennington doubled and both came in on Gibson's single to right. Smith belted a triple to score Gibson, then came in on Cole's balk to cut the lead to 7-4.

Steinbrugge struggled through three innings without a run, but the Tar Babies scored again in the eighth. Vannoy wormed his way on with a walk, went to second on a balk, moved to third on an infield out and scored as Leigh grounded out.

Rhodes breezed through three innings, finally giving up a run in the ninth on a single by Gross, a wild pitch and a pinch single by Wilhelm. That wound up the scoring for the day.

The Tar Babies ran their record to 5-2 with the win. Shortstop Ron Strickland had three hits for the day.

Duke committed six errors in the game and added to the merriment with four wild pitches and two passed balls.

On Monday, Garry Hill fired a one - hitter as Carolina beat Louisburg in the second game of a doubleheader, 9-0. Hill has not allowed a run in three games and has surrendered but four hits.

Several Players Scramble For Football Center Spot

Center is the center of a manhunt on the UNC football squad. A rising sophomore currently commands the pivot, but the issue is far from settled.

Chip Bradley of Asheville, a starter for last fall's frosh squad, was at the offensive center spot in the most recent intrasquad scrimmage. He is a 205-pounder with a sizable amount of promise. Greg Batistello, a senior, earns the No. 2 call and Dave Emirias, a veteran who has played both guard and tackle, has been shifted for the No. 3 whistle.

"We're still looking," admits Coach Joe Mark, who heads the offensive staff, "but Bradley has been most adequate for a youngster without varsity experience. He's a good snapper and that's important."

George Barclay, who coached last year's unbeaten Tar Babies, calls center "the most overlooked position on the football field." Barclay says the man who does the job properly must work constantly.

"We have made a number of shifts to help ease our center problems," said Coach Mark. "One won't be able to transpire until next fall, but we definitely plan to test Chuck Alexander there." Alexander, a 230-pounder who played tackle, will soon undergo a leg operation.

Tackle Mike Richey, a 250-pound rising soph, gave center a try last week but had difficulty with his snaps. He's now back at his old post.

Ed Stringer made All - Atlantic Coast Conference last year as a Tar Heel pivotman, but he shared the starting role with Batistello. Coach Jim Hickey notes: "Batistello is a fine football player but he weighs 195 pounds. Against a 195-pounder he will more than hold his own. But against a 215 - pounder he is just too light. And we see lots bigger men than that."

Before the Jones boys came along, this backcourt pair led the Boston Celtics to the NBA championship. Who were they?

Law IV Takes Case Finals

By Bill Hass
DTH Sports Writer

Bill Brown and Pud Hassell led a second-half charge that gave Law IV a 58-48 victory over Kappa Alpha Monday night in the intramural all - campus basketball final.

The KA's put up a stiff struggle and were tied with the Lawmen at the half, 25-25. Law started as if it would run KA off the court, jumping to a 7-1 lead, but Cliff Butler and Billy Travis brought KA to an 8-8 tie. Law spurted to a 14-8 lead, but KA gnawed away and took the lead at 18-17 on a jumper by Travis.

Oeshlager put Law back in front, Travis put KA up again and Hassell moved Law out by 21-20. Wills hit a foul shot and Butler canned a basket to put KA ahead, 23-21. Brown hit two foul shots to tie, Bruce Barragan gave KA the lead and Charlie Shaffer hit a driving layup to tie the game, putting the finishing touches on an exciting first half.

Shaffer and Bill Dockery hit field goals and Hassell had a free throw to move Law out by 30-25 at the start of the second half . . . Cliff Butler's corner swisher brought KA to 32-31, but Bill Brown scored five straight points to make it 37-31.

Butler and Barragan brought KA to within 39-36, but the roof fell in from there. Dockery, Brown, Oeshlager and Hassell all hit to make it 47-36. KA cut it to 48-40, but Law went on an 8-2 spree, with Pud Hassell getting six points, and it was all over but the shouting with Law in front by 56-42.

Brown scored 18 points and Hassell 17 for Law, while Shaffer hit 11, Dockery 7, Oeschlager 4 and Vinroot 1. Cliff Butler scored 21 points in a superb effort for KA. Barragan netted 12, Travis 9 and Wills 6.

The shots just would not drop for KA in the second half. Superior rebounding took its toll for Law, limiting KA to one shot in many cases. KA's best rebounder, 6'5" Craig Allison, was not able to play in the game. High-scoring Billy Travis could not hit in the second half, scoring just two points.

New GI Bill May Cause More Campus Crowding

NEW YORK (AP) — U. S. colleges and universities — many already bursting at the seams — are bracing for a surge of student veterans under the new GI bill.

Estimates of the number of ex-servicemen who may take advantage of the educational benefits by next fall range up to 250,000. The total is expected to mount steadily for years. A peace settlemen in Viet Nam could create severe educational overcrowding.

Reaction to these and other possibilities were brought out out today by an Associated Press survey of institutions of higher learning throughout the nation.

Many schools are short of classroom space and housing and can handle few extra applicants. Others foresee the government's tougher policy on draft deferments will ease the crush by removing second-rate scholars from the campuses.

In general, authorities throughout the country voiced determination to fit the GIs into their student bodies somehow.

School officials predicted the leavening of veterans would raise the over-all quality of campus thinking. One who expressed this view, based on experience with veterans under the World War II and Korean GI bills, was Dean Clarence C. Walton of Columbia University School of General Studies.

"We called them 'no-nonsense' students," said Dean Walton. "They were hard-working, intellectually curious, ready to question accepted ideas — in short, fine students."

The brunt of the enrollment increase is likely to fall on tuition-free schools supported by the states, because unlike past GI bills the new one does not provide for tuition fees. It gives the veterans $100 a month — just about enough for room and board at most institutions.

LOAN PROGRAMS BOOMING

However, scholarship, low - interest loans and other student aid programs are booming, and many veterans will be able to pay their way at privately operated schools.

In Wisconsin, Eugene McPhee, director of the state's nine universities, estimated the GI bill might result in an extra 7,000 entry applications. McPhee said he had planned on accommodating 47,000 students for the term starting next September and any total over 50,000 "would create problems, no question about it."

George L. Simpson Jr., Chancellor of the regents who administer Georgia's university system of 52,000 students, commented:

"'We're crowded, but we'll do the best we can. In one way or another, one place or another, we'll be able to accommodate the GIs."

VIET NAM HELPS

Dr. Novice G. Fawcett, President of Ohio State University, which has an enrollment of 35,000, said the school is developing a system of branch campuses and should be able to take the veterans in stride, but added:

"The situation could change with a cessation of hostilities in Viet Nam."

G. W. Smith, Registrar of the University of Miami in Florida, predicted a large enrollment increase, particularly among graduate students.

"Our problem is a shortage of resident housing," Smith said. "We have the classrooms and equipment and if necessary can use this in late afternoon and early mornings."

William Tunis, Dean of Admissions at the University of Massachusetts — enrollment 13,000 — was optimistic.

"I wouldn't anticipate any problems," Tunnis said. "The pressure on colleges won't be the same as in 1945. There simply aren't that many GIs around."

Registrar W. Byron Shipp of the University of Texas felt the same way, but added:

"The increased enrollment wouldn't be anything like after World War II unless there is a peace settlement in Viet Nam, the draft breaks up and everybody is turned loose all at once."

Conrad Wedberg, Director of Admissions at the Privately operated University of Southern California, thought that institutions which charge tuition would feel little impact.

USC's enrollment of 17,500 is 2,500 short of capacity but it has a $1,500 tuition fee, Wedberg said.

GI'S LIKE FREE COLLEGES

"Room and board here is about $1,000 a year per resident student. So the GI will probably take his $100 a month and go to a free college."

Tax - supported California State at Los Angeles, which has an enrollment of 20,000, expected at least 1,000 veterans within the next few months. Said Student Counselor Edwin Johnson.

"You can rest assured there won't be very many eligible men who won't take advantage of the bill."

Harry Day, Dean of Students at Florida State University, said it might be some time before a firm assessment of the GI bill's effect on enrollment could be made.

"We are expecting some increase because of the bill," Day explained, "but we also expect a slight reduction in our September male enrollment because the draft boards are taking a second look at grades."

Some privately operated schools have decided against increasing the size of classes.

The Rev. Edmond Walsh, Director of Admissions at Catholic Boston College, said this year's freshman class numbered 1,552 and the college "is not going to increase it beyound 1,600."

Catholic Marquette University at Milwaukee expected a 5 to 10 per cent increase in enrollment, now 11,000, but a spokesman indicated that entrance requirements may be stiffened.

"Increased applications will provide an additional opportunity to be selective about students," the spokesman remarked.

The viewpoint of one small, expanding school was put by Academic Dean Dr. William R. Hauser of Alabama's Athens College:

"We welcome a student increase and we would rather have veterans because they are better students and more serious."

Gov. Hodges' Condition Is Satisfactory

Memorial Hospital authorities refused yesterday to announce the specific ailment of former Governor Luther Hodges, who underwent surgery there on Monday to repair a blood vessel lesion.

The hospital, which is issuing twice-a-day progress reports on the former U. S. Commerce Secretary, said yesterday that his condition was good and that he had had a comfortable day.

Mrs. Hodges told The Associated Press, "He is doing fine after the operation."

A lesion is an abnormal change in structure of an organ or part caused by injury or disease.

Hodges, 68, now serves as chairman of the Research Triangle Foundation. He served as governor for six years before being appointed secretary of commerce by President Kennedy.

He said in an interview with the Associated Press last year that he did not miss a day because of illness in his last 10 years of public office.

"I've always tried to be prudent and take care of myself," Hodges said in the interview. He has "an almost unwritten rule" to be in bed by 10 p.m.

Hodges now resides in The Glen in Chapel Hill.

a chronological thinness. It is so thin that often the geography shows through."

Boorstin elaborated on this point by saying that most of the history of the United States had been one of secession rather than unity, noting that history is generally discussed in terms of the North, the South, the Midwest, the frontier and the West.

The noted historian who has lectured on five continents said that too often historians discuss "classic controversies" rather than historical events.

He said that the greatness of the top interpreters of history lies "not in the discovery of new laws, but in the discovery of new areas of ignorance."

He said for some people the progression of American history could be pictured as an ascending line, or to "describe each of the following stages of American history with the simple word 'more'."

Students Win S.C. Art Honor

A painting and a sculpture won merit awards for UNC artists Dick Mandell and Cranine McAllister in the Seventh Carolinas' College Art Annual Hosted by the Columbia Museum of Art and the Art Department of the University of South Carolina, the show has given continued practical exhibition experience with accepted works passed by a professional jury.

Cranine McAllister was honored for her welded steel sculpture entitled "Mousetrap VIII," and Dick Mandell's winning entry was a polymer and oil painting called "Hillsboro Afternoon."

Japan's 'Spy Guy' Equals Our Bond

TOKYO (UPI) — Japan has come up with something to equal James Bond. In fact, Jo Mizuki and his "Phantom Agents" may even go Bond one better.

The producers of Mizuki's series, already being shown in Australia and scheduled to appear on New York television (WPIX) later this year, have purloined all the devices that have made the current wave of spy fantasies so popular.

Mizuki and his agents — there are four of them including, of course, a winsome lass — uncover plots by secret international underground organizations, prevent assassinations of kings and presidents, search out kidnapped scientists and all the rest.

Their trick is that they do it with little more than classic Japanese Samurai swords. The extra measure of pleasure in the "Phantom Agents" program comes from the dollop of "Ninjitsu," an ancient and semi-magical Japanese martial art that producers have thrown in.

Mizuki and his agents cut through a hail of bullets with their swords, and attack villains by making impossible leaps from high trees or walls onto the backs of their adversaries.

They escape what appears to be certain death or discovery by leaping back into the trees, magically disappearing into walls, or just vanishing, period.

They walk on the surface of water as well as if their feet were pontoons, and they can see farther and hear more than mortal man ever could.

They ventriloquize so well that their voices come from a vase or a stone, or from nowhere and everywhere at once.

They are good at judo and karate, and like Ishikawa Goemon, the most famous robber in all Japanese history, they are adept at flinging tiny, star shaped iron disks whose edges have been honed to deadly fineness.

The ancient Ninja were retainers of Japan's feudal lords back in the 15th and 16th centuries.

myth."

He said the parables of Jesus in the New Testament have been used to perpetuate more than one myth, noting that one myth may be used to moralize seemingly circular reasoning.

With respect to the myth of the resurrection of Christ, Kaufmann said the Christians claimed that Jesus' resurrection was unique and that it was possible because he was divine.

Then in Paul and Corinthians there is the argument that Jesus was divine because he was resurrected, Kaufmann said.

A belief in the virgin birth or the immaculate conception, Kaufmann said, has made it "implicit and explicit in religious teachings that sex is sinful."

He said that hell is a "sanctification of retributive punishment," finding it unbelievable that "man can be tormented for all eternity by a just and loving God."

Kaufmann said that the "myth" of hell "only sanctified man's great cruelty toward unbelievers."

After calling for a re-examination of our myths, Kaufmann said "it seems there is an important function of statesmanship and a need for rhetoric.

Next to the "great" Gettysburg Address by Lincoln, Kaufmann cited Franklin Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, and the inauguration speech of President John Kennedy "powers to mobilize people and their will."

"Beyond our philosophers and our literature we have to expect our statesmen to express in an unforgettable way the ideas and views of their country.

Commenting about the "God Is Dead" movement, Kaufmann said he doubted it would form an effective myth. "I'm not too happy with this language — 'God Is Dead,'" he said.

He said there may be some "noble qualities" to the original intent of the movement, "however, the context is only suggested, and I would not exert myself to take it literally."

"This is a hell of a way of speaking, and we must strive for greater lucidity," Kaufmann said.

Residence College Funds Being Held

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

Overdue bills are mounting up for Morrison Residence College because they still do not have an approved constitution.

Dean of Men William Long has said that all residence college constitutions must have strong financial clauses before any funds will be released.

Scott College — composed of Avery, Parker and Teague — was the first college to receive Long's approval, so their constitution is serving as the model for all other colleges.

This is the reason that Morrison has been unable to get the necessary money to pay its bills, some of which have been piling up since January, according to Governor John Ellis.

A group from Morrison worked several days with Long on the financial clause and according to Ellis, reached agreement on how it was to read.

The constitution was later approved by the Morrison Senate and ratified by the residents.

When the group took the constitution to Long for his signature he rejected it because it did not read word for word like that of Scott College.

Long, in commenting on his rejection, stated that all constitutions must be exactly like Scott's so that "there won't be eight different interpretations."

Although all of Long's thoughts on "financial stability" were incorporated into the Morrison version, it was not acceptable.

Lew Brown, Preisdent of the MRC, said "it took them (Scott) three months to get their's straightened out," and indicated his approval and support of Long's action.

He said, "you're giving a lot of people a lot of power here. I'd have to agree with the action Dean Long's taking."

So far six colleges have approved constitutions. They are: Scott, Morehead, Craige, Ehringhaus, BVP and (Wolfe) Alexander - Joyner - Conner. Only Morrison and Kenan Colleges have failed to get approval.

The only alternative a college has for the time being is to borrow money from the individual residence halls or houses within the college. Until the constitutions are approved by Long, no college funds will be released for paying bills.

UNC Leaders, AG Staffers Discuss Case

The defendants in the Speaker Ban test case — University President William Friday and Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson — will meet today with representatives of the State Attorney General's Staff to discuss the State's answer to the case.

Assistant State Attorney General Ralph Moody is preparing the State's answer, which is to be filed by May 15.

The Chapel Hill Weekly predicted yesterday that "the first hearing on the complaint is expected during the week of May 23," according to Herman A. Smith, Clerk of the U. S. Middle District Court in Grensboro.

The complaint seeks a temporary injunction barring enforcement of the University's speaker regulations and a permanent injunction declaring the law and speaker rules unconsitutional.

S.W.I.N.E. — A group of student purporting to be members of S.W.I.N.E., greeted Al Capp, creator of Li'l Abner, at the Raleigh-Durham Airport yesterday afternoon. S.W.I.N.E. S.W.I.N.E. Greet Capp — (Really They Were DKE's)

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Satirical cartoonist Al Capp, who has spent the past few months protesting against protest was met at the Raleigh-Durham Airport yesterday by 10 Carolina students dressed in "S.W.I.N.E." costumes.

"Let's have a sit-down," joked members of UNC's mock chapter of "Students Wildly Indignant About Nearly Everything," a ficticious group Capp has been lampooning in some of his recent cartoons.

Wearing sweat shirts, Bat Man outfits, false noses and bushy eyebrows, the pigs — er, S.W.I.N.E. — greeted the creator of Li'l Abner as he stepped off the passenger ramp of a gleaming airliner.

While one S.W.I.N.E. waved his big, red plastic horn, the "protestors" — actually pledges of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity — yelled "Boo World" and 'I'm wildly indignant against EVERYTHING."

At least five photographers busily snapped pictures of the demonstrators' large banner: "S. W. I. N. E. Welcomes Al Capp."

Their hero, wearing a dark blue suit and a loud blue tie, walked up to them and declared:

"Nice to be here . . . Thank you . . . But you're not real S.W.I.N.E. . . . You're too damn clean. Go out and dirty up.

"You have until tonight to acquire unmentionable diseases, burn your draft cards and possibly beat up old ladies."

"But wait until you hear my speech tonight," said Capp. "I'll really dirty you up."

Capp told reporters he'd been greeted this way before—but by real protestors. "They weren't carry S.W.I.N.E. signs," he said.

Capp was asked why he began drawing his comic strip.

"I was motivated by hunger," he replied.

Why does he keep it up?

"I'm motivated by avarice," he said.

Crews from WUNC radio and a local TV station were present, as well as Carolina Symposium officials.

Then came the inevitable question:

"Mr. Capp, do you know about the law restricting Communist speakers at state-supported universities?"

Capp said he hadn't heard of the Speaker Ban restrictions, but commented anyway:

"If the students as passionately eager, they can hear all the speeches they want by inviting them (Communists) to an empty lot.

"Even a men's room would do."

Then the famous cartoonist —whose artistic efforts are as much a part of this country's culture as anything he satirizes — chatted with DTH Columnist Armistead Maupin and others in the large car which was to take him to Chapel Hill.

Maupin, known for his own satires, will escort Capp during his visit.

"Who was it who created all the fuss?" asked a bewildered airline passenger.

"Who else could it have been?" said a companion. "That was Al Capp."

New Sorority Announces Colonization At Carolina

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

Kappa Alpha Theta, the oldest Greek letter sorority, announced officially Wednesday that they will begin colonizing here.

The colony will hold rush interviews the first week of May. Interested girls must sign up at the Dean of Women's Office by April 28.

There has been talk for some time of a Theta chapter's being formed here, but Wednesday's announcement was the first official word.

The colony hopes to build a $250,000 house at the corner of Cottage Lane and East Rosemary Street. However, a zoning question in involved.

"It depends on this little strip of land of ten feet and the easement," said Mrs. Darrell Brock, a Theta alumna who will be the colony's advisor.

There are also some residents who are protesting the change which would put a sorority house in their midst.

The question will be resolved at Monday's meeting of the Town Board of Aldermen.

Two co-eds who transferred here from other Theta chapters will lead the new colony. They are Sandra Roper, of Washington, D. C., who transferred from Ohio Wesleyan, and Susan Hardy, a graduate student, who was a Theta at William and Mary.

Theta will become the eighth sorority on this campus. The last sorority to colonize here was Phi Mu, in 1964.

Former Gov. Luther Hodges was reported last night to be recovering satisfactorily from surgery which he underwent Monday.

Memorial Hospital said the operation was to remove "an abdominal aneurysm found below the kidney arteries. Such an aneurysm is a localized balloning of the vessel wall and in this case involved the artery carrying the main supply of blood to the pelvis and lower extremities."

Algren Calls U.S. 'Cowardly' In War

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

In a Carolina Symposium speech Tuesday night novelist Nelson Algren broke from the planned topic of "Myth and Mores" to criticize the U.S. role in Viet Nam as "cowardly . . . and equally as guilty as the Viet Cong of atrocities."

But his anecdotal, rambling talk — on "Is Batman Our Man In Saigon?" — was probably more related to the original subject than he intended and than the audience realized.

"Perhaps it was a myth," Algren, 57, asserted, "that we are in Viet Nam at the asking of the Vietnamese people.

"The war is basically a cowardly war. It is cowardly in that it is the assault of a strong power on a weaker nation. We did cry an outrage at the Fascists' bombing of the Spanish town of Guernica, but where are our cries now?"

Algren jabbed at a myth when he noted that "we talk of sneak attacks and the day of infamy. A sneak attack is made by an enemy or big power without declaring war, using planes to attack your battleships.

"On the other hand, if you use planes to attack civilian villages by night, it's heroic."

The author of The Man With the Golden Arm further uncovered a possible myth in chiding those who call the Viet Cong "guilty of inhumanity." "We are both about equal in guilt," Algren asserted.

"Why are we there?" he asked. "No one really knows. I can guess that when you have a $50 billion defense industry you must have an enemy to keep it going.

"It isn't who's most ethical, but who wins the war."

Algren told an anecdote to re-enforce his point, about a Viet Cong who was asked what in his faith of Shintoism permitted such atrocities of war. The "VC" replied, "the same which Christianity has to permit your atrocities."

He then asserted that "we are the threat. There are no Russians on the Mexican or Canadian border, but we have bases along theirs. We have adopted a standard of aggression that nullifies our principles declared at the Nuremberg trials."

He also implied several myths in Secretary of State Dean Rusk's statement that 35 nations are assisting the U. S. in Viet Nam by accusing Rusk of "sustaining the image that we are in the same position as in the Thirties.

"But we are the attacker and haven't been attacked. To sustain the comparison with

'Best Educated-Victims Of Myth'

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Congressman Morris Udall stated in his Carolina Symposium speech yesterday afternoon that the victims of political myths are not persons of lower education, but those of higher education.

He reasoned that those with greater education and higher incomes — "the haves" — are reluctant to adjust to change.

"But the capacity of the United States to make orderly change is the essence of its greatness," Udall said. "It is able to break tradition, and I have no sympathy for those held by the 'dead hand of the past.' "

He pointed out that if only people with a college education could have voted in presidential elections, "the Republicans would have won all elections since 1928, except for Goldwater in 1960, who came close.

"Maybe the Republicans in the audience would consider this good, but I look upon this as disastrous!," added Udall, the Democratic brother of Interior Secretary Stewart Udall.

"National discourse is riddled with slogans and generalities. I don't want to seem partisan, but the Republicans are more inclined to use them."

Speaking before a Memorial Hall crowd of several hundred, Udall defined myth as "simply a shortcut to evade the careful process of analysis." He then proceeded to explode a number of concepts he considered myths.

"That he Federal government is my enemy, trying to control every facet of my life is utter nonsense. There has never been a time or place where freedom was greater — freedom of the press, the freedom to picket on college campuses and the freedom to make a fool of oneself, which is still used well."

Another myth Udall challenged is that the Federal government grows at the expense of states."

He cited statistics to show that from 1946 to 1963 North Carolina's expenditures were up 471 percent, compared with the Federal government's 13 percent increase; that N.C.'s tax collections were up 142 percent, compared with the national government's 118 percent rise; and that the state's public debts were up 284 percent, contrasted to the Federal government's increase of 54 percent.

Udall, 44, criticized the myths that "the country is going down the road to socialism in a basket and that "welfare legislation leads to socialism, which leads to Communism."

He said, "There is redistribution of income in some government programs; the public schools take old retired executive's money to give it to children, but these federal programs are those which all enlightened states in the world have."

Jubilee: 'Spirits' Flowing Free In Carolina Tradition

By DAVID KNESEL
Special to The DTH
Part Two of a Series

And it came to pass that a great Jubilee was brought to Carolina for a second year.

In 1964 Jubilee ran from April 24-26, same times, same place—in front of G.M. the cast was even more impressive. Friday night, the Four Freshmen; Saturday afternoon, Flatt and Scruggs; Saturday night, The Serendipity Singers and commediene Fred Smoot; Sunday, Charlie Byrd.

The combos were all "names," too — The Monzas, The Thirteen Screaming Clowns, Don Thompson and the Adorables. The flicks were award winners: Breakfast at Tiffany's, The Virgin Spring, The Innocents.

And the hecklers were louder and the drunks were drunker. Dozens of anecdotes, exaggeraged, no doubt by age, come from this Jubilee. There was the couple that drive up in a golf cart, compelete with bar. Then who will ever forget that hot water bottle strung up in a tree, filled with beer. If you wanted a mug full, just open the hose that hung down.

You really couldn't hear the Four Freshmen, they were too quiet The hecklers had a field night. An entire keg of beer was lugged in by four dateless frosh, and they sat right at the foot of the stage.

The next morning, it was haul out the beer cans, again. Dump trucks came empty and left full. The beer boxes in front of the Dairy Bar formed a mountain. There were also at least three drunks left over from the night before. Rumor has it that this was Chancellor Sharp's first view of Carolina.

But no matter what shape Jubilee was in, it was a tradition now. The articles in the DTH implied that it had always existed. "Sponsored by the G.M. Activities Board, Jubilee brings top entertainers to the Carolina Campus each year for a series of on-the-lawn shows," said one reporter.

A local clothing store used the "tradition" in its advertising. "Are you ready for Jubilee Weekend? You always have more fun when you look your best," it said.

And Chip Barnard, the DTH's talented cartoonist, first came to the attention of readers during Jubilee. In one cartoon, hehad a couple seated before the stage, days prior to Jubilee. "Just making sure we get a good seat," it quipped.

Another artist, anonymous except to a few people, also made an impact on Jubilee. This was Bill Campbell, 1965-66 president of GMAB, who created the original Jubilee letters, which are now a trade mark. He also designed the brochure for that year,featuring satyrs chasing bosomy Roman women.

The DTH responded to the new tradition with a "Special Jubilee Edition," with pictures, editorials, and the schedule of festivities.

Hugh Steven's editorial read: "This year's edition of Jubilee promises to be bigger and better than ever . . . Last year some 16,000 people attended Jubilee, and with a bit of help from the weatherman, the total should top 20,000 this year.

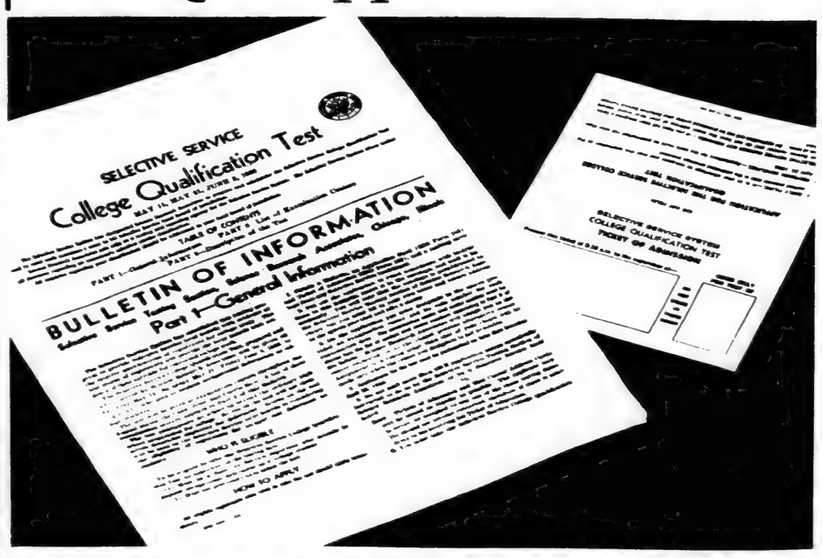
"But we also think of the mess that comes with Jubilee. The lawn in front of G. M. resembles a disaster area after each concert. And we can think of some of the spectators who get a few too many drinks in them before they arrive and proceed to disturb everyone else, including the performers . . . Let's hope they shut themselves up from the start."

They didn't unfortunately. The night concerts were usually drowned out, although afternoon performances were a little more quiet. By Sunday, the rowdies evidentally had burned themselves out . . . Charlie Byrd's concert was a thing of quiet beauty.

The combo parties, again, were smash successes. Otelia was there to report. She was "very happy that their Jubilee was such a success, "and it did her heart good to see "so many couples takeing part in the combo party. I wouldn't call it a dance, for there is no dancing to it. Instead, it reminds me of the account of the "jerks" which took place at religious camp meetings in pioneer days in the midwest," she wrote.

Jubilee, 1964, closed in the G. M. Lounge with a concert by the Sinfonians. The next year there'd be some changes made.

SSCQT Applications Due Saturday



APPLICATION FORMS and information bulletins for the draft test await students in the Records Office, Hanes Hall. Deadline for mailing them is Saturday midnight. The test will be given here as well as in 36 other North Carolina towns on May 14 and 21 and June 3. The test is voluntary.

If you plan to take the Selective Service College Qualification Test, you must mail your application form by Saturday.

The form, as well as an information booklet, may be obtained in the Records Office, 1 Hanes Hall.

The bulletin lists test centers and has a description of the test, including sample questions.

Science Research Associates, Chicago, will administer the test on May 14, May 21 and June 3. They have the responsibility of informing the local draft boards of each nominee's score.

The test, consisting of 150 multiple choice questions, lasts about 3 hours. It is divided into four general areas: reading comprehension, verbal relations, arithmetic easoning and data interpretation.

Scores on the test will be used by the local boards in considering the eligibility of reigstrants for deferments as students. They will not determine deferment by themselves.

Last Call For Symposium

This afternoon Thomas Wolfe will speak in Memorial Hall on "Myth and the American Dream." Tonight C. Vann Woodward and Ralph Ellison will discuss "Myth and the South."

Thus the 1966 Carolina Symposium will end.

If there are any students who have not yet taken advantage of this week's stimulating programs, we urge them to get in on a good thing today.

Adn don't forget, if you don't feel like making the hike to Memorial Hall and sitting peacefully for an hour, you can watch and hear the speakers on WUNC-TV.

Cat Still In Bag – But Bag Has A Leak

From The Chapel Hill Weekly

When Paul Sharp was selected as Chancellor of the University at Chapel Hill to succeed William Aycock, one of the first persons to learn that piece of news — outside of those in the small, select group that did the tapping — was a bellhop at the Carolina Inn. If it hadn't been for one official who sidled up to the bellhop, pointed out a stranger and said, "There goes our next Chancellor," Mr. Sharp's nomination would have been one of the best kept secrets in Chapel Hill since the night Frank McGuire started Tommy Kearns at center.

When the University announces in two or three weeks the selection of the new Chancellor to succeed Paul Sahrp, this bit of news is supposed to break as fresh as a day in spring. So far, those involved in the selection process have tried to play it close to the vest, not so much because they want to be coy but because protocol demands it. The Board of Trustees would look somewhat askance at the President if he announced his recommendation for the Chancellor to anyone before briefing the Trustees themselves.

Regardless of the security, practically everybody in Chapel Hill and a whole lot of those who just drop in from time to time already know that Acting Chancellor Carlyle Sitterson will get the nod. One of the State's major daily newspapers has a story already prepared announcing Mr. Sitterson's selection. The story, which quotes "informed sources," will appear when those who decide such things figure it will get its best mileage.

Fortunately, this is not just idle speculation. Carlyle Sitterson will, indeed, become the next Chancellor at Chapel Hill, and you don't have to know an insider to get the message. The surest indicator that he will get the job is that there hasn't been a word of speculation about anyone else even being considered. According to unofficial reports, the Chancellor selection advisory committee has sent President Friday three names in addition to Mr. Sitterson's. But this was purely a matter of form. It would have been a trifle presumptuous of the committee to have sent Mr. Friday only one name.

Perhaps an even surer indication of Mr. Sitterson's imminent selection is the way the campus has responded to his administration as Acting Chancellor. His performance hasn't been that of a seat-warmer: his grasp of the job has been sure and firm and his calming influence on the campus, which tends to roll and rise at the slightest breeze, has been remarkable to witness. Neither have those subject to his administration looked at him as a seat-warmer. Whether they know something that nobody outside is supposed to know or whether it is just a certain survival instinct found in all State agencies, they have deferred to him without question as the man in charge. This sort of deference in carefully measured in proportion to genuine authority.

The surest indicator of all, though, is the fact that at this point in the University's history there is nobody around better qualified to serve as Chancellor at Chapel Hill and there is certainly no one with a better promise of success. In Carlyle Sitterson, the President of the University and the Trustees have a known quantity. They are not choosing solely on the basis of curriculum vitae, several interviews and a clutch of references. They have seen what the man can do as Chancellor, and there is no better reference than on-the-job training. The President and the Trustees are more impressed by performance than anything else, and Mr. Sitterson has given them that.

Some question was raised a couple of weeks ago as to whether Mr. Sitterson, after getting a bitter taste of the Chancellorship, would accept the job. It is not really a biting question. In good health and without compelling personal reasons for declining, he has no choice. He might not like the job and might not want it, but he will have to accept. His commitment to the University is deep and without reservations, and this presumes, in addition to a willingness to serve, a readiness to lead.

The formal announcement of Mr. Sitterson's selection and his acceptance will stir new hope and confidence in Chapel Hill, in addition to a lot of undisguised pleasure. We warmly commend President Friday and the others responsible for exercising such rare good judgment.

KA National Orders Stars And Bars Off Houses; Reasoning Is Nonsensical

According to The Greensboro Daily News, the Virginia chapters of the Kappa Alpha Order have received a directive from their national offices ordering them not to display the Confederate flag publicly in front of their houses. The story further said there was reason to believe this directive will be forwarded to all KA chapters in the nation.

The reason for this move, according to KA officials, is that removal of the flag will be a step towards bringing the KA's and their image into the modern era.

Immediately one is struck by the simplistic line of reasoning the KA national officials have used. It is quite obvious that they are taking the attitude that the Confederate flag stands for something dishonorable in the modern era, and, like a family skeleton, it should be well hidden in the closet of Southern history.

In a recent interview in Look magazine, Alabama Attorney General Richmond Flowers made a great point of telling the public how the old and honorable flag of the Confederacy had become the symbol of racists, hate-mongers and assorted lower class bigots who form the extremist groups of the deep South. There is no question but that this is a correct observation, but Flowers also spoke of it as a symbol that has been misused, and implied that it should be saved from its current fate.

It would be presumptuous to characterize every KA chapter as an organization of progressive, modern individuals. But it is just as presumptuous to say that all KA chapters are filled with social deviates because they display the Confederate flag.

Consider the situation of the UNC chapter of KA. Of roughly 65 active members, 10 of their membership are Northerners, graduates of Northern prep schools. They have an interesting cross-section of student life on this campus within their ranks, and many of their leaders have shown themselves to be highly progressive and civil gentlemen.

If the UNC chapter of KA was ordered to strike the stars and bars from their glag post, it would have a misleading effect on the public. It would also deprive the Confederate flag of yet another position of honor.

The national officials of Kappa Alpha should realize that their chapter houses are not courthouses and public buildings in the heart of Birmingham, but that they are private fraternal property. One might also venture to say that there is not one active KA brother that is a member of the Klan, or participates in night-rides or bombings.

It must only be concluded that this national directive is not only an insult to the Confederate flag, but it is also a very nonsensical policy to enact.

Dr. Johnson Speaks On Speaker Ban Law

(Editor's Note —In response to a recent column paraphrasing a work of Benjamin Franklin, Mr. Rmbert has submitted this paraphrase of a section from Boswell's "Life of Johnson.")

By JAMES REMBERT

Monday, April 28, 1783

"I mentioned Dr. Johnson's excellent distinction between Liberty of conscience and liberty of teaching.

Johnson: 'Consider, Sir; if you have children (undergraduates) whom you wish to educate in the principles of the Church of England (Americanism), and there comes a Quaker (Communist) who tries to pervert them to his principles, you would drive away the Quaker (Communist). You would trust to the predomination of right; which you believe is in your opinions; you will keep wrong out of their heads. Now the vulgar are the children of the state. If anyone attempts to teach them doctrines contrary to what the state approves, the magistrate (legislature) may and ought to restrain him.'

Seward: 'Would you restrain private conversation, Sir?'

Johnson: 'Why, Sir, it is difficult to say where private conversation begins, and where it ends. If we three should discuss even the great question concerning the existence of a supreme being (also relevant) by ourselves, we should not be restrained; for that would be to put an end to all improvement. But if we should discuss it in the presence of ten boarding school girls, and as many boys (freshmen and sophomores), I think the magistrate (legislature) would do well to put us in the stocks, to finish the debate there.' "

Maybe the State Legislature has some affinity with the eighteenth century.

The Top Ten Social Groups Compiled

(Editor's note — The following little creation, written by a local character of some note, appeared recently on the bulletin board of a UNC fraternity house.)

By MIKE KAY

According to Dean Long in Tuesday's DTH, fraternities may become "among the most significant social groups on this campus." Here is the recently-compiled list of the top 10 social groups at UNC:

1. Boondock House of Mighty Mo.
2. Zeta Nu Pi Suite of Scott College.
3. Mu Nu Psi Phi Chi House of Maverick.
4. Cracker Suite of Graham House of Morehead College.
5. Lambda Zeta House of Ehringhaus College.
6. Beta Alpha Nu Suite of Vance Dormitory.
7. Phi Suite, Zeta Floor, Mu Room, Pi Toilet of Carr Dorm.
8. Kappa Suite of Omega Floor of Alexander Residence Dorm.
9. Rho Psi Floor of Stacy, Stud House.
10. Delta Tau Nu Suite, Connor House.

Women Dominate Men In US Social Structure

Prof. Henry Higgins put it this way in "My Fair Lady":

"Why can't a woman be like me?"

Higgins suggested that men are more patient, rational and forgiving.

Fictitious or not, he represented a generation of men in Victorian England — many of whom, like him, retreated to their bachelor's clubs, disgusted with the female half of the race.

Even today, sexually segregated schools are more common in Britain than in the United States, but English attitudes toward the fairer sex have undergone a considerable change for the better.

Or have they?

Not if Dr. Joshua Bierer's opinion is typical of his countrymen.

Bier, a leading psychiatrist, recently announced he was traveling to our country to study "the most worried people in the world." Us, that is. The reason: Money and women.

Now, I agree with the good doctor that money is the source of many problems and women too, maybe.

But saying that the latter are a danger to American society is overdoing it.

Should Bierer be right, however, the future, men, looks grim indeed.

Listen to this:

"The status of American women is a tremendous cause of worry in that country.

"American women are ruling the American society.

"The American man works himself to death at 40 or 50 and leaves rich widows."

Alarmingly, Bierer will find an ally upon reaching the land where men have "become goody-goodies."

He's Philip Wylie, author of "Generation of Vipers."

Wylie, who credits himself with putting the word "momism" "indeliably in our language," writes:

"Mom is everywhere and everything and damned near everybody, and from her depends all the rest of the U. S.

"Disguished as good old mom, dear old mom, sweet old mom, your loving mom and so on, she is the bride at every funeral and the corpse at every wedding."

Somehow, I don't like the double meaning of the above paragraph, but to continue:

"Men live for her and die for her, dote upon her and whisper her name as they pass away, and I believe she has now achieved, in the hierarchy of miscellaneous articles, a spot next to the Bible and the flag, being reckoned part of both in a way."

According to Wylie:

"Mom . . . commands. Mom's more than ever in charge. Hardly five Americans in a hundred know today that mom and her bogus authority have ever been questioned — by me or by anybodyelse.

"The nation can no longer say it contains many great, free, dreaming men.

"We are deep in the predicted nightmare now and mom sits on its decaying throne — who bore incestuous perversion of normal instinct."

He even thinks momism contributed to the rise of McCarthyism.

Men, frankly, I'm scared though I'll never admit it.

If Bierer and Wylie are correct, maybe it's time to turn the Arboretum into a parking lot.

Letter

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The title of Mrs. Matute's talk last Friday at Dey Hall promised some enlightenment on the subject of the uncanny hiatus in Spanish literature after the Civil War in Spain. It was not forthcoming, the audience was warned at the outset, and, sure enough, the subject remains as wide open to query and conjecture after her talk as it has been these last odd thirty years.

The weight of Mrs. Matute's rather maudlin apologia pro silentio nostro seemed to point to rigid official censorship as the villain in the contemporary play of Spanish literary inactivity. One could accept that as a valid premise, but the ensuing conclusion seemed a bit strained. That beauty and art found their empire on the ruins of heroic virtues has been witnessed altogether too many times in history from the Italian Renaissance up to the more recent Pasternak and Solokhov to lend much credence to Mrs. Matute's speculations. The unsettling effect that the question about Spain's gironella had on her was all too eloquent, and casts grave doubts on her arguments, which relied more on an appeal to pity than on the history of art or the dogged perserverance of culture.

The truth lies elsewhere, for, surely, the field of human experience is wider and richer than a few childhood impressions, however searing, of a civil war, and censorship, however flagrant and stifling, could only conceivably cover a minuscule, perhaps only a political, facet of human endeavor. If the tragic sense of life is so dear to her generation's heart that writing about anything else is not worth the effort, then one must bequeath them the old biblical consolation of inheriting the Kingdom because they were, indeed, poor of spirit. Why mediocrity of mind should deserve such blessing never failed to baffle me.

Nevada's Semi-Nude Dealers Outlawed

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Semi-topless women blackjack dealers disappeared today from a suburban Las Vegas casino where they made their debut four days ago.

The Nevada Gaming Commission said they'd have to go —or commissioners would close the casino.

Owner Major Riddle said he would comply with the commission ruling, but added: 'I can't see where they're indecent or immoral

"Officials checked several people — including older women — in the casino the night they started, and they couldn't find anybody who thought it was indecent or immoral," he said.

The casino, the Silver Nugget in North Las Vegas, said it would file an answer to the commission ruling within five days. Such replies usually appeal the commission's decision.

Commissioners acted unanimously after gaming board chairman Edward Olsen said the girls were dressed in poor taste.

They wore bikini - like briefs and see - through chiffon tops with whispers of covering here and there.

"I feel very strongly that this effect distracts the (card) players attention from the hands that he's playing and makes it easier for the house to win," said State Atty. Gen. Harvey Dickerson

One-Run Games Feature Intramural Softball Slate

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

One - run games marked the intramural softball schedule for Tuesday, with many contests not decided until the last inning.

Sigma Chi squeezed past Pi Lam, 9-8. Pi Lamb jumped to a 7-0 lead in the first inning, sparked by Prather's home run. But Sigma Chi cut the lead, tied it, and won in the seventh when McCormick singled in Wood with the tie - breaking tally.

The ZBT Zooboys shaded KA Red I, 8-7. Trailing by 6-2, KA rallied to tie the game in the last inning. ZBT pulled it out with a run by Kabat on a hit by Minisman and an error.

The Kappa Psi Choppers held off St. A. Blue, 8-7. Kappa Psi built up an 8-0 lead, then saw St. A. come back with six runs in the last inning to make it close. Minton homered for Kappa Psi, as did Bullock.

Phi Gam won a slugfest from Zete I, 13-12, with two runs in the last inning. Zete scored eight runs in the first inning, then watched the Phi Gams play catch - up until they finally won.

DU Blue I whipped KA Black I, 16-6. Coleman and Goforth whacked home runs for DU, and the fumble - fingered Ka's chipped in with seven errors. DU pounded out 12 hits in the romp.

ZBT capitalized on the wildness of Phi Delta Chi's pitcher to win, 12-5. Beatty walked 11 men, most of whom scored for ZBT. The Zebes had only four hits.

Phi Delt Blue unloaded four home runs to thump AK Psi White, 15-7. Williams, Armstrong, Ridenour and Wainright all hit for the circuit. Woodard clouted two for AK Psi.

In other results: Phi Kap Sig 15, DU Blue III 5; KA Blue I 12, Lambda Chi Hi Balls 5; Law III Blue 9, Geology Coprolites 5; DU Blue II 9, TEP Jabs 6; Chi Psi No. 37, Phi Gam Purple 6.

Wake's Cole Leads ACC

GREENSBORO, N. C. (AP) —Tommy Cole, 6-foot-3, 195-pound senior outfielder from Wake Forest, has jumped into a commanding lead among Atlantic Coast Conference batters and is a serious threat to the conference's all - time batting record.

Cole, from Danville, Va., has hit safely 22 times in 47 official trips to the plate for a 486 average, the ACC Service Bureau said yesterday. The single - season conference record is .460, set in 1964 by Jim Pitt of Maryland.

Danny Talbott, North Carolina's football - baseball star, is Cole's closest challenger with most of the championship season still to be played. Talbott has a .406 average.

Lawton Cowart of Clemson, the ACC leader in runs batted in with 21, ranks third in batting with a .373 average.

In an unprecedented development, the third through the eighth ranked batters are from the same team - Clemson. Behind Cowart are Rusty Adkins, Keith Waters, Tommy Pack, George Sutton and Ellis Dantzler. Another Clemson player, Eddie Barbary, is 12th giving the Tigers seven men with averages .346 or better.

Steve Wrenn of Wake Forest is setting the early pace in home runs with eight, although Sutton is hot on his heels with seven. Sutton is also just one notch behind Cowart in runs batted in with 20.

Fred Combs of N. C. State is No. 1 in doubles with six and Jack McCall of Clemson has five. Adkins of the Tigers tops triples with five and Mike Fair of South Carolina is the leader in stolen bases with eight.

Eddie Fogler, an all - city guard from New York, has signed a grant - in - aid to play basketball for Carolina.

Coach Dean Smith signed Fogler while on a recruiting trip last week. The 5-11, 165 - lb. backcourtman is the first all - city star from New York to come to Carolina since All-America Billy Cunningham.

"We think he can be an outstanding playmaker and scorer," said Smith. "He knows basketball very well," the Tar Heel coach added.

Fogler played for Flushing High School on Long Island. He averaged over 20 points per game for three years, while leading the league in assists by a wide margin.

Smith reported that several schools were interested in Fogler. The Tar Heel coach said that Fogler narrowed his choice down to three schools and picked UNC over Illinois and St. John's.

"Probably his most impressive credential," said Smith, "is that he is one of the few players to make the New York all - city team in his junior year."

According to Smith, Fogler's signing takes care of backcourt recuirting for next year's freshman team. The Tar Heels previously signed Jim Delaney, a guard from South Orange, N. J.

The UNC basketball team can give only five scholarships a year, and Smith is looking for frontcourt men now. Prospects will be visiting the campus over the next two weekends, and the UNC coach said he hopes to complete the recruiting job then.

the German attacks, Rusk makes it seem as if great legions of soldiers are goose-stepping down from North Viet Nam."

Algren argued that the numbers moving south across the border are at most 30,000. It's as if we said it's a political crime to cross the Mason-Dixon Line."

In one of the lighter moments, which frequently stirred much laughter amidst the Memorial Hall audience of 800, Algren presented a monologue like this:

"The nearer we get to the Great Society, the more I think it was designed by Barr Goldwater, since it is supposed to be the finest product of mind and man. It is actually a society limited to the expense - account class, supported by a proletariat wallowing in everything money can buy, as long as it's ugly.

"I don't mean to downgrade Goldwater's patriotism. He always has the 'Star - Spangled Banner' raised every morning at dawn in front of his house, but he uses an electric eye system so he can sleep until noon!"

Algren pointed out that Goldwater invented the "antsy-pants," underpants with designs of ants on it. "And Johnson's greatest contributions can be contained in one pair of antsy-pants."

Udall used statistics again to show that the U. S. spent "3.9 billion dollars" on welfare in 1939, but only "3.1 billion" in 1963, although the population grew from 150 million to 180 million.

He compared the myth to the assertion that a child who steals his first piece of candy will land up in Leavenworth Federal Prison.

"The country which is least likely to go Communist is the one which provides most welfare for its citizens. Such countries as Great Britain, France and Sweden take care of their people, but nations like Cuba and Dominican Republic have been ruled by conservative dictators and overthrown by the people."

Udall questioned the Goldwater - type argument that "people are poor because they are lazy or stupid," citing a U. S. News and World Report statement that the number of millionaries in the U. S. have increased from "13,000 in 1948," to "90,000" now.

The liberal congressman called "dangerous" the myth that "war is inevitable and there is no excuse for victory."

He said he believes in "preserving national security," but "we'll have to learn to live with these troubles. The argument that we'll have to fight China sooner or later is like one for committing suicide."

State To Answer Suit Soon–Bruton

State Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton said yesterday that North Carolina expects to file an answer "in the next several days" to the suit against the Speaker Ban.

Bruton announced in a statement that he met Thursday morning with Consolidated University President William C. Friday; Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson; Deputy Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody; Asst. Atty. Gen. James F. Bullock; George F. Ragsdale, legal counsel to the governor; and Andrew A. Vanore Jr., member of the attorney general's staff.

He said they discussed the suit which was filed on April 1 at Greensboro's U. S. Middle District Court by 12 students, Frank Wilkinson and Herbert Aptheker, but would not elaborate on what was mentioned at the meeting.

The statement read that the defendants — Friday, Sitterson and the University Board of Trustees — were expected to file their answer "in the near future."

Friday told the DTH yesterday, "It was the first time that we had met to discuss the suit. Our business there was mainly procedural — collecting all relevant documents and minutes for the suit."

Neither he nor Sitterson estimated when the answer would be filed. The answer must be filed by May 15, and The Chapel Hill Weekly predicted Wednesday that "the first hearing on the complaint is expected during the week of May 23," according to Herman A. Smith, Clerk of the court in Greensboro.

Sittersontold the DTH, "We have no idea whether we'll be called or not. The attorney General's office will prepare and make the answer.

Former Student Body President Paul Dickson filed the suit after University officials again refused speaking privileges to Wilkinson, head of a national committee to abolish the House Un-American Activites Committe, and Aptheker, director of the American Institute of Marxist Studies.

A LIVELY TALK it was as Symposium speaker Thomas Wolfe demonstrates what a friend of his looks like riding a motorcycle with a 300 horsepower V-8 Chevrolet engine bolted to his chest. Wolfe spoke to 1,000 people yesterday in Memorial Hall.

Wolfe In Symposium Talk

Happiness Explosion Is What's Happening

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

Tom Wolfe told a thousand people in Memorial Hall Thursday afternoon about a "happiness explosion" that is happening.

Wolfe is a 34-year-old Yale Ph.D. who makes his living by writing words in the "New York Herald-Tribune" and "Esquire Magazine" like nobody else has ever written them before.

He has been described as the biggest thing to happen to American letters in a very long time.

He showed up for the Thursday afternoon session of the Carolina Symposium wearing a double - vested, wide - lapeled, vested, vanilla - colored suit, an unbelievable blue-and-green "Liverpool" tie and brown suede buckled shoes.

He was supposed to talk on "Myth and the American Dream." He came closer to the subject than any of his predecessors.

The American Dream, Wolfe said, represents to most people a chance to "beat the system."

"It has given rise," he said, "to a whole group of whacky mythologies."

"I think it all goes back to the tremendous amount of money that was pumped into this country since World War II . . . I don't think anybody realizes how affluent we are," he said.

This affluence is shown in different ways, Wolfe said. It is shown for example by people crowding around counters to buy useless but ever-so-expensive — trinkets such as "trash cans with emerald strips up the side."

It's also shown, he said, by the "cosmopolitan" quality displayed by teenage gangs that drive to their rumbles in different cities, unlike their New York counterparts who operate on a nearly "feudal" system of fighting between guys from the next block, or "turf."

The main thing money is helping Americans do, though, is to "drop out" and play whimsical "roles." People are even dressing for the roles now, he said.

Surfers, for examples, are "declaring themselves to be 'Monks of the sea.'"

The surfers are examples of people who drop out of the job system — the system that use to issue status rankings by what kind of work you do.

There is a new thing now and it is called "Age Segregation" and the surfers are a good example of it because it's "a life that can be lived only by people between 16 and 22."

But, he said, the system has its own "built in drawbacks."

"Even some of these kids are

Tom Wolfe Pops American Dream

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

I am bent sharply forward. My rear end is plastered to the seat of a gold speckled alligator - like Harley "74," with a '63 Chevy V-8 between my legs. Baby Jane on my back. I am on my way to Vegas to see Cassius Clay pummel an opponent to the delight of Cosa Nostra fans.

Picture this. According to Tom Wolfe, in a very few years that's what our political and intellectual leaders might see when they look out their Washingtonian windows, because Americans are getting out of their society, soon to reach a "pure state" by playing their ultimate roles, obtaining their own American Dream.

Wolfe told a Memorial Hall crowd of 1,000 yesterday afternoon that men like Hugh Hefner, king of the Playboy empire, are models of the withdrawal symptoms our society is beginning to suffer.

"Hefner has reached the pure state," Wolfe said. "He is now a recluse; he never leaves his house, except for ceremonial purposes, like christening new Playboy Penthouses."

Hefnerish "pleasure palaces" are not only a phenomenon of our times, but a symptom of things to come. The Herald Tribune writer, a member of the New York Pop Jet Set Society of which he writes, feels that the teeners of America represent a major force in the myth he describes, the dream of complete submission to a role.

Surfers in their California garages, Phil Spector with his four karate body guards, motor cycle fanatics who sport alligator suits to match their machines, all indicate the "very wacky" position America is in today.

After a brief stay in England, Wolfe returned to this country convinced that American affluence is the deciding factor in the revolt going on in our middle class.

"England is still held in the grip of caste and status," Wolfe says. But in America there is "the most hilarious situation this country has ever been in." Our politicians are still interpreting events in the old contest of the 1930's, while in the past six or seven years the great mass of people in the United States are busy living up to their "myth of the glamour role."

Distinguishing a role from a position in life, Wolfe said women have never fallen prey to things like wearing uniforms to work. Secretaries and female business tycoons alike still feel their dominant role is being a woman. They don't wear uniforms, like bankers or plumbers.

But there are pockets of society — Las Vegas, Hollywood, the rock 'n' roll world, where people are stepping out

Students Give Full Time In Intercollegiate Seminar

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

While UNC students interested in the Sympodium sessions were having to fit them into their regular school schedule, a group of 37 students, representing 30 colleges, were making the Carolina Symposium a full - time business.

The Symposium Intercollegiate Seminar is designed to initiate interaction between visiting Symposium speakers and various elected students from selected schools.

Heads of the English, History, Political Science and Philosophy Departments at the schools received letters from the Symposium and contacted students they felt would be good participents.

Participating students arrived Sunday representing such schools as Vanderbilt, Hollins, Harvard, Goucher, Bucknell & Emory. Each morning from 9:30 to 12 a seminar was held with one of the Symposium speakers. In the afternoons and evenings they attend the regular Symposium sessions.

Comments from the cross - section of visiting students varied, most of them favorable.

Josie Bregenzer, a junior at Radcliffe majoring in English History and Literature, commented on how many new topics and thoughts she had been exposed to as a result of the diversity of the group.

Bill McKeachie, senior philosophy and English major at the University of the South, said "I have enjoyed the individual lectures and seminars and the dialogues that have developed, but I feel they have been inadequately related to each other.

It could be better integrated. None of the speakers talked about the same things in terms of myth. This is a rather ambivalent attitude I suppose because I certainly feel it has been profitable."

The visiting students have also reacted to the UNC campus and atmosphere. There was a concensus on the friendliness of the students and the relaxed atmosphere.

Josie Bregenzer, and Rick Gekoski, senior English Literature major at the University of Pennsylvania, commented that at most northern colleges, students are constantly tense, even if it's only trying to avoid getting hit by a bus on your way to class. "There is no sense of noise," said Josie, "and everyone walks to much slower.

Li'l Abner's Father Hits Protests In Symposium Talk

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Political satirist - cartoonist Al Capp, who denies he is either, Wednesday evening told a packed Memorial Hall that most student demonstrators "haven't been in the world long enough to be useful to it."

He blasted hot air on opponents of the gag law, the war in Viet Nam, supporters of "The Establishment," opponents of "The Establishment," students in general, and other intellectuals.

Capp spoke to more than 1,600 students and faculty members, by answering questions rather than addrsssing the large audience.

His remarks about the speaker ban were hissed by some, cheered by others — but no one was silent.

"I understand that you have invited Leon Trotsky to speak here," Capp said. "Why do you insist on burdening the (hisses) whom the University does not want to have here in its halls? (More hisses.)

"You students have been accepted as the guests of this University which has been forced to turn many others down (more hisses), not enough of them (laughter)."

"If you are determined to hear (Communists), then go somewhere else, to a garage for instance.

Capp added: "There never was an infant that didn't wet his pants to annoy his mother."

Capp Blasts Head Smack Dab Off Everything Here

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

They loved him. They plain, flat out loved him.

"They" was the overflow crowd that filled every one of the cushioned fabric seats of Memorial Hall, stood in the aisles, perched in the window sills and stood outside looking in.

"Him" was Al — "my maiden name is Kaplan" — Capp, who draws a comic strip called "Li'l Abner."

And the reason they loved him was because he did what they had come to see him do: he blew the head smack dab off the shoulders of just about everything he talked about Wednesday night at the Carolina Symposium.

To Capp, nothing is sacred, except maybe money and laughter. These were just about the only two things he didn't put down Wednesday.

PEOPLE STARTED filing into the auditorium about 7 p.m. to get seats for the 8 p.m. speech.

"And then, about 7:30 , the auditorium started to fill," said Vicky Caldwell, who was selling dime programs for the symposium.

Jubilee '66: Greet It With Jubilation Carolina!

By DAVID KNESEL
Special To The DTH
Final In A Series

And lo, there was a great weeping and wailing, for they had been forced from their Eden.

The entire controversy of the 1965 Jubilee began quietly enough. On April 6, page one, of the Daily Tar Heel there appeared an article stating that Jubilee would be held in Kenan stadium. The decision was made by the Graham Memorial Activities Board in response to heavy administrative urgings. There could be no repeat of the drunkenness, no repeat of "outsiders causing trouble, no obnoxious heckling, if Jubilee were ever to be held again.

The storm began to blow on the second page. The editor thundered: "This may mark the beginning of the end for an outstanding UNC Social Event. . .

"The basic problem is an old one — alcohol and its misuse . . . on at least one occasion the inebriates shared the spotlight with the performers."

But "If GMAB proceeds with its plans to move to Kenan Stadium and squelch all alcohol, it veritually will insure a decline in attendance. Any way you look at it, a splintery seat in Kenan Stadium is far less desirable than a soft spot on G. M.'s lawn.

"GMAB has demonstrated by its statement a lack of ultimate confidence in the students of this University. We believe that they can police themselves and allow Jubilee to retain its atmosphere. They should be given an opportunity to do just that."

The next day, an editorial correcting the first filled page two. Entitled "GMAB and Jubilee: A New Assessment," it raised the following new points: (1) The audience would sit on grass in the stadium, not on wooden splintery seats. (2) The main purpose of policing the activities was to keep out unwanted outsiders and permit only guests with guest tickets. (3) Alcohol had always been forbidden on the UNC campus and was not a right that GMAB was removing.

But no amount of talk, reason, or excuses could calm an angry UNC student body. The headlines of the next week tell the story: Dickson Asks Jubilee Talks, (banner headline) Students will Rally in Lower Quad to Protest Restrictions on Jubilee, "Jubilee Protest Fizzles Out: Other Rallies are Planned, "Dickson Hit for Decision to Back Move. There small articles, too. This tongue - in - cheek bit undoubtedly cooled many heads:

"Sonny Pepper, Jr. Class President, said, "All Kinds of soft drinks will be on sale, even soda water for anyone who might get a headache in the hot sun."

Pepper said ice and cups will be available with water 'just in case anyone gets thirsty.'"

Then it came. The laughs of the year.

On April 21, 1965, the Tar Heel headlined: "Jubilee Plans Plowed Under Again." According to Mr. Howard Henry, G. M. Director, it was impossible to have Jubilee in Kenan stadium because it had been plowed up by a tractor for spring football practice, and was "wall to wall dirt."

Again, the orphan Jubilee was homeless. A search for another sport began.

The Forest Theater was ruled out — too small. The Navy Field was large enough, but didn't have the right atmosphere. The Alderman-McKiver - Kenan mall was investigated — and turned down. After administrative - student - GMAB consultatons the news was finally broken. "Godfrey Makes Decision in Chancellor's Absense: Jubilee is in Polk Place," proclaimed a banner head.

The DTH was pleased, but warned: "Make no mistake, we're on trial. Jubilee is a self - bought gift to the student because most GM funds come from students. A gift it is. But that which is given can be taken away."

Finally, on April 30 came the announcement, "President Dickson says "No Police at Jubilee." "It's here at last," wrote the Tar Heel.

And there it was, in Polk Place, nicely roped off, almost exactly like the old spot — Jubilee, 1965, The Four Preps started off Friday night, gave the identical show of two years ago, and created some doubts as to the quality of the weekend.

These doubts were wiped out the next afternoon by The Modern Folk Quartet, a witty group of entertainers who quickly warmed up their audience. Then, at 8 that night, The Platters brought nostalgia, romance and delight to Jubilee's largest crowd ever. Couples snuggled in the moonlight and surreptitiously poured drinks. Public display of alcohol was forbidden and obeyed.

Johnny Cash the next day brought another record crowd —for an afternoon.

"Jubilee was a Success, Say Police," was the next comment in the DTH. "A Satisfying Jubilee, concluded the editorial page. "Congratulations to the Students themselves," continued the DTH. "The conduct at the performances wasn't perfect, but no one expected it to be. But it was reasonably sane, which is all that had been asked."

The student body had saved their tradition. Jubilee will be held in Polk Place again this year, under the stars. This is what has evolved out of two extremes — those of the early concerts and those of administrative concern over the reputaton of this, the nation's oldest and greatest state university. This is Jubilee, 1966. Greet it with jubilation.

Hot Weather Starts Water Fights Again

Violations of residence hall rules are becoming more frequent as the weather gets warmer, according to MRC Court chairman Bob Taylor.

Four cases were tried last week and five are scheduled for next week. Three violators were turned in within an hour Tuesday.

Taylor said most offenses resulted from water fights and fireworks.

Under the new MRC system, there is one court representative in each of the eight residence colleges. All violations in the college should be turned in to these men.

Other business discussed at the MRC meeting Wednesday night included plans for an Editor's Roundtable. This committee would be composed of the editors of each residence college newspaper.

MRC Secretary Jim Hough is heading the Roundtable and is seeking suggestions from college residents interested in newspaper work.

Vice-President Gary Nordan mentioned that efforts are underway to prevent "overlapping of social programs" in Morrison, Ehringhaus and Craige Colleges.

He said that since some weekends featured combos in all three colleges and other week ends had no entertainment at all, there was need for organization and cooperation.

More Testimony Heard In Drill Instructor Case

PARRIS ISLAND, S. C. (AP —More testimony was heard today at the general courts martial of Sgt. Paul B. Reynolds, a Parris Island drill instructor charged with mistreating Marine Corps recruits.

Sgt. Harry C. Kimbrough, another Parris Island drill instructor, is also under similar charges. His courts martial will begin after Reynolds concludes.

The prosecution said today that Reynolds, 24, of Union City, Ga., threw a scrub brush at a recruit, causing a cut

Congratulations, Thanks

The Symposium is over, and eyes are now turning toward Jubilee.

The Daily Tar Heel has devoted a great deal of space to coverage of this event. We hope you feel it has been well-spent.

It would not be appropriate to let this week's activities pass without expressing a sincere note of congratulations and thanks on behalf of all the students here to those who spent so many hours making the Symposium a reality.

To name all the workers would be quite a task. But would like to personally recognize the members of the Symposium Executive Committee:

J. Carlyle Sitterson, honorary chairman; Dr. Daniel W. Patterson, advisor; George Butler, chairman; David Lane, vice chairman; Bill Graham, vice chairman; Mary King, secretary; and Eric Van Loon, treasurer.

And the committee chairmen:

Miles Foy, speaker-schedule co-ordinator; Jay Hanan, student escort co-ordinator. Bill Tomford, intercollegiate seminar; Lyons Gray, social and hospitality; Kathy Cauble, physical arrangements; Christopher Wright, publicity; Joan Woodworth, exhibits; Steve Hoar and Betsy Ross Morris, handbook; Peter Cowan, Symposium news bureau; Bill Taylor, related discussions.

Courses For Grades' Sake

This is the time of year that students begin thinking about what courses they want to undertake fall semester next year.

As always they will have to consider meeting the requirements for graduation in their respective fields. But this time there will be an extra pressure on them when they choose their subjects—the draft.

The University of California, Berkley, has a program through which an undergraduate student with a grade point average higher than B may take one course each semester, outside his major field, for which he receives credit hours but no grade.

The idea for this pass-fail course was prompted to encourage students to take challenging courses without fear of sacrificing grade points which would lower their overall averages.

This is a good idea.

But it seems to be defeating its own purpose in one aspect. Students who have been able to maintain above a B average probably are not in any grade trouble and are thus not worried about "challenging" courses.

But what of the students who are sincerely interested in tackling a tough course for what they can get out of it, knowing that for all their efforts they will probably get a C or maybe even a D?

The Western Herald, Western Michigan University, made this comment:

"The Selective Service System should not be allowed to force students into narrow valleys of education by putting a premium on the taking of easy courses and limiting students to their fields of specialization. But since the draft system cannot be changed, to help the universities attain their goals, the universities should help themselves by initiating some form of non-graded classes."

* * *

And while we're on the subject of grades we might toss this out to be kicked around:

What about the plus-minus system at the University?

A student with reasonable ability in history might work hard for a semester. On three quizzes he gets 93 (A), 85 (B) and 85 (B). On his final examination he scores 88 (B+).

His professor gives him a B +, CONGRATULATING HIM FOR HIS GOOD WORK AND EXPLAINING HOW MUCH HE WISHES HE COULD HAVE GIVEN HIM AN A.

Another student in the same class compiles quiz grades of 78 (C+), 80 and 80 (B). On his final he makes a grade of 80. His professor issues a B—, telling him he just barely made it above the C line.

But compare the quality point averages of these two students. You will find each of them credited with a 3.0 for the course.

Clearly, the first student did better work than the second. His average for the quizzes was eight points higher as was his grade on the final examination.

This is a hypothetical case. But there are hundreds of real live, walking, talking cases just like it on this campus.

If the four-point system is going to be retained, and if professors are going to take the extra trouble to compute students' grades in terms of pluses and minuses, we would like to see a modification of the system whereby students may be rewarded for better than X.O work.

A Fraternity Makes The Top Ten List

By MIKE KAY

By virtue of the seven parties which they threw at the house last Saturday night, the local chapter of Canya Spara Dime fraternity has moved into the coveted ninth position on the highly prestigious Top Ten Social Groups on Campus list.

CSD rplaced Mu Nu Xi Floor of the Hell-raising Gamma House of Pettibone College. The wild ones of Mu Nu Xi were recently placed on social probation following a brawl which took place after their pledge weekend banquet at the Oh-Boy.

Here's what happened:

Saturday night, 72 carloads of Mu Nu Xi's roared into the Oh-Boy parking lot where a sumptuous banquet of cheeseburgers awaited them. Following dinner, several pledges began shooting straw papers at one another. This seemingly-harmless incident later culminated in a vicious, face-slapping, hair-pulling free-for-all behind Grimy College, at which time the pledge trainer tried in vain to restore order. Heedless of the cries, the boys of Mu Nu Xi gagged him, tied his legs and arms, and stuffed him down the Grimy chimney. He was discovered Sunday morning, a little sooty, but none the worse for wear.

Mu Nu Xi will, if their case is satisfactorily appealed to the understanding Administration Review Board, be restored to their place of prominence on the top 10 list in six weeks' time. This column's sympathies go out to the boys, for their weekly Friday night Coke-tail and Ritz cracker parties have been among the best social appairs on campus.

The president of the Canya Sparas said of his group's recent honor, "We knew we would do it. And watch out, Boondock College of Mighty Mon, we're aiming for no less than number one."

"Twenty-nine days, minus three weekends, plus Jubilee, lemme see . . ."

The Columnist At Berkeley

"This coast crying out for tragedy like all beautiful places; and like the passionate spirit of humanity, Pain for its bread."—Robinson Jeffers

The article on the editorial page of The Daily Californian arrested the eye, and a torrent of memories suddenly rushed out of the subconscious. Like a host of suitors, each fell in line and strove in succession to woo the reader's thoughts and inmost emotions.

The headline was very cryptic, the reader wondered why the editors of the Daily Cal, one of the four or five top college dailies, had allowed such a head to be set in type. The thought was brushed aside, for the tabloid paper does serve the University of California at Berkeley, and possibly the students there like cryptic headlines.

The overline said "nine thermidor," the date during the French Revolution that saw Robespiere's government was overthrown. It marked the beginning of the bloodiest radical rule of a black era.

Below this appeared the column's title: "Is you is, or is you ain't my baby."

The by-line said "Brian Turner."

Was it the same Brian Turner?

An uncreditied line from a poem followed: "All the stone cutters are waiting for spring weather to start work again. The tomb is all done except part of the lid."

The bulk of the column seemed totally unrelated to the words that preceded it. The subject was the draft, and it urged in uncomplicated phrases that all who disagreed with the United States involvement in Viet Nam should exhaust all methods to attain a conscientious objector's draft status. It was concise and well-documented, and it advised all aspiring CO's to get a good lawyer to help each fill out the forms.

After citing some of the difficulties one might face in following this procedure, the columnist urged as a final resort that his fellow youth renounce their American citizenship and take up Great Britian as a native land.

After citing "American war ideology," the columnist continued to recommend renunciation in spite of the consequences, for his readers "would have disassociated himself from this war and this foreign policy with clear conscience."

How many Brian Turners could be enrolled in Berkeley, that one reader, so many miles and years away, asked himself.

He recalled the tales of his high school classmates in Washington on a recent trip home. They were wild tales about how the friendly, intellligent athlete they had known had gone to the West Coast and joined the Free Speech Movement. He had been Mario Savio's roommate, others had said. He was one of the first five persons arrested there in the initial clash.

The stories kept coming back. The skeleton of an old image rattled its bones obscenely in the closet of the reader's mind and annoyed him wherever he went. It had to be the same guy. How many raidcals at Berkeley are named Brian Turner?

The old Brian was quite a guy. There was something about him that reminded one of a young, swift and gentle animal. Nervous energy radiated from him, and kept him always on the move. He enjoyed the company of others, and his memory never more clearly returned than when the reader recalled the trip a small group of graduating seniors took to that first pine-covered ridge that overlooks the farmlands of piedmont Virginia. He talked on about friends and experiences, and, every so often, the powerful convertable would slow down and he would unashamedly and enthusiastically call the group's attention to the singular beauty of the view, or the mountain laurel, or the brown-eyed Susans that appeared along the road in clusters.

The reader wondered how much he had changed. There was something coldly analytical about the column, and the reader was suddenly oppressed by the feeling that the author possessed a tightly closed mind on the issue. He was perfectly willing to renounce the land of his birth because of one unfortunate and outmoded policy embraced by the current government. It was incredible.

When they left Washington in the late summer of 1963, many had gone North, some had gone South and a few had gone West. What was it about California that had transformed him?

Possibly it was the nature of a campus, teaming with 27,000 of the nation's brightest student minds, and all striving to grow up and find identity in an impersonal atmosphere. The transition could have done it. Possibly, too, the tense and politically-heated climate there had tempted his active and strongly emotional mind. He might have suffered from the nagging despairation that begs youth to scream at ignorance and injustice, and strike back with powerful weapons of alienation.

Wherever the answer was, the reader knew he would continue to seek it. Perhaps he would find the answer in the summer, after he left the ripening leaves and slowly broadening horizon of Chapel Hill.

Letters

Wrong Editor

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel.

I should like to bring to the attention of the student body a serious injustice. The Daily Tar Heel, today, reports that the Publications Board has chosen Michael Paul to be editor of The Carolina Quarterly for the coming year. Therein hangs a longer and rather sadder tale.

As a student and as a reader and supporter of the Quarterly, and only incidentally, as last year's editor, I am concerned with its welfare. The tragedy is not that Paul was chosen; he appears to be qualified but that he was chosen in preference to David Southern. Paul's qualifications seem similar to mine when I was chosen. I understand that he, too, is a graduate student who edited a literary magazine at his undergraduate school. I was, however, a member of the staff and was chosen in preference to no one (though that might be put more flatteringly). Southern, too, is qualified. He has worked very hard and very well at this university on this magazine for the past two years. Ht had, and continues to have, the wholehearted and unqualified support of both the editors under whom he has worked. The selection of Paul is not unthinkable; the rejection of Southern is.

It is, so far as I know, without precedent. In the nearly twenty years of the Quarterly's existence, I know of no case in which a staff member with his editor's endorsement has been turned down in favor of someone who, however much he may have done for some other school and its magazine, has done nothing for us and ours.

This precedent is no accident. Earlier and apparently wiser publications boards have realized that the editing of a literary magazine with a national ciruculation and national reputation (national pretentions perhaps, but we have won the national O-Henry Short Story Award for two years running—blush) is a difficult and specialized job, and one that perhaps required the advice of past editors to fill.

Nor is this all. It is not less wise than just to reward proven and longstanding excellence and diligence. Indeed such rewards often help to insure it, often the only help.

I know some members of the Publication Board, including the advisors, to be of sound judgment and integrity, and find it difficult to believe that Chairman Blackwell presented the choice in anything vaguely resembling these terms. But this is the context of this startling decision.

This decision badly needs review. If the board is to depart so radically from past practice, it should be fully cognizant that it is so doing and be willing to say why.

If Southern is to be penalized for superior accomplishment, a fraction of which was in the past sufficient to secure that reward which he had every reason and right to expect, he deserves to know why.

Studies Indicate Student Demonstrations Are Increasing; Viet Nam Top Issue

WASHINGTON — (CPS) — Unrest among the nation's college students may not be as widespread as some believe, an official of the Education Testing Service of Princeton, N. J. told women deans and counselors in convention here last week.

Richard E. Peterson, an associate research psychologist, concluded from a nationwide study that despite the teach ins, marches, sit-ins, lie-ins, riots, and draft card burnings, the nation's college students are not a bunch of "red-eyed social reformers."

The fact is, he said, that campus food ranked second only to civil rights as a trigger to student protests in 1964-65. Demonstrations against US policy in Viet Nam barely beat out organized compalints against dress regulations as the third most frequent cause of student demonstrations.

PETERSON'S FINDINGS were based on a return of questionnaires from 850 deans at the nation's 1,000 accredited four-year colleges and universities. The deans were asked to indicate the extent of organized student protest for each of 27 educational, social, and political issues.

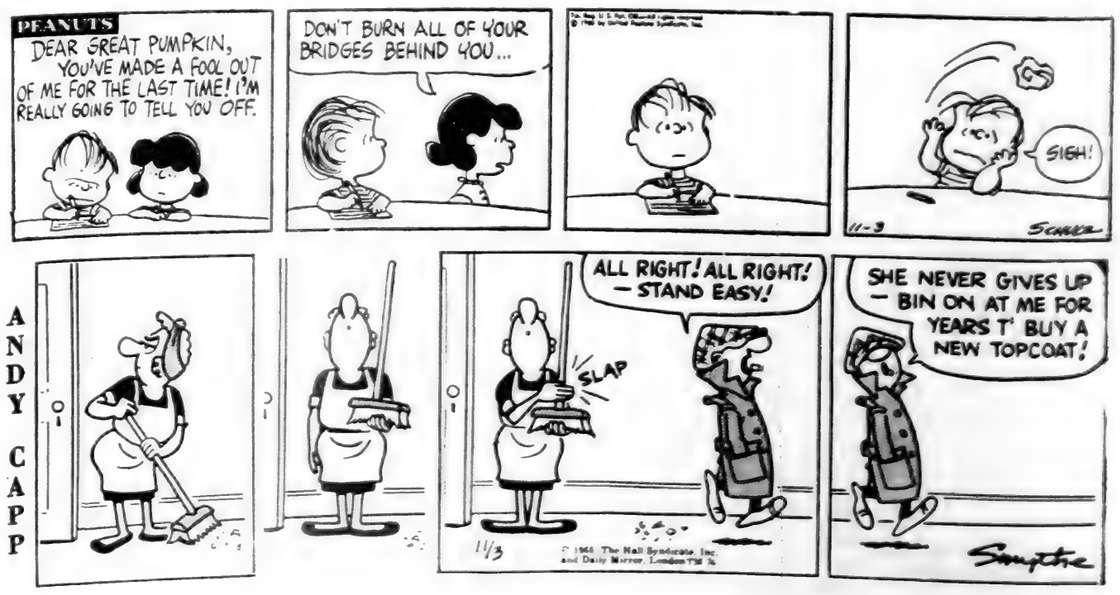
Peterson said a majority of the deans did report some form of organized protest on their campus during 1964-65, but that students protesting a single issue represented a very small percentage of their student bodies. No school reported a protest that included more than eight per cent of the student population and that top figure involved dormitory or other living arrangements.

Among the colleges and universities surveyed, 38 per cent reported protests over civil rights. Yet these demonstrations involved only 6 per cent of the students. Next came the food protests (25 per cent), with only about 7 per cent of the students complaining.

Protest in the South over civil rights during the summer of 1964 tied for third with dormitory regulations at 28 per cent of the instutitions. But Southern civil rights work attracted only half—about 4 per cent—of the students as did the protests over dorm rules and conditions.

VIET NAM DEMONSTRATIONS were reported at 21 per cent of the colleges—but less than 5 per cent of the students participated. Peterson predicted that in the immediate future Viet Nam will be the top protest issue.

In a related note, Peterson said the "organized student left" probably accounts for "less than 1 per cent of the total student population." He added that there was a correlation between the number of students involved in the student left and the size of certain protests, such as those directed against US policy in Viet Nam



Survey Shows That 'Millard Fillmore Lives'

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

"Lawrence Welk smokes pot."

"Millard Fillmore lives."

You're sitting in class enjoying one of the duller lectures of your college career. You glance down at your desk, few well chosen words such as the ones above, etched into it and possibly laugh out loud.

If this has ever happened to you and you laughed and continued this pastime, you are one of the hundreds at UNC known as "no - load - desk-readers."

But the point to be questioned here is, "Are these desk-readers really no loads?"

To find the answer we read 500 desks in several buildings and came up with some pretty startling trends.

The obscure group that is responsible for the desk-readers existence is the desk-writers. The writers fall into four major catagories; the obscene (which will not be discussed here for obvious reasons), the philosophers, the jokers and the answerers.

The philosophers give the most points to the faction that believes that desk - readers have found the answer. A few examples of their work will convince any who are on the fence.

"Walter Lippman is only a fad."

"Schlitz, breakfast of champions."

"Down with psychiatrists."

"The General Assembly shall inherit the earth and enslave us all."

"Help gross out humanity."

"May the blue bird of happiness cry on your birthday cake."

And the absolute finale:

"I love life and life loves me
I'm as happy as can be
A happier man nowhere exists
I think I'll go and slash my wrists."

Who could ask for more when you're looking for a little sage advice to set up life's guide lines?

But guide lines don't stop with the philosophers; the jokers also have some words of wisdom —

"Mary Poppins is a junky."

"Trotsky is alive in Lower Slobovia."

"Bullwinkle lives."

"In memory of those poor slobs in soc. 56 who died waiting for the bell."

"Is Snoopy really running a brothel?"

Is Linus really a woman - hater?

Does the little read - headed girl know what happiness really is?

Tune in next week for more exciting smuck."

"Don't mark on this desk."

"Big Lizard."

"Money? What's that?"

"If you are a girl, I'd like a date with you."

With the philosophers and the jokers alone one could lead a happy propserous, well - balanced life, but a third group comes on for the coup de grace. These students are no doubt desk - readers of a sort, but they go beyond this classification — way beyond it. The answerers read their desks, find a few flaws in the philosophy, or wish to clarify a point of logic, and write a reply to a statement written yesterday, last week, or in 1898.

Such wit and calculating thought is displayed in these gems of prose that only the illogical could go unimpressed after contemplating a few lines:

"Lyndon Johnson is a red (white and blue all the way)."

"I hate Yankees! (Love conquers all!) Who could love a Yankee (A Yankee! You Bigot!)."

"The fabulous Carolina Tar Heels (ha, ha, ha)."

"Boys are great! (so are broads)."

"I cannot imagine anyone wanting to major in anthropology or sociology (I cannot imagine anyone wanting to major) I can't imagine. (Oh, but all of us girls who transfer from Podunk Junior College for Women major in sociology or ducation).

It must be added that after this last comment a picture of a luscious Carolina coed had been penciled in and labeled "pig."

And so it goes. Each desk is a Bartlet's Familiar Quotations, The Prophet, and a Poor Richard's Almanac all rolled into one.

Get on the band wagon and read your desks!

You too can enjoy added profit and pleasure in your classes. If you read now, don't let the people call you a no - load; and if you haven't yet, check a few desks before you condemn that reader next to you.

The academic average of all fraternity men is 2.269 which is .024 less than the 2.293 average of all undergraduate men for last semester.

The highest average for the active member of a professional fraternity was the 2.324 average for Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity.

The ranking of the other professional fraternities was Kappa Psi, Alpha Kappa Psi and Phi Delta Chi.

going to reach some terrible age like 25," Wolfe said. Then what do they do? Stagnate, he said.

Another form of dropping out, Wolfe said, is men's attraction to machines.

He told about a motorcycle shop operator who had a Harley - Davidson cycle with a Chevrolet V-8 engine that he rides bent over and wrapped around it so as to cut down wind resistance.

"With a 300-pound Chevy engine bolted into his thorax, he had reached a pure state," Wolfe said.

"Dropping out," however, has reached its "purest form in Hugh Hefner," Wolfe said.

Hefner symbolizes what everybody all over is trying to do —turn their homes into "pleasure palaces."

"People are going off on their own, having their own kind of Happiness Explosion" Wolfe said, "whether the politicians and intellectuals realize it or not."

Politicians and intellectuals, Wolfe said, are all basically alike, be they right wing or left wing, in that they see everything through "an apocalyptical world view."

This outlook means that the government and those who run it feel like it's their job to protect the prople from various apocalypses — war, famine and so on — and they want everybody else to feel that way too.

During a question and answer period, Wolfe defended Pop Art by saying it is "a reaction against something artists cannot conceive — space technology — They're making art out of everyday, mass-produced items.

Heart Transplant O.K.

HOUSTON, Texas — Doctors planted an artificial heart in a man yesterday to take over the work of a damaged chamber, then struggled with every known medical skill to keep him alive when a crisis erupted.

But less than two hours after the device was implanted, a doctor announced, "the electrocardiogram looks great" and doctors began sewing up the incision.

The patient was Marcel L. DeRudder of Westville, Ill., 65 and unemployed because of his ailment. He entered the hospital a week ago.

At noon, yesterday Central Standard Time, the hospital announced that the blood flow was improving and the natural heart's beat had improved.

Shortly after the implant, Dr. Lancaster, acting as liaison man with newsmen, indicated blood pressure was very satisfactory.

Ford Yells Mismanagement

WASHINGTON — House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford pressed his Viet Nam mismanagement charge against Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara today but said the Pentagon should not change bosses in the middle of a war.

"I think it would be unfortunate at this time . . to make a shift and bring in a new man," said the Michigan congressman.

In the Senate, a Democratic member of the foreign relations committee urged that the United States seek a two-week, election-cease-fire in South Viet Nam.

Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee told the Senate a cease-fire would remove a hindrance to broad participation and result in a more meaningful election next August.

Dirksen stopped short of the mismanagement accusation Ford has made repeatedly and both men rejected any idea that McNamara resign.

Robbery Suspect Caught

LONDON — Scotland Yard detectives today swooped on a remote little seaside resort 70 miles from London and seized James Edward White, suspected mastermind of the great train robbery. He had led them a merry chase since the robbery in 1963.

Following a tip, plain clothesmen of the Yard's flying squad dashed by car to an apartment house overlooking a beach at Littlestone-On-Sea.

Yesterday he was questioned at Scotland Yard headquarters in connection with the $7.2 million train robbery Aug. 8, 1963. Only $758,000 of the loot has been found.

Police are still seeking two other men for questioning. They are Bruce Reynolds, 33, and Ronald Edwards, 34.

In addition police are hunting for Charles Wilson and Ronald Biggs, who escaped from prison in daring, well-organized breaks while serving 30-year sentences for their part in the robbery. Wilson escaped from a prison near Birmingham in August, 1964. Biggs was sprung from London's Wandsworth Prison last July.

It started to fill, she said, like it hadn't for anybody else during the whole symposium.

AL CAPP sat in the middle chair on stage and fidgeted around until he found the pocket with the Benson & Hedges cigarettes in them and lit one up.

He looked a little like a cross between a southern politician and a northern ganster in his dark pinstripe suit with the red pocket handerkerchief and with his black hair pulled straight back.

Then, after Capp had been introduced and all those people who were sitting and standing and perching in window sills and looking in from outside clapped for 22 seconds, Capp started talking.

And for one hour and 25 minutes, Memorial Hall belonged to Al Capp.

ALMOST, ANYWAY.

Some people didn't like Capp's badmouthing student protestors. These were, for the most part, student protestor - types.

Like this one guy in a green-and-white polka dotted shirt and long hair and a red beard. He just kinda sat there and looked pained and kept twisting the little tuft of whiskers right under his lower lip.

Then there was this 26-year-old little blonde from Durham who wouldn't say who she was, but would say she didn't like Capp too much either.

"I couldn't tell you exactly why," she said.

"It's just that he knows how to be funny, but he doesn't bother to find out enough about things to really get inside them."

In Day Long Battle

Marines Hit VC

SAIGON (AP) — Battalions of U. S. Marines and Vietnamese troops pounced from helicopters today on a Communist base in the Quang Ngai sector, pinpointed by a Viet Cong defector and battered the Red regulars they surprised there in a day - long battle.

The Allied Task Force had counted 173 enemy dead by nightfall.

Maj. Gen. Lewis W. Fields, Commander of the 1st Marine Division, said the toll may exceed 300. Losses among both the Americans and the Vietnamese were reported light.

Vietnamese troops appeared to be resuming their wheelhorse role in the field after the political diversions that limited their campaigning early in April. Vietnamese marines and paratroopers involved with the American Marines in the Quang Ngai sector battle were credited with 111 of the counted dead.

Attending the revived activity in the ground war was a disclosure that North Vietnamese labor battalions have reopened the Mu Gia pass, tunneling through or boring over the landslides with which B52 jet bombers closed that supply gateway April 12.

The pass is an outlet to the Ho Chi Minh trail that the B-52s blocked in their first raid on North Viet Nam, a raid that dumped nearly 700 tons of explosives and is estimated to have cost more than $1 million.

Smaller planes of the U. S. Air Force — F105 Thunderchiefs and F4C Phantoms — sought Wednesday to curb revived traffic through the pass. The spokesman said they cratered highway 15, an approach route, at three points.

Saigon authorities said combat deaths among South Viet Nam's armed forces, which fell below those of the Americans for the first time in the week of April 3-9, totaled 141 last week. A spokesman said there was "a very large number of small, scattered actions." Fifty - two Vietnamese were listed as missing.

The U. S. Military Command announced 89 Americans were killed, 635 wounded and five missing in action. American combat dead in the war now total 2,594 and the wounded 15,863.

Allied spokesman said 531 Communists were killed and 135 captured, compared with 785 killed and 140 captured in the previous week.

The most spectacular air strike against North Viet Nam Wednesday seemed to center on a military complex in the jungles 48 miles southeast of Dien Bien Phu and about 150 due west of Hanoi.

U.S. Thunderchief pilots said they quickly silenced ground guns, destroyed about 100 buildings, including a radio transmitter, and left the wreckage burning.

"It looked like the whole area was on fire," said Capt. George W. Acree, 33, of Westminster, Md., one of the pilots.

A Navy A4 Skyhawk from the carrier Kitty Hawk was shot down by ground fire 12 miles north of Vinh. The pilot parachuted and other fliers saw him land safely.

Peking's New China News Agency broadcast a Hanoi declaration that three American planes were shot down.

Like the guy on the motorcycle with the alligator suit, or Hugh Hefner. Both have reached the "pure state."

Intellectuals and politicos are promoting the "apocalyptic view of life" in this country. "They have an inability to look at anything that happens in this country except as it relates to 1930 politics," he says.

Role - playing has its fallacies, too. The "kids" in California are shot as soon as they reach the age of 25. The state is becoming segregated by age; old folks, towns are cropping up, the Hollywood strip won't permit girls in the bars over 25 years old.

"Pretty soon these surfers will have to start stagnating on the beach." But some have found it possible to remain under 25 through ingenious ways. Married couples have taken to motorcycles, and a select few reach their dream in a psychological way.

In a sort of conversion reaction, a person will build a three -foot wide moat around his house, which is actually pretty useless as far as keeping out people who would invade his life. "If they have a psychological fear, why not build a psychological moat."

Wolfe's answer to the mass withdrawal?

Government-subsidized demonstrations. In this way, by "acting out" even a token participation, our leaders will be comforted to know that someone cares aboue something. If nothing is done people are going to get completely out of touch, enraptured in their myths.

This might be symbolized by Hugh Hefner slipping, like an otter in a bin full of ene- into his swimming pool, wearinto his wimming pool, wearing an aqua lung, approaching that weightless state, until "your status system becomes a world of one and your supply of oxygen can be touched by no other person."

Such is the pure state of the American dream.

Duke Gridder Theft Suspect

DURHAM (AP) — Kenneth Dale Chatham, 20 - year - old Duke University football player, and two Furman University student will be tried next Thursday on charges of stealing a television set and other items from the Holiday Inn Motel in Durham last Friday.

Moore Revives NC - SC Dispute

MONROE (AP) — Gov. Dan Moore revived a longtime dispute between North Carolina and South Carolina Thursday night when he said Andrew Johnson was one of three presidents North Carolina "gave to our nation."

"In the unlikely event that someone might question that Jackson was a Union county N. C. man," Moore said, "there is a marker in this county which shows the place of his birth. And there is a statute in Raleigh which bears further witness to the fact."

South Carolina claims Johnson as a native son, since he was born about two miles inside the South Carolina line.

Gov. Moore made his remarks in a speech prepared for delivery at the annual dinner meeting of the Union county Merchants Association. He told the audience the name of Jackson was once considered for the area now called Union County.

"I must admit that I am glad that Jackson's name was saved for another county in North Carolina," Moore stated. "The county that proudly bears the name of Jackson is the one where I lived the greater part of my lise."

The governor cited accomplishments of Union county in the program for total development of North Carolina.

He said these achievements "offer a good example to other communities of our state that want to make progress. Your leadership has fully lived up to its reponsibility."

Moore said the challenge facing him as governor "is to see to it that the best possible tools of progress — schools, roads, and other essential state programs — are made available to our people. The challenge to you, and to all the other communities and counties of our state, is to put these tools to effective use."

The governor added, "I see a bright future for this area, and all of North Carolina, so long as we have active, interested leadership like yours."

Chief Justice Earl Warren Questions Power Of HUAC

WASHINGTON (AP)—Chief Justice Earl Warren questioned today whether members of the House Committee on Un-American Activities can properly "roam the country and pick out what they want to investigate."

"If subcommittees of that group can do it, other congressional subcommittees can," the Chief Justice said as the Supreme Court took a new look at Congress' power to investigate subversion.

J. Walter Yeagley, an assistant Attorney General to whom Warren directed the question, replied that "I don't think it would be proper."

"And this was not done," he added when the subcommittee questioned John T. Gojack, a former Vice President of the united Electrical, Radio, and Machine workers of America.

Gojack declined to answer questions at a 1935 hearing and is appealing a contempt of congress conviction which followed.

The Justice Department lawyer said the purpose of the investigation was an inquiry into alleged communist party infiltration of the labor movement. He said this was clearly explained by the subcommittee chairman, then-Rep. Morgan M. Moulder, D-Mo., when Gojack was summoned to Washington in February 1955.

But Frank J. Donner of New York, an attorney for Gojack contended that the committee broke its own rules by not stating the subject under investigation in a resolution authorizing the subcommittee's hearings.

Under questioning by Justice Abe Fortas, Yeagley agreed the resolution was not specific on this point, but he said the hearings were considered "hangovers" from earlier committee investigations into alleged communist party activities within the Labor Movement.

During these investigations, he said, other members of Gojack's union were called before the committee.

which took three stitches.

Reynolds testified he meant to wake up some Marines who were dozing during a class. He said he threw from a sitting position and was off balance.

Presenting another charge, the prosecution said the sergeant over - exercised a recruit.

Reynolds replied that as soon as he saw the man growing pale he ordered him off the field into his barracks to rest.

The prosecution also alleged that Reynolds threw a recruit's spectacles to the floor and broke them.

The drill instructor testified he was inspecting the glasses, started to place them back on the recruit and they fell to the floor.

Seven officers, ranging from a second lieutenant to a colonel, head the second day of testimony.

Last November, four other drill instructors were tried for mistreating recruits. They were all acquitted.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Big Test For Rabb's Boys

In addition to other things, in the spring the fancy of young men turns to baseball. Today Coach Walter Rabb's Tar Heels begin a nine-day stretch in which they play five games. The results from those games should answer the question of whether Carolina can really win the ACC championship.

"We hope to be contenders," Rabb said yesterday when I asked him about the title. As of now, the Tar Heels certainly are contenders. They're tied for first place with Clemson with a .750 mark in conference play. Baseball men love to talk about the "all-important loss column" in the standings, on the theory that if you haven't played a game, you can still win it, but if you've lost it, it's lost. Carolina is currently the only team in the league with just one loss. Win all the rest of them, and UNC wins the ACC title.

PITCHING HAS IMPROVED

A recent marked improvement in pitching has been chiefly responsible for projecting Carolina into the thick of the fight for the confernce championship. In the last four games, Tar Heel hurlers have given up a total of three runs. A team can win a lot of games by holding the opposition to three-quarters of a run per game.

Rabb credited game experience and improved defense as reasons for the upsurge in Tar Heel pitching. He said the spring trip to Florida was a factor, too. "We were able to devote four or five days to concentrated baseball," Rabb pointed out. "That helps a lot."

The UNC coach said that he plans to go with a three-man pitching rotation of Danny Walker, Beattie Leonard and Buddy Cahoon. These are the three hurlers that have put together the last four pitching gems. Cahoon and Leonard will pitch the weekend games against Maryland and Virginia. Rabb added that sophomore righthander Mike Flannagan is a possibility as a fourth starter. "He's had a little trouble with stiffness in his throwing arm," the coach said. Flannagan has appeared in three games this season, starting two. He has a 1-1 record with a 3.60 ERA, but has had some control problems. He has walked 10 men in 10 innings, a quick way to get into trouble.

HITTERS ARE "TOUGH OUTS"

As for Carolina's hitting, Rabb admitted that a coach is never really satisfied with that department. As he put it. "You can never get enough runs." However, he added that the Tar Heels are battling at the plate and are improving in their ability to hit various kinds of pitches in the strike zone. "They are determined to be a tough out," the coach declared. "That's all important."

While the Tar Heels can't match Clemson in batting average, they aren't exactly hitless wonders. The team batting average, through the Duke game, is a healthy .272. Tar Heel pitchers have held the enemies to a combined .215 mark. As they say in France, "Vive la difference!" Danny Talbott is clouting a nifty .412 to lead the Carolina hitters.

As you might expect, Rabb wouldn't single out any one of Carolina's remaining games as particularly crucial. "All of them will be tough," he said simply. The two toughest, it seems to me, are likely to be the Clemson and South Carolina games, which will be played on the road next weekend. The Tigers reeled off a 13-game unbeaten streak at home to start off the season. They have seven of the top nine hitters in the league. Enough said.

Health could prove to be the deciding factor in UNC's drive for the ACC pennant. If Danny Walker's pulled muscle and Danny Talbott's back respond to treatment rapidly, the Tar Heels will be in the fight all the way. If the injuries keep these stars sidelined, things could get a bit rough.

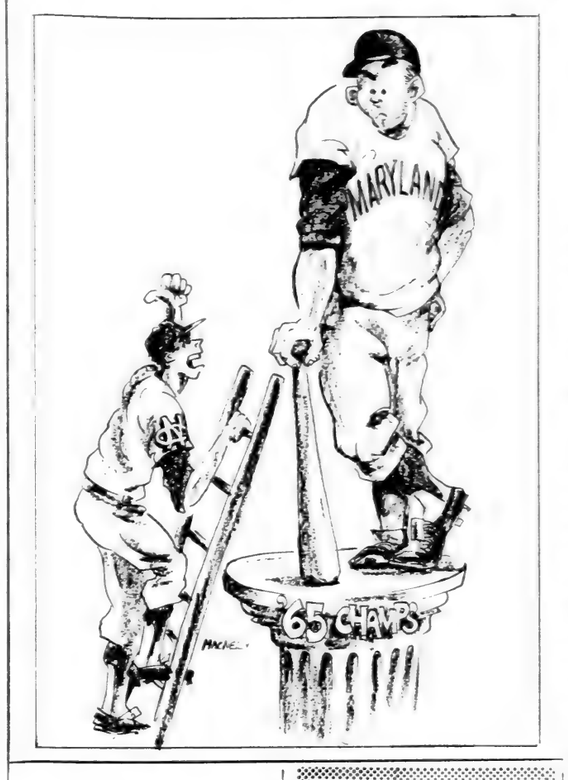
Tar Heels Host Terrapins



Talbott May Be Sidelined; Virginia Here Tomorrow

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

Doctors' reports may be as important as scouting reports when Carolina opens a two - game defense of its first place standing in the ACC against Maryland here today.

Danny Talbott, the Tar Heels leading hitter with a .412 mark (second in the conference), has a bad back. Coach Walter Rabb said yesterday that he wouldn't know until today if the slugging first baseman will be able to play.

If Talbott is forced to the bench, Rabb said he will start sophomore Bill Estes at first base. "We can make two or three moves in the infield if we have to," the coach added.

Talbott is not the only Tar Heel whose physical status is in doubt. Star pitcher Danny Walker pulled a muscle in his last start. The righthander won that game for his second victory in a row, but his next start is in doubt.

Rabb reported that Walker was out for practice Wednesday. "That muscle pull will be a little slow responding," Rabb said.

CHANGED PLANS

The Tar Heel coach said that he had originally intended to pitch Walker against Virginia Saturday. Now however plans have changed. "Walker's arm is fine, but I'm afraid the injury will throw him out of rhythm if he pitches," Rabb explained.

Rabb will go with two lefthanders against the Terrapins and Cavaliers. Beattie Leonard and Buddy Cahoon will pitch the two games, but Rabb hasn't yet made up his mind who will hurl which game.

Leonard pitched a one - hitter against Georgia Tech in his start on April 11, winning 3-0. He has a 2-3 recore with a 3.48 ERA. He has recorded 21 strikeouts and has walked 11 in 31 innings.

Cahoon lost a heartbreaking 1-0 decision to South Carolina last Saturday. His record is 1-1, and his ERA is a fine 2.43. He has pitched 26 innings, fanning 13 and walking seven.

DEFENDING CHAMPS

Maryland, defending conference champions, carries a four - game winning streak into today's 3 p.m. encounter. The Terps are close on the heels of UNC and Clemson, with a 4-2 ACC record. Overall, Maryland is 7-5.

"We know Maryland has a very capable baseball team," Rabb said. "According to Coach Coach Jack Jackson, they have a fine infield."

Danny Kerns, sophomore right fielder, is Maryland's leading hitter. He's only been up 21 times, but has nine hits for .421 mark. Junior first baseman Larry Badis is slugging the ball at a .341 clip.

Connor UFO's Humiliate Joyner

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

The Joyner Jocks reported a strange object on the intramural field Wednesday. It was a softball flying all over the place, courtesy of the Connor UFO's, who stomped the Jocks, 19-0. Cain contributed a home run for Connor and the Jocks aided the cause with four errors and 11 walks.

The Everett Rogah pounded four homers in a 22-2 crushing of the Graham Crackers. Dail, Biddle, Beavers and Hugenschmidt all hit for the distance. Grahm committed nine errors.

The Mangum Mugs slaughtered the Mangum Sluggers, 21-2. Connor, Hardison and Nesbitt powered home runs to lead the attack. The misnamed Sluggers scored two runs on Sutton's home run, one of the only two hits they managed all day.

The Aycock Aardvarks slugged Lewis White, 10-1. Tom Gregory smacked a homer and a double and Belvin Smith added a pair of triples to the Aardvark attack.

An old - fashioned pitcher's duel saw the Carr Wheels edge the BVP Bombers, 4-3. Rucker had a home run for Carr and Kaufman hit one for BVP. A last - inning BVP rally fell short.

Hughes had a pair of hits and scored three runs as the Ruffin Rebels beat their cousins, the Ruffin Roadrunners, 11-3.

Ron Pryor cracked a triple, homer and double as the Graham Bells thumped the Stacy Studs, 10-2. Pryor drove in five runs with his performance. Chuck Gore swatted three singles.

Two home runs by Dillar led the Avery Alcoholics over the Teague Trojans, 11-4. He also added a single in four trips.

The Avery A's struck for nine runs in the last inning for a 14-8 win over the Teague Totalers. Avery used five singles, three walks, a fielder's choice and King's home run in the inning.

Three home runs led the Parker Studs to a 13-7 win over the Parker Pack. Hughes, Long and Altman hit the roundtrippers.

Turner belted two triples and a double to lead the Craige C Killers by the Craige A Zonkers, 11-5.

UNC Director Of Purchases

He Spends $12 Million Yearly

How would you like to spend $12 million a year and not have to worry about bankruptcy: Sound ridiculous?

Maybe for some, but not for Robert L. Hardison.

Hardison, you see, is director of purchases and stores here and it's his responsibility to buy anything from hamburgers to pregnant monkeys to the most advanced scientific equipment in the world.

More specifically, the seven-man purchasing department must buy, upon request, the supplies and equipment used by the various schools on campus.

This function subdivides into four major areas: 1) all scienfitic laboratory equipment, 2) all food for Memorial Hospital, the Carolina Inn and student dining halls, 3) all maintenance supplies and equipment and 4) all supplies and equipment for UNC and Chapel Hill utilities, which include lights, water, heat and telephones.

In addition, the purchasing department handles small, simple construction costing $3,500 or less — such as installation of an air conditioning system in a laboratory or paving a campus parking lot.

In performing these duties last year, the department spent approximately $12 million, eight to ten times as much as it did just 30 years ago. According to Hardison that can be attributed to "federal government grants for colleges all over the country and to higher student enrollments. Money for research in turn creates a need for supplies. Locally, the establishment of the hospital and dental schools in the late '40s and '50s had much to do with it, too."

To finance its large expenditure the purchasing department relies on state appropriations, federal and private grants and donations and self-liquidation projects (dining halls, laundry and Victory Village Apartments).

Hardison, a red - haired, 52-year - old native of Edenton, is no stranger to mass purchasing department's newly created scientific supply division.

Upon graduation from UNC in 1936 (B. S. in chemistry), he became manager of the purchasing department's newly created scientific supply division.

He recalls that "at the time North Carolina was the only university in the country operating a scientific supply division for a purchasing department. We did it to give us better price advantages for the quantity of purchase we jdre doing. Actually, the idea is still relatively new,and several schools have copied us down through the years."

In 1959 Hardison was named director of the entire department of purchases and stores. Though his job encompasses the buying of thousands of products, he has maintained a special interest in scientific supplies.

We spend $4 million yearly for scientific supplies as compared to about $70,000 in 1936," he pointed out.

"I think our biggest problem is securing the supplies themselves. There's such a huge order to fill. It's difficult, for example, to check out supply sources for a half million different organic chemicals and get them here in time for research purposes. More effort and hours are spent obtaining scientific supplies than in any of our other areas."

For routine scientific equipment kept in stock (glassware, distillation apparatuses, etc.) bids are taken on yearly contracts. In contrast to food purchasing, little concern is given to specification requirements, since scientific equipment is regulated by catalogue numbers and since there is not as much variation in quality.

Frequently, however, the need arises for supplies kept out of stock. In that case the purchasing department is still ready and able to fill the order, It recently bought, for instance, an $86,000 electron accelerator for the physics department —for research and study of the atom.

Other unusual scientific items include low temperature equipment to study the electrical conductivity characteristics of metal (room temperatures can be dropped to -400 degrees Fahrenheit with this equipment), $500,000 worth of x-ray machines and another half million for television equipment for the expansion of educational TV.

A number of animals — notably mice, preganant monkeys, dog, baboons, frogs, crayfish , cockroaches, earthworms, cats and piglets — have also been purchased for zoology and medical schools.

Some time ago Hardison placed an urgent order for 15,000 live ladybugs. Upon arrival in Chapel Hill the speckled insects escaped, and for several days the local post office conducted a massive ladybug hunt.

"Not a darn one of the things was found, then or since then," says Hardison.

Among misellaneous non scientific merchandise bought of late are mattresses, beds and furniture for Ehringhaus, Craige and Morrison dormitories, $46,000 worth of equipment for the language laboratory, $48,000 worth of art objects, color TV sets for dormitories, 1,000 different newspaper and magazine subscriptions, a 240-fleet motor division (automobiles for the chancellor, business manager, extension divison, hospital and and school of medicine), sporting equipment for physical education classes and the seats for Carmichael Auditorium and Mitchell Hall, the new geology building.

But the purchasing department's job does not end here. Some $1,250,000 is spent each year for food for the student dining halls, Memorial Hospital and the Carolina Inn. Bids are taken semi - monthly from packaging companies such as Curtis and Armour on all meats, vegetables and fruits. After the bids are opened and tabulated, a contract is awarded to the lowerst bidder.

"This bidding is a very competitive business," Hardison empahsized. "Meats are ordered according to rigid federal and state specifications. A producer's hamburger meat, for instance, must be 85 per cent lean and inspected for purity after it's ground and before it's sent to us."

Harison explained that with cthdi exception of milk, ice cream and other dairy products, all food is contracted for twice a month because "the market fluctuates too much. Nobody would bid on them otherwise."

The purchasing department anticipates how much food UNC will need for a certain amount of time. "To avoid the possibility of food shortages we plan foods far ahead of what the needs will be," Hardison said.

'Mad Show' Marvelous Spoof Of Current Scene

NEW YORK (UPI) — In the darkened theater an off-stage orchestra begins tuning up loudly. Shots ring out and in the ensuing silence a bloodied and bandaged pianist staggers out into the spotlight and sits down before a keyboard to usher in the cacophonous opening song of the Mad Show — the year's biggest off-Broadway sleeper.

In an era when the cultural avant-garde is dominated by pop art, Andy Warhol underground movies and camp Batman television series, it is not surprising that a new musical review would be inspired by the near-Dadaistic satire of Mad Magazine. However, what is surprising is that the result would be a delightful fast - paced entertainment show deftly blending satirical skits, pop theatrics and irreverent songs in a marvelous spoof aimed primarily at the shallower aspects of American family life, advertising and television culture.

The Mad Show, written by Mad Magazine contributors Larry Siegel and Stan Hart with music by Mary Rodgers, opened as a limited - engagement Christmas special at the New Theatre above the discotheque Arthur — pagan shrine of the city's jazzed-up jet set. Public reaction was so favorable — packing the 29-seat theater for every performance — that the production has been extended indefinitely.

The show's electric vitality and comic book setting have made it a hit not only to the adults who are amused by its sophisticated spoofs but also to children who crowd the matinees with parents in tow to giggle and squeal at the zany slapstick antics of the review's five versatile actors.

The actors — Jo Anne Worley, Marcia Rodd, Paul Sand, MacIntyre Dixon and Dick Libertini — stage a frantic frolic between skits, roller skating across stage, delivering quick one - liners, while the music wails and such messages as "take a eunuch to lunch" and "support air pollution" flash on to blank comic book conversation balloons.

The skits, by and large, are as funny and quick, mixing situation comedy with sometime biting social commentary which ranges from the competitiveness of boy - girl relations to folk - rock singers and from television children's shows to Johnsonian foreign policy.

Bizarre Set

All this is acted out before a bizarre set dominated by a large cut out of Alfred E. Neuman — Mad Magazine's own version of the Playboy bunny.

Such songs as "Eccch" (Neuman's characteriscie exclamation), "Misery Is" and "Hate Song" set the musical style, transferring night club circuit "sick humor" into the medium of musical comedy.

The most powerful singing performances are given by Miss Worley, a one-time stand in for Carol Channing in "Hello Dolly" who can belt out a song in the style of the early Ethel Merman while turning out an excellent comedy

Much of the credit for the show, however, rests with director Steven Vinaver who has set the show at a fast tempo reminiscent of the British review "That Was the Week That Was" for which he wrote jazz lyrics during two seasons. Vinaver has done a commendable job of balancing music, acts and spontaneous outburst to keep the show from ever flagging.

CHIEF BEAUMONT rips captured machine gun from mount on top of Davie Hall. — DTH Photo By Ernest Robl.

Chief 'Takes' Gun Singlehandedly

Beaumont Seizes Weapon In Daring Daylight Raid

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH Asst. News Editor

Them commies are agitatin' again here in Chapel Hill, but they suffered a setback yesterday when loyalist forces captured a strategically located gun emplacement.

Loyalist Security Chief Arthur Beaumont and a Daily Tar Heel staff member captured a menacing machine gun located atop the battered remains of Davie Hall in the "restricted sector."

"Obviously a professional job," Beaumont muttered when he saw how the gun — which he described as a $9 toy — had been bolted to a special wooden platform.

The daring daylight raid (in the rain) began when Tar Heel headquarters received a message from an informer that the enemy had fortified the restricted sector.

The communique was quickly flashed to security headquarters where emergency plans were made.

The daring Beaumont armed himself with his trusty umbrella and immediately called for a frontal attack.

Enemy agents had apparently foreseen the possibility of an attack and had the area heavily fortified.

Beaumont courageously walked through an open gate in the barbed wire wall surrounding the sector and charged heedlessly through mud puddles, holding aloft his umbrella.

The plan was almost foiled when it became apparent that the enemy had padlocked the now empty Davie command post But the fearless Beaumont could not be stopped.

Putting aside his lethal umbrella, the plain - clothes undercover man forced a window open and vaulted into the enemy fortress.

He narrowly avoided a wheel-barrow trap fiendishly placed under the window; "Up the stairway!" he shouted.

Heedless of the dust collecting on his suit Beaumont continued to advance up the stairs. At the top of the stairs he quickly spied the trap door leading to the gun.

While the DTH man unlimbered his camera to cover the chief, Beaumont seized a loose pipe to smash the gun mount.

Clutching the dirty weapon, Beaumont and the newsman (still keeping his trigger finger on the camera's shutter button) ran out through the open gate before stunned onlookers realized what had happened.

The trophy of the raid is now displayed at Beaumont's headquarters in the Y Building.

The courageous security chief shrugged off his courageous exploits by voicing a warning that he "couldn't let them get away with it."

Honor System Week Planned

Sunday through next Saturday has been designated Honor System Week.

It will feature meetings in fraternities, sororities and residence colleges and a series of articles in The Daily Tar Heel.

Assistant Attorney General Jim Aplin, in announcing the week, said there were two purposes:

1. To arouse controversial discussion of the Honor System and its proposed reforms.
2. To avert the flood of cases before the Honor Council which usually come during April and May.

Aplin said the residence meetings will feature representatives from both the Men's and Women' Honor Councils.

He said these talks will deal mainly with practices of the Councils. They will involve discussion of rules and their penalties with illustrations from past cases. No names will be used with the sample cases.

The newspaper articles will deal with the philosophy of the Honor System, reforms and major controversies which arise under the present system.

Soviet Literature Specialist Speaks

By ALAN BANO
DTH Staff Writer

One of the nation's foremost experts on Russian literature told a Soviet history class here Wednesday that cultural exchanges between the U. S. and the Soviet Union have promoted much good will and increased mutual understanding.

Dr. Ernest J. Simmons, who went on a mission to Russia in 1947 to secure cultural exchanges between the two countries, asserted, though, that cultural exchange was very difficult during the 15 years that the U. S. failed to recognize the Soviet Union.

Simmons, author of major works on Pushkin, Tolstoy and Chekhov, theorized, "If the Soviet Union had been recognized and given aid, or at least accorded neutrality, from 1917 to 1932, its leaders would have been robbed of their hostility towards the rest of the world."

In outlining the early history of cultural exchange attempts between the two nations, the professor from the Center for Advanced Study at Wesleyan in Connecticut pointed out that the U. S. found Russia prompt in repaying U. S. aid given during the First Five-Year Plan.

Simmons, owner of three degrees from Harvard, also noted that U. S. corporations were instrumental in improving Russian industry during the late Twenties and early Thirties, especially in the production of automobiles and railway equipment. "U. S. companies sold their products there and technicians aided in teaching Russians how to produce them.

"The experience of those years supported the idea of a viable harmony between the countries," Simmons said. "But both nations up to World War Two were woefully ignorant of each other's culture.

"This same situation is duplicated today with the U. S. failture to recognize the Communist regime in China, which has been in power since the late 1940's."

During the war, Simmons explained, it would have appeared that since the countries were allies better cultural understanding would have occurred. The study of Russian literature in U. S. colleges increased greatly, and many translations of Russian works were made.

But, though the U. S. gave the Soviet Union some 10 billion dollars in lend-lease aid," the delay in the opening of the second front tended to sour their friendly attitude towards the United States," Simmons said.

"Hopes were high for increased cultural relations after the war: the State Department invited the Red Army Chorus to visit the U. S. and requested information about exchanging orchestras, art and dancers, to promote mutual understanding.

Seniors Take Farewell Stand Tuesday Night

Four or five extremely disgruntled seniors will launch the traditional class festivities at Parting Shots next Tuesday night.

The Memorial Hall mouthing - off will provide a unique opportunity for frustrated seniors to release their pent-up anxieties in a relatively civilized manner.

Among those expected to address the assembly are Zacki Murphey, George Wainwright, George Butler, and Armistead Maupin. The speakers are expected to give embarrassingly candid reactions to their four years at the University.

Armageddon will begin at 8 p.m. Other activities of the evening will include the election of permanent class officers, and the distribution of tickets for free beer on Wednesday.

Wednesday will be the inevitable Senior Day, during which grown people walk around with no shoes on, cutting classes and keeping ungodly hours (midnight permission for the girls).

All these activities have been sanctioned by the administration. Chester Mayfield and the Casuals will be at the American Legion Hut from 3-6 p.m. Wednesday and the Dynamics from 7:30 — 11:30 p.m.

Want free beer? You have to suffer through the Senior Assembly Tuesday night to get tickets for Wednesday's fun.

Intruder Fires Three Shots At Professor

English Professor Lyman A. Cotten escaped injury when three pistol shots were fired at him Thursday night by an unidentified intruder in his Hooper Lane House.

Cotten, 57, woke up about 11:50 to get some milk from his kitchen. When he returned to his bed he saw under it what he described as "a duffel bag stuffed full."

He reached under the bed and felt the back of a "warm and damp" body.

"When I saw that it was a man, I ran out of the room immediately," Cotten told the DTH yesterday. "The man pulled out the light plug, so the darkness hurt his aim.

"I was at the top of the steps when he fired the first shot, and one of the other two hit the overhead light. I ran out the back door and over to a neighbor's house, whose lights were on and door fortunately open."

The neighbor telephoned the Chapel Hill police, who reported "within 60 seconds . . . in amazing time" according to Cotten.

The house at 520 Hooper Lane was surrounded, Chapel Hill Police Chief William D. Blake told the DTH, and bloodhounds were used. But the man had already left the house.

Cotten said that three dollars were stolen from his wallet and that some money was missing from the wallet several days ago. He said he is also missing a Smith and Wesson pistol from his closet, which his family had had for some years.

Bullets found in the house were identified by police as fired by a Smith and Wesson. One bullet was found in a shoe lying on the floor.

Deferment Test's Deadline Midnight

By BILL ROGERS
Special to the DTH

The deadline is drawing near for all UNC men who want to take the draft deferment test. All applications must be postmarked no later than midnight tonight.

Mrs. Willie S. Lynch, chief clerk of Local Draft Board Nubmer 69 in Hillsborough, urged all male students to take the test and added that it cannot in any way hurt a student's chances for derment. "If a person does poorly on his test, yet is in the upper part of his class, he will have lost nothing by taking the test," she said.

According to Mrs. Lynch, students will be deferred if they make at least 70 on the test, or are in the upper part of their class.

The requirements on class standing vary according to the class. Freshmn must be in the upper half of the male students in the freshman class. Sophomores must be in the upper two thirds of their class, while juniors must be in the top three fourths of theirs. Any studet, regardless of class standing, who makes 70% or above on the test will be deferred.

"Quite a few UNC students have already gotten their applications for the test," Mrs. Lynch said, but she did not know the exact number. She has sent around 1,600 applicaton blanks to Chapel Hill for use by students.

Concerning Oranage County draft call-up, Mrs. Lynch said, "I think that we are going to have to order a few men who were married before August 26, 1965, till fill our May draft call."

Mrs. Lynch said that the deferment test will probably not be given again until next spring and that students can only take the test once. "Once you have taken the test, you can never take it again."

Officials at North Carolina Memorial Hospital said Friday that Luther Hodges, former North Carolina governor and U. S. Secretary of Commerce, is "still doing fine."

Hodges is in N. C. Memorial recuperating from surgery undergone there earlier this week.

WUNC May Be In Color

WUNC-TV, the University's educational station, may well be broadcasting some programs in color in the near future.

George Trills, an engineer for the UNC Radio - Television - Motion Picture department, said programs from the NET (National Educational Televiosn), which furnished WUNC-TV with shows, will probably soon be broadcasting live via a microwave system and in color.

Hugh Fisher, a senior and RTVMP major, said that the station is seriously considering purchasing a new Ampex tape recorder for color broadcasts.

Grills, just back from the of Broadcasters convention in Chicago, told a RTVMP 58 class that color was the "big thing" at the meeting. "Transistorized equipment was very popular, too," he said.

Grills stressed that WUNC-TV, as was the case with most stations, has been hesitant to buy new equipment because what is purchased now quickly becomes obsolete. He said, "It soon becomes tempting to just stand back and watch the changes fly by."

Ellison, Woodward Hit Scapegoat Myth

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Negro novelist Ralph Ellison and historian C. Vann Woodward agreed in their Carolina Symposium speeches Thursday night that a "scapegoat myth" in the South "relieves the American individual of his responsibility for the condition of society."

Ellison, author of The Invisible Man and Shadow and Act, said, "The victim of the myth had to be worthy, to justify any inhuman, negative treatment.

"The scapegoat myth projected, not the reality of that individual but emphasized his accent, hair, color and language, so we no longer had to recognize the humanity of the individual."

Woodward, often considered the "dean of Southern historians," said, "God and the Southern climate were two likely scapegoat candidates; there is not much to love about either.

"Blame could easily be attached to a foreigner who is an acknowledged public enemy."

Woodward began his speech by saying he was "appalled at the subject assigned. I feel like the proverbial mosquito in a nudist colony — I just don't know where to begin!"

Outlining a history of the Southern mythology, Woodward, who earned his doctorate degree here in 1937 along with acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, explained several myths about slavery in the South.

He called "self - contradictory" the "unprofitability myth — that slavery was a losing business" and the "natural limits myth — that slavery by the early 1850's had reached the natural extension of its expansion."

"If expansion were a life and death issue," Woodward said, "then it was inevitable that the slave owners would fight, which they did.

"The fallacy of these myths is that slave expansion was confused with cotton expansion," he added.

The Civil War period proliferated myths, Woodward asserted, and the "slave guilt mythology changed to war guiltmythology. This mythology was to the South like the Trojan War was to Greek mythology."

He said Southerners "unconsciously continue to use the myths in moments of nostalgia and self pity, as defenses against discouragement or despair.

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

It's Interesting

The other day we received a letter whose author gave his address as a second floor room in one of UNC's residence halls.

In the letter, the writer explained that he had long been curious about the function of the quaint little ivy covered building that sits behind Old West and to the side of Hill Hall — Person Hall.

He stated that he had tried to enter the building several times this year, but had always found it locked. When he finally managed to get in one day, the writer charged, he found a disgraceful display of wax figures — supposedly there for their anthropological value — whose purpose was solely sexual stiumulation.

We were ashamed to admit that we had never been inside the building either, but we made a visit that afternoon.

We had no trouble getting inside the building, and we found no obscene figures — or for that matter, no wax figures at all.

Part of Person Hall houses an impressive, though small, museum of anthropological relics found in this state. The rest of the building is employed for anthropological research.

When we returned to the DTH office, we checked the student directory and found no such name as the one signed to the letter. We then called the floor of the residence hall listed as the writer's address and were told that no one by that name lived there.

So may we kill two birds with one stone here:

First — The DTH welcomes letters on almost any subject, as long as they are not false or libelous in any way. If you want a letter printed, sign your correct name and address.

No crank letters, please.

Second — If you have never been inside that quaint little old building — which, by the way, is the second oldest state university building in the nation after Old East — drop in sometime.

It's interesting.

Weekly Awards

The Daily Tar Heel Awards of the Week will continue appearing on each Saturday's editorial page unless prohibited by unforeseen circumstances.

The award for Lizard of the Week will be the only regular presentation. Other awards will be given as situations warrant them.

We invite all readers to submit nominations for the awards by sending a post card to the editor by Thursday of the week of presentation.

To help nominators get started, we remind you of some past awards that are now in the Weekly Awards Hall of Infamy: White Man of the Week, Zeno Ponder Award, Fact of the Week, etc.

And now, after lengthy deliberation and consultation with some of the state's foremost experts in this field, we announce this week's winners:

Lizards of the Week: A certain group of young fraternity men who left a certain DTH editor to walk back to Chapel Hill from Danville, Va.

Son of the Week: Jim Medford, former YMCA president and a plaintiff in the court suit against the chancellor, president and Board of Trustees. Medford, being under 21, had to get his father's authorization to file as a plaintiff. His father is a member of the Board of Trustees.

Movie Fan of the Week: Myra Franklin, 47-year-old widow of Cardiff, Wales, who saw "The Sound of Music" for the 500th time Wednesday. Her ambition is to see it a thousand times.

Most Lenient Manners Guardian of the Week: Otelia Connor who brought a cherry pie into the DTH office Tuesday, but could not find a fork. Finally she issued a special dispensation: "I'll let you use your fingers to eat that pie, but don't start doing it until I leave the room, so I won't have to watch.

Thieves of the Week: Yackety - Yack staff members who reclaimed three of their typewriters from the DTH office, leaving our reporters writing with Bic Pens which were designed to be used as drill bits.

Headline of the Week: Appearing on the front page of Tuesday's DTH over the story explaining UNC's high frequency of selection by students of preparatory institutions: "UNC Ranks High Among Prep Schools."

Relaxed Man of the Week: Silent Sam, who stood guard calmly Thursday afternoon with a beer can resting in the crease of his arm and a cigarette dangling from his mouth.

Scholar of the Week: The mountain boy who was called to take the selective service examination. "I'm studied up on this here book larnin'," he said, "but I don't know the first thing about passin' that blood test."

Silence The Beanbirds

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

About the Beanbirds flying low and chirping joyously over the campus early Thursday morning . . . they not only ousted twenty - six of their own feldglings, but also a good number of sleeping residents of Old West and Smith Dorms. I have never witnessed a more flagrant disregard for the concern of others. For at least twenty minutes this group rioted in the parking lot between Smith and Swain, honking car horns and screaming their absurd bird calls in their early morning tapping ceremony.

When I called the campus cops in South Building I was told quite a few complaints had been registered about the same thing. This comes pretty close to conduct un - becoming whatever it is bird - men are really supposed to be, and I suggest some honor council investigation. Normally I'm a peaceful guy; low flying bombers just don't wake the kid up without catching a lot of flak.

Algren On Shintoism

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Re: Quote by Algren on Shintoism (Banov article 4-21). Shintoism had been the Japanese national religion until 1945. Algren quoted, not a Viet Cong, but General Yamforces in Southeast Asia. Known as the "Tiger of the Malays," he was hanged in Manila after the war, not for any atrocities but for his successful campaigns in Southeast Asia, the control of which he did not lose until the surrender of Japan.

Otelia All Wrong

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It is evident from Mrs. Connor's letter that she was not at the Chase Cafeteria buffet Sunday. As one who was there, I can say that she is completely wrong. I for one saw no pigs or any "milk cartons piles on the table like pyramids." Of course students went back more than once because that is the advantage of a buffet. After all the advertisement in the DTH, and we know the DTH is never wrong, said "All you can eat."

I am sure that Otelia would welcome the return of the Victorian era when it was polite to leave some of everything on your plate to show you were not a glutton (pig to Mrs. Connor). People have changed and I know that it is not a sin to enjoy eating good food. Maybe Mrs. Connor will make the buffet this Sunday and form her own opinions instead of relying on second hand reports, which is what she obviously used for her article.

Capp Was Obnoxious

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Capp turned what should have been an evening's intellectual venture into a program of trivia and not very funny jokes. On a number of occasions he was more obnoxious, degrading one serious question about myth by converting it into a homosexual joke, and passing off another by dereogating the Symposium topic. He also suggested that our campus free speech movementis intended merely to annoy the administration. He got strong applause on each point.

Perhaps I am just unappreciative of "good, social satire." At the very least I wish to express my opinion that the Carolina Symposium is not the place for Capp's brand of humorexual joke, and passing off another by derogating the Symposium topic. Capp Meets Students At Morehead Lounge And Writes Up Several Class Excuses

Cartoonist Al Capp spoke to 1,700 persons in Memorial Hall Wednesday night, but fewer than 12 showed up the next day at his press conference in Morehead Planetarium.

Three reporters from the UNC News Bureau, a small TV crew, a Charlotte Observer stringer and a few Carolina Symposium officials had the famous satirist almost entirely to themselves.

Surprisingly, Capp had not talked himself out, despite Wednesday's long address on on everything—from LBJ to his opinion of legalized gambling "there's (already) the stock market").

As usual, he thrived on his listeners' questions.

What would he do were he to become a protestor? "First thing I'd do would be to burn my draft card."

Then, he said, he'd chant: "LBJ, LBJ —How many kids have you killed today?" thing)?

After that, Capp continued, he would sent his blood to the Viet Cong "so I could prove myself a true American."

What's SWINE (a member of Students Wildly Indignant About Nearly Every-

Capp said a SWINE is somebody "wildly indigant that he isn't running the University" at the age of 18. "When he was younger, he wet his bed; now he pickets."

He told reporters he doesn't draw all his cartoons, but said other cartoonists do not either. Capp outlines Li'l Abner characters in pencil; his assistants handle the really tiresome stuff like fingernails and outhouses."

All this was very interesting — but it was happening when I should have been in my phys. ed. class.

Nevertheless, I'd taken the necessary precautions. I'd prepared what I hoped were adequate excuses."

"Dear Mr. ——," read one of the notes I handed Capp. "Please excuse David from P. E."

The cartoonist signed it: "His Uncle, Al Capp."

But I knew I'd probably be missing the first few minutes of my political science class. So again Capp put his signature at the bottom of a note:

"Dear Mr. -—-:

"Plese excuse David from Political Science 88.

"(Signed) His admirer, Al Capp."

I'd cut my psychology 26 class to meet Capp at the airport — once again he came to my rescue:

"Dear Mrs. —-:

"Please excuse David from psychology.

"(Signed) Al Capp."

Then, America's top cartoonist put his sprawling signature on a final note:

"Dear Mr. Rothman:

"Please excuse David from failing P. E., Psychology 26 and Political Science 88."

So far, I've tried out Capp's notes on only one teacher, and he wasn't very impressed.

Not only had the professor's name been mispelled on the note, but I'd given him only a photostat of the excuse.

You think I'd be silly enough to give away something with Al Capp's signature on it?

Beanbirds Stage Their Usual Show And Get Threats

This is an open letter to the Order of the Beanbirds:

You idiots are really asking for it. For three years here, once a semester like clockwork, hordes of your depraved harpies have appeared under my window in Fraternity Court. and babled bird calls at five in the morning.

For this offense alone, many drunks in our area have suffered severe buffetings about the head and shoulders, and many have had bottles busted over their thick skulls. Why should you be treated any differently?

It wouldn't be so bad, except every time you come around, I have just gotten to bed after working on a paper half the night. My anger is well jusitifed.

I have tried innumerable times in the past to get the Chapel Hill police to arrest you for disturbing the peace. I daresay that if I were to make a big enough stink over this, I might get my rights protected.

Don't you realize that you aren't very funny, and that no one wants you around? Are you so stupid as not to get the message when 15 guys hang out of five houses and curse like a troop of Portugese fish women at you?

It certainly must not be beyond your feeble powers of intelligence to realize that you are not being very civil to your neighbors. Why don't you revise your initiation to keep the bird - calling excursions outside of the Chapel Hill city limits? Better still, why don't you do something productive with your energy, like maybe join the army and go to Viet Nam?

Someone told me a while back that you were the real swingers on this campus. A regular jet set. For this very reason, you may find yourselves treated to a royal welcome if you come back.

You might find that, in the midst of your serenade, your revelry will be abruptly halted by a barrage of crockery and bricks. And manning his arsenal, face framed by a second story window, will be the hollow - eyed countenance of a long suffering associate editor.

Buzz off, beanbirds.

Passport Is Returned To Dr. Staughton Lynd

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (CPS) — The State Department has agreed to issue a new passport to Yale Professor Staughton Lynd so he may fulfill several speaking engagements abroad. The passport will expire in 90 days.

Under the arrangement, Professor Lynd's original passport, the one he used during his trip to Hanoi, North Vietnam, last December, will remain revoked. The revocation came about last month when Lynd refused to give the State Department a flat assurance that he would not visit countries where travel is not permitted by the department.

In addition to North Vietnam, travel is banned to Red China, Albania, North Korea, and Cuba.

Lynd is challenging the State Department's authority to revoke the original passport in United States District Court for the District of Columbia. David Carlines, one of Lynd's lawyers, said that Lynd has promised not to go to any of the unauthorized countries during the 90 days the new passpot will be valid.

Lynd has three engagements abroad.

He was a speaker at a meeting of the Committee on Nuclear Disarmament in London this past weekend and has returned to Yale. Next weekend he will fly to Oslo, Norway, to participate in a teach - in on the war in Vietnam that is being sponsored by the Norwegian Students Asociation.

On May 13 he will speak before the Student Union of the London School for Economics. The Student Union has elected Professor Lynd as its honorary president.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the granting of a temporary passport to Lynd was an "unusual expedient" but was worked out after considerable "negotiating" between Lynd's lawyers and the department.

The granting of temporary passports is in itself not unusual, the department said, as it has sometimes been done when a passport has been mislaid or in the case of a minor who by reason of parentage holds U. S. citizenship until 21 but whose citizenship is uncertain thereafter.

According to the spokesman, this appears to be the first case when a temporary passport was issue- to someone whose passport was under revocation. This, he said, was because it was the first time that such a person had agreed to a temporary nonviolation of passport regulations.

Book Exchange Manager Reveals Biggest Problems

(The following is the bulk of a story written by North Carolina Book Exchange manager Tom Shetley. It is to appear in the June - July issue of The College Store Journal, a national book exchange publication.

The article deals with many of the managers' problems which are brought out by students around the end of each semester.)

Stated simply — our sole reason for being is to make available to Academia any of her required tools that can be dropped into a sack or wrapped in paper.

As the fronteirs of knowledge move outward, a greater variety of books, equipment, and supplies are needed. Last semester's book is superceded; today's implements become obsolete; and tomorrow many of them will have gone the way of the hornbook and the slate pencil.

The world in which we work cannot always stop for us. Often we must anticipate things that will be required and have them available without having been told.

The most fundamental tool of education — the textbook — is the item which requires most of our time and effort. It is the most taken-for-granted thing we touch, and yet, when our public relations become bad or when any other calamity befalls us the chances are the textbook is the villain.

Economically it can make or break us.

If we are to fulfill our obligation to students and faculty — present and future — we cannot allow ourselves to be broken. We must use every ounce of our native wit and all of our acquired technical skill not only to survive but to grow. Our actions must be operating hand in hand with the Golden Rule.

The life blood of a book store operation is often the marketing of used texts. No matter how fair it may be, a used-book policy is subject to becoming misunderstood and resulting in a rain of coals upon the head of the bookstore operator. And if things were always what they seem much of the wrath would be righteous wrath.

Some of the things the customer does not see are the fluctuating requirements for a given text, wholesale prices offered by used - book houses, foot - dragging faculty, and how they all work together to bring about a book purchased at twenty - five and sold for seventy - five.

A bookstore advertises its used book policy to be: Purchase at 50% of list (less the estimated cost of making the book salable) and resale at 75% of list.

A popular text sells for a dollar and last semester a total of three hundred were used by several profs. Next semester only one professor announces that he will use th tst and that his requirement will be one hundred copies. In accordance with policy the store buys back one hundred copies at fifty per cent to be sold at seventy-five per cent. But there stands before the buyer another two hundred students who have books for which we have not use.

The Buyer's Guide tells us the used book house will pay us twenty - five cents each for the books. If time permits (and most often it does not) we explain this to the student and he goes away unhappily pocketing his quarter.

Then who should come in but Dr. Johnnycomelately with his order.

He has decided that he will use the text after all and that he needs one hundred copies. So we end up pricing at seventy - five per cent a hundred books which were purchased at twenty - five and for which we gladly would have paid fifty. (By the way — one can imagine the confusion that would arise if a store had more than one selling price for a single used title. You wouldn't be able to control the rush mob!)

The result is that we have gotten a long mark - up to which we are not entitled and a great amount of ill - will which we neither wanted nor deserved.

Any unexplored avenue or untaken opportunity to help the student stretch his book dollar marks a point at which the bookstore manager has failed to do his duty. At the University of North Carolina the bookstore has for the past several years sent buyers to the used book houses in New

Any unexplored avenue or untaken opportunity to help the student stretch his book dollar marks a point at which the bookstore manager has failed to do his duty. At the University of North Carolina the bookstore has for the past several years sent buyers to the used book houses in New York, Chicago and Columbus.

These efforts have resulted in the acquisition of large quantities of used books that might not have been gotten otherwise. As a result students were saved thousands of dollars without realizing what had gone on behind the scenes. Even this worthwhile program has been shorn of some of its effectiveness by late - ordering faculty who have not come around until all used books had been sold. The youngsters paid more for books without being aware of the fact or of its behind-the-scenes reason.

In the Temple of Education, the bookstore manager had another duty which is not to be taken lightly. It is his duty to himself. Often he is resented and in bad light simply because he has allowed lines of communication to break down. College people are, generally speaking, a wonderful lot. If given facts, they will have little difficulty in understanding. Seeing and understanding the problems of the bookstore, they will be more prone to help than to hinder.

At each of the institutions of the Consolidated University of North Carolina there is a Campus Stores Committee that is advisory to the business manager. This cmmittee consists of three students appointed each year by the president of the student body and three faculty members appointed each year by the chancellor.

The Campus Stores Committee meets at least once each semester with the business manager and the campus stores manager, in order that the stores management may have the benefit of all student and faculty complaints, criticisms, and suggestions. Also management is given an opportunity to air its problems in an atmosphere of friendly discussion.

Where rapport exists between the bookstore manager and those he lives to serve, the "money - changer" image folds his tent and silently steals away.

Granville Provides Luxurious Living

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

Next fall Granville Towers will open its doors to 1,040 students at the University. Truly luxurious living will be available to undergraduates for a relative savings.

Ben B. Blading, general manager, explains, "To live in Granville, a student pays only $110 more per semester than he does for University housing. This $110 pays for three meals a day that are served in the dining hall. It is impossible for a student to eat in town and get by on $110 for food per semester."

Besides many students being wary of the prices, location, affiliation with the University, and the quality of the food itself are questioned.

Granville is located directly behind Big Fraternity Court, which makes it as close to campus as any other dorm— closer than the large complexes as Morehead or Morrison. Ehringhaus.

Blading added, "This fact alone particularly appeals to parents because there is no excuse for a car or motorcycle. The student is right near campus and downtown."

Blading stated that parents are also pleased with the idea of three good, well - balanced meals being included in the original tuition.

Miss Emily O'Neill, housemother for West Granville said, "I talked to a girl who ran out of money and had been eating peanut butter for three days. There's no danger of that here."

When questioned on the quality of the food, Blading replied, "There will be a wide choice, and as far as raving about the quality, let me just say that we would not put all this time, money, and effort into such a great place and then watch it fail because of bad food."

Affiliation with the University has also been completely resolved. Granville will become a University college just as MOREHEAD OR Morrison. Graduate conselors, approved by the office of the dean of men and women, will be living on each floor. University rules on hours and drinking will be enforced and a housemother or master will reside in the buildings.

As a residence college, Granville, like the other colleges, will pay $5 per person per semester social fee that will cover dances, parties and University intramurals.

Phil Baddour, college master of West Granville, stated, "Over here we have the same deal as the University, but with much more luxury. We have the potential to have the best residence college, because with our common dining facilities, we can achieve real residence unity."

When Baddour speaks of common dining facilities, he is referring to a modern, spacious cafeteria, seating 500-600 at a time, which joins East and West Granville.

Blading said, "I would like this clear once and for all: the men will reside in West Granville and the women in East. The two buildings are completely separate, except for the adjoining dining hall. I must get a call a day asking what floors the men will live on and what floors the women, and how we are going to operate the situation."

Baddour's adjective "luxury" is an accurate description of the newest of residence halls. Built by Alan Brothers & O'Hara of Memphis on a million dollar piece of land, Granville provides all the comforts of home — or perhaps even a few more comforts than home.

The suites, four students to a suite, include a private bath with tub shower combination, sinks in both rooms, wall-to wall carpeting, a window in each room, built in desks, a full length mirror, private telephone, maid service once a week, large closets, and air conditioning and heat that are controlled in each suite.

The rooms are 80 per cent sound proof and the desks, which almost divide the room in half, provide ample privacy and quiet for study.

"Because of all this luxury and a real feeling that this is a student's home," Baddour stated, "We expect a lot less discipline problems. Students have respect for such comfort and beauty."

Besides the living quarters, Granville has several other outstanding features. On each hall is a lounge with tables, comfortable chairs and a television set.

In the basement are located eight washers, five dryers, a storage room and mail boxes. There is also a laundry window at which laundry and dry cleaning can be sent out without leaving the building.

Adjoining East and West Granville on the lower level is a large lounge for parties and receptions. Included in this room is a kitchen and complete snack bar with hot and cold foods.

Blading assures that roommate requests are given first priority, that there is integration of classes, and that undergrads and graduates may find a home here.

The opinion of most students who visit Granville was summed up by Baddour when he said, "We can't say every student would and should live here, but it will appeal to a large number."

Double-Talk Has Emerged As Greatest Social Art

By HAL BOYLE
Associated Press

Do people cross the street when they see you coming?

Do they yawn when you start to speak? Do they squirm, fidget or flee in terror when you open your mouth?

These are all signs that you haven't mastered double-talk, the greatest social art of the 20th century.

It is simply a matter of saying exactly what you don't mean, and meaning exactly what you don't say.

For your guidance here are a few typical examples of modern, everyday double-talk followed by their literal translations:

"So sorry, Molly, I brushed my cigarette against your new dress." What I would far rather do is pour a plate of beef stew on it.

"I don't know what we'd do without this little place in the country." Probably live in the city and really enjoy life, I suppose.

"We feel that we have an up and coming community." Next year we're installing lights in the cemetery.

"I tell you what let's do. Let's play charades." Anything to get these bums out of the kitchen. We're running out of liquor.

"Well, if you feel it was against your principles, senator, I can understand why you didn't back my bill." But when you want a vote for that new dam in your state, pal, don't come crawling to me.

"Before I pass out the final exam questions, students, I want to remind you that here we all operate under the honor system." That's why I have stationed three assistants around the room — to see that you don't cheat.

"After all, money isn't every thing." There are also things like stocks and bonds, diamonds, real estate and a good credit rating.

"You look so svelte and slim, Marge. What's your secret?" Even that $49.50 girdle can't hide those six malted milks a day.

"We're sending Debbie to a new school next year. It's supposed to be very exclusive." It only takes students that have flunked out of other schools.

"Oh Jane, I've never tasted such a yummy sauce. You'll just have to let me have the recipe." Then, when I stop at the hospital on the way home, the doctors will at least know what antidote to give me.

"Do I think the difference in our ages will make any real difference? Of course not, you sweet old silly." When a girl marries a guy with one foot in the grave, she's got the battle half won.

"Well, wel, well. And hwere have you been hiding? Whereever it was, go back and hide there some more.

Newspaper Strike Appears Certain To Start Monday

NEW YORK (AP) — Republican Mayor John V. Lindsay failed yesterday in a last-minute effort to win a stay in the merger of three Manhattan dailies, and thus head off a strike against the newspapers.

As a result, at least a partial newspaper blackout Monday appeared inevitble. A publishers' spokesman, Matt Meyer, said the chances of publishing as scheduled Monday amount to "none whatsoever."

Lindsay summoned publishers and union leaders to city hall after key negotiation broke down once again with the AFL-CIO International Typographical Union. Chief issue was above-the-contract severance pay for 400 printers facing loss of their jobs in the merger.

Meyer, president of the new World Journal Tribune, Inc., said Lindsay proposed that peace talks continue, and that there be a delay in the merger of the afternoon Journal-American and the World-Telegram and Sun and the morning Herald Tribune.

"We've made up our minds to publish a new paper or no paper on Monday," Meyer told newsmen in reporting rejection of the mayor's proposal.

Even if there was a quick end to the union-management deadlock, it was explained, Monday publication appeared impossible, because certain mechanical preliminaries are necessary before the new dailies could hit the street.

Final editions of the Hearst Journal - American and the Scripps-Howard World - Telegram are scheduled to go to press tomorrow. They were to be replaced Monday by the new afternoon World Journal.

The Sunday Herald Tribune and the Sunday Journal-American were to be put to bed for the last time this weekend, to be replaced May 1 by the Sunday World Journal Tribune.

The Herald Tribune, retaining its name, was to become on Monday the morning edition of the merged corporation.

Still unresolved was whether others among the major New York dailies would close down in vent of strikes against the merging newspapers. The morning Times and the Daily News have done so in the past, on the premise that a strike against one is a strike against all the papers which belong to the publishers association of New York City. So have two other members of the association, the Long Island Star-Journal and the Long Island Press.

The afternoon New York Post withdrew from the publishers association during the big 1962-63 newspaper blackout, and presumably will continue to publish in any new strike.

The merger is expected to cost some 2,000 jobs from among 5,700 persons employed on the three dailies. One afternoon and one Sunday paper are being eliminated.

Bertram A. Powers' ITU Local 6 demanded that printers who lose their jobs receive more than the three weeks severance pay to which their contract entitles them. Nine other unions also are seeking new contracts and one of them, the AFL-CIO Newspaper Guild of New York, scheduled a strike for 4 p.m. Sunday.

ABC Recommends Uniform Enforcement Of Liquor Law

By REESE HART
Associated Press Writer

Raleigh — The North Carolina Alcoholic Beverage Control Board recommended Friday that all law enforcement officers in the state's legally wet counties abide by a judge's ruling permitting "Brown-bagging" and prviate liquor clubs.

Chairman Clawson Williams Jr. told the board this should be done pending an appeal to the State Supreme Court on the legality of North Carolina's liquor law.

He said that although the board has no authority over the city and county law enforcement officers, "I think it would be in order tokcommend that the officers abide" by a ruling of Superior Court Judge H. L. Riddle, Jr.

This, Williams added, would provide uniformity in the law pending the appeal.

The five - member board voted unanimously to appeal the case and to instruct local ABC boards in the state to adhere to Judge Riddle's injunction enjoining Charlotte and Mecklenburg ABC officers from enforcing an attorney general's ruling that brown-bagging and private liquor clubs were illegal.

Asst. Atty. Gen. James Bullock told the board it woud be sometime in September before the appeal could be heard by the high court and "a decision could possibly be reached in October."

Later, he said, it would be 60 to 90 days before the appeal can be filed with the Supreme Court.

Some state legislators have urged that enforcement of the liquor law be delayed until the 1967 General Assembly can study the issue.

State ABC Director Ray Brady had already issued a directive to state ABC officers to disregard an earlier memorandum calling for enforcement of Bullock's ruling that the home is the only place where liquor may be legally consumed.

In issuing an injunction Tuesday at Charlotte, Judge Riddle said in effect it was legal to consume liquor in public or in bottle clubs in counties which operate ABC stores. Lawyers representing two Charlotte supper clubs requested the injunction.

The State ABC Board met briefly with Brady behind closed doors before going into its special meeting Friday. Board member Fleming Talman of Asheville proposed that the state appeal Judge Riccle's decision.

Lawrence Rose of Wrightsville Beach then offered the motion that local ABC boards be directed to abide by Riddle's injunction.

"I certainly think the ABC law should be uniform," Rose said.

Before approving this motion, the board was advised by Bullock that it had the authority to issue such a directive to local boards.

Great Train Robbery May Soon Be Solved

LONDON (AP) — Scotland Yard's hopes of wrapping up the Great Train Robberty case rose tonight as a captured member of the gang said he was ready to talk. Police also picked up a clue to another gangster still on the run.

James Edward White, drumming his fingers nervously on the rail of the dock, listened as a detective told a court in Linslade the former commando had confessed to him:

"I am only too pleased to tell you all about it. I was on that job. I was in that (train) coach when the money was nicked (stolen) and at Leatherslade farm afterwards."

The gang is reported to have divided up the $7.2 million loot —in shares of about 14,000 pounds ($392,000) each — at the remote farm and then split up. Only $758,000 of the loot has been recovered.

Police surrounded the old courthouse in Linslade, only three miles from the scene of the 1963 robbery, while White was brought in for a five-minute hearing. Then he was wished off to prison at nearby Bedford, about 35 miles north of London.

He was caught yesterday in a Kentish sea resort where for about a year, he had been living a quiet family life with his wife, Sheree, and their 4-year-old son. Neighbors called him "a nice bloke."

"White's attorney told the court that he "intended to surrender himself this weekend" anyway — tired of being on the run.

The assertion of Scotland Yard's chief detective, Supt. Thomas Butler, that White was willing to talk was a break investigators have been hoping for.

Ten members of the gang in prison — five serving 30 years each — have rufused to talk.

Four still are at large — including two believed to have master - minded the robbery and two others who were caught and convicted but escaped from prison.

A clue to Ronald "Buster" Edwards, 33, suspected as a ringleader, developed soon after White was tracked down. A man resembling Edwards bought a farmhouse shortly after the train robbery for 7,000 pounds ($19,600) but stayed only a few weeks. The man told a neighbor he was going to South America, and another that he was headed for Panama.

White really gave Scotland Yard the tip that led to his capture after eluding an international police search for nearly three years.

He came out of hiding last weekend and tried to sell his story to two newsmen at a rendezvous in London, only a short distance away from the headquarters of Scotland Yard. He had shaved off his mustache. The Yard put out new pictures of him without the mustache. A tip from a woman followed.

Appearing in court, White tried to shield his face with a hat. He seemed restless. White said nothing during the hearing.

Detectives went to Dover Harbor and towed away the 30-foot yacht Karelia, believed owned by White under his alias of Bob Lane. It is understood the yacht is being examined.

The robbery was pulled off with military precision. The robbers stopped the train with a fake red signal near the hamlet of Cheddington, one of the line's loneliest stretches 40 miles north of London.

The gang seized the train's crew, uncoupled the locomotive and the mail car behind it, and forced the engineer to take the engine a half mile down the track where a truck waited. The gang looted the mail car of 124 sacks full of old money being shipped to London to be withdrawn from circulation. The robbery took only 15 minutes.

Daylight Time Starts Sunday In Many States

By The Associated Press

A big majority of the American people have to remember to set their clocks ahead an hour Sunday morning.

But despite a new federal law aimed at nudging recalcitrant states toward time conformity, nearly a score of states will ignore this annual spring ceremony.

And in many others, daylight time will go into effect in only parts of a state — in some cases only a single town or county.

The new law provides that this year a state can do as it pleases with one exception. If any state or smaller governmental unit elects to use daylight time at all, it must observe the same dates as in the federal law — April 24 to Oct. 30.

In a number of states this means six months of daylight time instead of the three, four or five they previously observed.

This year antidaylight time states can observe standard time with or without state legislative action.

But next year, any state which wishes to stay on standard time must pass a state law specifically prohibiting daylight time.

Starting daylight time statewide at 2 a.m. Sunday will be all of the populous Northeast — New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennslyvania — and the whole Pacific Coast — California, Oregon and Washington.

Others observing statewide "fast" time will be Colorado, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Nevada, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

States which will be almost entirely on daylight time include Minnesota, Maryland and Virginia.

Ohio, Missouri, Michigan, Kentucky and Indiana will be about half and half.

Huntsville, Ala., Los Alamos County, N. M., Butte, Mont., and the Northern Idaho Panhandle will stand alone as islands of daylight time in standard time states.

Sponsors of the federal law expect compliance from the states both this year and next and most states which previously had offbeat dates for starting and ending daylight time already have moved to conform or are in the process of doing so.

The law carries no criminal penalties, but the Interstate Commerce Commission can bring injunctive proceedings against any state which defies the procedures set down in the law.

The District of Columbia will be on daylight time, but Texas — where the bill was signed by President Johnson — will stay standard.

In some states the period has been from Memorial Day to Labor Day, adding to the confusion in a nation with four time zones and plenty of rugged individualism.

Next year, as this year, the law is not mandatory. But before the summer of 1967 rolls around, any state that wants to stay on "God's time" will need a state legislative law specifically forbidding Daylight Saving Time.

The feeling in rural areas runs strong against the time device which gives the city golfer an extra hour at the 19th hole or the suburban gardener an extra hour with his roses.

Are Political Science And Sex The Same?

CHICAGO (AP) — A question of whether instruction in sex and political science should be placed on the same scholastic level attracted some attention in Illinois today.

The question was raised by James B. Hirsh, 16, a junior at Niles Township East High School. He complained that the school board for his suburban district had decided to drop political science as a required course and to offer it as an elective subject along with such others as one in sex education.

"Political science," he continued, "is too important to give the average teeenager a choice of whether he should take it."

If given the option, he added, most of the kids would go for the sex course.

Hirsh, in letters to Ray Page, Illinois superintendent of public instruction, and some legislators, also raised a question of whether Illinois statutes permit elimination of political science as a required course.

Robert F. Vespa, a legal adviser to the state school superintendent, looked for an answer in the law books down in Springfield. He found:

"American patriotism and the principles of representative government as enunciated in the American declaration of independence, the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the state of Illinois, and proper use and display of the flag shall be taught in all public schools.

He was asked if that made political science mandatory.

"It might," he replied.

"But," he added, "if its included in other courses, that would be sufficient."

State Rep. Paul Elward, D-Chicago, said he will propose that the Illinois legislature tighten up on the requirement that all students be given instruction in the voting system.

And back in Niles Township, Dr. John Harris, assistant superintendent in charge of curriculum, commented:

"We don't have a course in sex education. We have a course in family living. There's some discussion of sex education in that."

How does he feel about separate but equal treatment of instruction in sex and political science?

"Schools do teach government and should teach government," he replied. "The schools do have a role in sex education, and share this role with families and other institutions."

Patient Still Unconscious After Heart Operation

HOUSTON (AP) — Physicians attending Marcel DeRudder, 65, said last night the former coal miner possible suffered temporary brain damage during the six-hour operation in which he received a partial artificial heart.

"This condition has ben encounted previously in open heart cases," a Methodist Hospital bulletin said.

DeRudder has not recovered consciousness since the operation but the latest advisory said his lack of response is not due to the plastic heart pump that still is working satisfactorily.

Dr. Michael DeBakey feels his unconsciousness is possibly due to temporary brain damage," the bulletin said. DeRudder has been receiving the type treatment usually employed in these cases. It is hoped that any possible brain damage and edema will be temporary."

The artificial pump now is assuming about 75 per cent of the work load normally handled by DeRudder's left ventricle, the chamber that does most of the heart's pumping. The advisory also said studies indicate the artificial pump has caused no destruction of blood.

An earlier advisory had quoted DeBakey as blaming the prolonged unconsciousness — now in its second day.

Viet Cong Struggle To Escape US Trap

SAIGON (AP) — Survivors of the Viet Cong's hard-core 1st regiment struggled tonight to flee U. S. Marines and Vietnamese troops who have killed perhaps a fourth of the regiment and are trying to trap the rest.

A U. S. Spokesman said four or more allied battalions, backed by artillery batteries and air squadrons, blocked Red escape routes from the battle zone in foothills of the central coast 10 miles northwest of Quang Ngai.

He reported a count of 257 enemy dead from Operation Hot Springs, launched with a surprise attack Thursday after a Viet Cong defector pointed out the enemy camp, believed to have contained some elements of North Viet Nam's 21st regular regiment as well as the Viet Cong. The spokesman said allied losses remained light.

Amid this stiffest ground fighting of the politically troubled spring, word from Washington was that plans are being developed for U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge to eeturn home next month for consultation with President Johnson and other high officials on Vietnamese war problems.

Suggestions by Sen. Mike Mansfield for a confrontation at a peace table of the United States, Red China, North Viet Nam and South Vietnamese elements drew further scoffing comment from the Communists. Hanoi brushed off as "a new peace trick" the proposal that the Senate majority leader from Montana made in the Senate Monday. Peking had previously called it a hoax.

U. S. jet pilots were striving again to block railway traffic between Red China and Hanoi Saigon briefing officers told of raids Thursday on the Red River Valley line, reporting its Lang Bun and Thu Tho bridges were destroyed.

The Soviet news agency Tass, in a Hanoi dispatch unconfirmed here, said further strikes were made Friday along the 80-miesl stretch between Hanoi and Lang Son, a border station on the main line from Peking. It said three of the raider were shot down.

Implying that at least one of the attacks was close to the North Vietnamese capital, Tass said "The roar of a cannonade and bombs shook the skies over the city." U. S. Air Force planes made their closest announced approach in blasting two surface to air missle (SAM) sites, 15 and 17 miles from Hanoi, last Sunday.

American authorities announced the loss of a Navy A6 Intruder from the carrier Kitty Hawk in a raid Thursday. It was the 215th plane reported lost in the North since the opening of the aerial campaign Feb. 7, 1965.

Accompanying pilots said the twin-jet attack bomber burst into a bright flash after it was hit. It was not disclosed whether the hit was by conventional antiaircraft fire or by a missile. Briefing officers are under instructions now to withhold such information. The Intruder's pilot and his radar observed are listed as missing.

The targets of the Navy raids, staged from the Kitty Hawk and the Ticonderoga, included the Hai Yen naval base, eight miles northeast of Vihn. They also pounded an army supply area at Vinh and a storage zone between that city and Dong Hoi, 40 miles north of the border.

Five miles south of the border, U. S. B52 jet bombers blasted a suspected Communist concentration point. Thi sappeared to be part of a continuing campaign to disrupt the reported buildup of Red forces in South Viet Nam's northernmost provinces.

Vietnamese marines followed up without luck a dive-bombing attack by U. S. planes on suspected guerrilla positions in swampland and rice fields only four miles outside Saigon. Bomb explosions rattled doors, windows and tableware in the capital. But the guerrillas, if they were in fact in the area, eluded the marines.

A rain of steel from the air helped to nail down the Viet Cong in the Quang Ngai sector Battle. U. S. Marines met a blaze of automatic weapons fire at the villages of Binh Bac and Chau Nhai, but took both and pushed on eastward to help close the net.

As outlined by briefing officers here:

Artillery opened up on the Communists at 4 a.m. Thursday.

U. S. Planes joined in the bombardment at dawn.

Then the American Marines and the Vietnamese — marines and paratroopers — went in, many by helicopter. They landed almost on top of the Communists. Additional American Marines moved in late in the day as a block force.

The alies have collected more than 100 enemy weapons, including 14 of crew-manned types such as recoilless rifles and heavy machine guns.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Phillies Want That Pennant...

The Philadelphia Phillies have served notice that this is the year they intend to win the National League pennant. Sacrificing the future for the present, the Phils traded John Hernstein, 28, Adolfo Philips, 23, and Ferguson Jenkins, 22, to the Chicago Cubs for Larry Jackson, 35, and Bob Buhl, 37. By careful addition, you can see that the total ages of the two players acquired is exactly one year less than the total age of the three that they let go. Youth is apparently not going to be served in Philadelphia.

What Gene Mauch's team got from the trade was two experienced pitchers, a valuable commodity in the heat of a September pennant race. Mauch has not forgotten 1964, when the Phils tried and failed to protect a six-game lead in the final two weeks with basically two pitchers. In Jackson and Buhl, the Phils pick up pitchers who won, at their peaks, 24 and 18 games respectively.

Neither is likely to win that many again, but they can win a lot less and still help raise the National League flag in the City of Brotherly Love. They join Jim Bunning, Chris Short and Ray Culp to give the Phillies a solid staff of starting pitchers. The trade may come back to haunt Mauch in future years, especially if Herrnstein ever becomes the solid hitter he has shown signs of being; but if the Phils win this year, it will be worth it.

The National League has started off like its going to be another one of those years. Pittsburgh and San Francisco are playing like they don't plan to lose very many, but nobody is going to play .800 ball forever. When they come back to the league, they'll find the Phillies, Braves, Dodgers and, eventually, the Reds waiting for them. No team has the combination of deep pitching and strong hitting necessary to dominate the league. (Of the Giants' first seven wins, Juan Marichal recorded three, a pace he likely cannot mantain.)

One interesting note: Through Thursday's games, the Dodgers were 6-3. Two of those losses were to Houston in games started by Sandy Koufax and Don Drysdale. The $1 million holdouts are acting like the "before" half of an advertisement for spring training. Had the Dodgers won those two games—and Koufax virtually owns the Astros — they would have gone into Friday's game tied with the Pirates. Come September, and Walt Alston may need those two victories.

I'm still sticking with the Braves to win the pennant. After a slow start, they're starting to play ball. Just wait till Hank Aaron starts hitting!

And So Do The Pirates

Speaking of the Pittsburgh Pirates, Buc owner John Galbreath has already won a National League pennant with the Pirates in 1960 and a Kentucky Derby with Chateaugay in 1963. This year he'd like to win them both again. In addition to having the Pirates on top of the league, Galbreath has the strongest future-book favorite for the Derby in years.

Graustark, an undefeated colt which races for Galbreath's Darby Dan Farm, is currently even money to win the big race. The winner of seven straight, Graustark gets his first distance test in Thursday's Blue Grass Stakes at Keeneland. If he wins that race, he stands to go to the post at Churchill Downs as the shortest-priced favorite in Derby history.

Remember that line to get tickets to the Duke basketball game? A suggestion has been made for a way for some students to avoid such long waits in the future. For a fee of about one dollar a game, a student could purchase a season ticket, guaranteeing him a seat at each game. The tickets would be sold before the season starts for all games in the first semester. A second ticket would be sold after semester break to cover games for the second semester.

Students buying these tickets would not have to stand in line before each game to get a ticket. He would have a guaranteed seat, but he would be paying for the privilege. If you have any feelings about this plan, one way or the other, drop a line either to me at the DTH office or to Business Manager Vernon B. Crook in the Athletic Department in Carmichael Auditorium.

Carolina Slugs Terps, 8-3

McRae Sharp In Relief; McLaughlin Knocks Homer

Carolina rode the pitching of George McRae and the hitting of Mike McLaughlin into undisputed possession of first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference yesterday with an 8-3 victory over the Maryland Terrapins.

The victory gave the Tar Heels a 4-1 record in the conference and a 10-8 slate overall. UNC plays Virginia here today at 2:30 p.m.

McRae went into the game in the second inning relief of starter Bud Cohoon and pitched eight innings of shutout ball, allowing only two hits. He recorded his second victory against no losses. He lowered his earned run average to a brilliant 1.6.

McLaughlin broke out of a hitting slump, getting three hits and four RBI, including the big blow of the game, a three-run homer in the second. McLaughlin's blast, which cleared the fence about 350 feet away in left-center, put the Tar Heels in the lead. Maryland never caught up. The homer was the key hit in a four-run rally which overcame a 3-0 Terp lead.

Charlie Thomas and Danny Talbott were other big stickmen for Carolina. Thomas collected a double and two singles, scoring two runs and driving in one. Talbott, whose playing status had been doubtful because of a bad back, lashed a triple and a single, knocking in one run.

Talbott, the second-leading hitter in the ACC, lost one point off his average, but is still hitting a healthy .411.

Left fielder Bob Hume also collected two hits for the Tar Heels, a pair of singles.

Larry Davis led Maryland hitters with a single and a double. The Terrapin first baseman showed Tar Heel fans that his .341 batting average was for real. Dan Kerns, Maryland's .429 hitter, did not play.

The Terrapins started the game off as if they intended to extend their winning streak to five games at the expense of Carolina. They rocked Cahoon for three runs and four hits in the first inning. It was clear that the Carolina lefty didn't have his stuff, and Coach Walter Rabb brought in McRae to start the second.

Maryland shortstop Jerry Kremer hit Cahoon's first pitch for a triple to left-center. Mike Long singled Kremer home. Paul Breslow walked, and Davis singled to score Long and send Breslow to third. Tom Bichy drove a fly ball to left to score Breslow and complete the scoring for the inning. As it turned out, that was all the Terrapin scoring for the afternoon.

Carolina got all the runs necessary in the bottom of the second. After Charlie Carr and Rodney Thompson grounded out, Thomas drilled a double to left-center.

McRae reached first on Kremer's error, Thomas coming in to score. It proved to be a costly miscue, and the Tar Heel took advantage of it to score four unearned runs. Hume singled to center, moving McRae to second.

McLaughlin then came up and, in Hollywood fashion, hit a two-out, three-two pitch over the left-field fence for his second homer of the year and three Tar Heel runs. Talbott singled, but Bob Bonczek flied out to end the inning.

The closest Maryland could come to a score after that was the third inning. Davis led off with a double and went to third on a wild pitch, but McRae stranded him there.

Carolina, however, was far from through. The Tar Heels picked up one more run in the fourth, and again it was unearned. With one out, Hume reached first on an error by Terp pitcher George Manz. McLaughlin forced Hume at second. With the hit and run on, Talbott then hit a shot inside the first-base line for a triple to score McLaughlin.

The Tar Heels finished off the scoring with three runs in the fifth — the only earned runs UNC got. Catcher John Shaw led off the inning with a double to left. Carr took a third strike, but Thompson blasted a triple over Breslow's head in right. Thomas hit a single to right to score Thompson. McRae fanned, but Hume and McLaughlin hit back-to-back singles to bring Thomas home.

The game was delayed a half hour because of the rain and resultant wet field. The wet infield grass continued to slow up ground balls all during the game. Some of the runners appeared to be sliding a bit on the slick mud, but no one fell.

McRae was really sharp and once Carolina got the lead, there never seemed to be any danger of losing it. The hitting was there, too, for the Tar Carolina clubbd 13 hits off the three Maryland hurlers, including five extra base blows. Mark Harris, Terp starter, took the loss. He is now 3-2. His 120 ERA was not hurt, since all the four runs he gave up were unearned.

Lacrosse Squad Takes On Virginia

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sportswriter

Carolina's lacrosse team fresh from a 6-5 win over Washington and Lee, begins its quest for the ACC lacrosse crown on Navy Field at 2:30 today against the Cavaliers of Virginia.

Last year the stickmen lost to Virginia 12-9 at Charlottesville. However, graduation took its toll on Virginia, and for the first time in many years, the Cavaliers are faced with an unseasoned squad which has yet to win a game.

However, if one goes by comparative scores, the game appears evenly matched since both Carolina and Virginia lost to Yale by three goals.

Coach Cony Steele will start the same team that successfully defeated Washington and Lee.

In the goal will be Captain Harvey Stanley, who is considered one of the finest goalies in the nation. He will be given protection by the defensive trio of Jim Bischoff, John Ward, and Karl Inderfurth.

The offensive punch will be provided by midfielders Dan Howe, Bob Morrison and Pete Williams. Against Washington and Lee Williams led the scoring with three goals and is presently the high scorer on the squad.

At attack will be Tim Balch, who had two goals in Carolina's first win, Sandy Reider, and Jake Hubbard, who has replaced the injured Jeff Parker.

Others who will most likely see action are mid-fielders Loring Swasey and Clee Edgar and attackman Dick Frank.

Carolina is physically sound and mentally ready to play good lacrosse. Many of the players are seniors who really want to beat Virginia, something a Carolina lacrosse team never has done. This year may be the one since both teams are evenly matched, and the Tar Heels have the advantage of the home field.

Dallas Round Washed Out

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — The second round of the $85,000 Dallas Open Golf Tournament was cancelled yesterday because of rain and lightning.

Seventy-two players had completed the 18-hole round with Gene Littler and Dow Finsterwald in the lead with 138s for 36 holes. Little had shot a five-under par 66 and Finsterwald a 68.

All second round scores were wiped out and there will be a fresh start Saturday with Doug Sanders in the lead by two strokes as a result of his 67 in the opening round Thursday.

Sanders had played only five holes Friday when the cancellation came, and was one over par.

Play first was suspended at 3 p.m. CST. After a 35-minute wait, and with the course ruled unlayable because of water on the greens, the cancellation came from Jack Tuthill, PGA tournament supervisor.

Parker, McMahon Capture Faculty Golf Tournament

By GENE WHISNANT

Ace Parker was the scratch winner and Richard McMahon was the handicap winner in the second annual Sigma Phi Epsilon Faculty Golf Tournament held Wednesday and Thursday at Finley Golf Course.

Clarence "Ace" Parker, who has just recently joined the Carolina football staff, shot a three under par 69. Parker had a par 36 on the front nine and a 33 on the back with birdies on 13, 14, and 18.

McMahon of the Institute of Government took the handicap crown with a net of 70. The handicap was figured on the Calloway system.

Last year's scratch winner Harold Langenderfer, Business Administration professor, was a distance second to Parker with 82. Langenderfer had a 39 on the back nine but 43 on the front.

In third place was Joe Mark, another football coach, who shot 83 playing with Parker. Mark finished high in last year's tournament.

The remaining top ten finishers for gross honors were Bob Thalman, 84; Jerry Ball, 84; Montgomery, 85; Don Tarbert, 89; Marvin Allen, 91; Jim Wadsworth, 92; and Bob Kepner, 92.

Close behind McMahon for handicap honors was Payne with a 71.

Jim Hickey, who was last year's handicap winner, and Larry Brown were not able to finish their rounds because they had previous engagements. Brown was one under par when he was forced to halt his play.

Carl Blythe, Dick Jamerson, William Aycock, and Jones finished with handicap scores of 72, while William Long, Kelly Taylor, and Langenderfer had 73's.

Tied with 74's for tenth place for the handicap crown were S. Wurfel, Montgomery, Joe Mark, Trantham, and Sgt. Long.

There were forty - one faculty members competing in this year's tournament.

Parker and McMahon will be presented individual trophies at a supper at Sigma Phi Epsilon. Their names will be ard Hickey's on the big trophy on the Finley clubhouse mantle.

Chris Seawell, the tournament director, said, "I think that this year's tournament was even better than last year. We had more golfers and some members of departments that were not represented last year."

"Almost all of last year's participants were in this year's tournament and they helped us get more faculty members by telling others how much they enjoyed the tournament. By this method the tournament should be even larger next year."

Members of Sigma Phi Epsilon caddied for the faculty golfers.

Buddy Sumner, who caddied for Parker, said, "I enjoyed caddying for Mr. Parker and he certainly shot a great round of golf."

Mrs. Syms Rallies To Win North, South Amateur Golf

PINEHURST, N. C. (AP) — Mrs. Nancy Roth Syms won four of the last six holes, three with birdies, for an uphill 1 up victory over Phyllis (Tish) Preuss in the 18-hole finals of the North and South Amateur Golf Tournament Friday.

"It was like climbing a mountain," the blonde from Hollywood, Fla., said afier the match in which she never led her Pompano Beach, Fla., rival until she knocked in a 14-foot putt for a birdie two on the 17th hole.

Miss Preuss, who lost to Mrs. Syms in the 1963 finals, then came back to win the tournament the following year, had taken the lead on the fourth hole. She held it until Mrs. Syms squared the match on the 14th hole with a three foot birdie putt after her opponent had followed four bad shots with a 15 foot putt to salvage a par.

On the short 15th, Nancy fell behind again as her tee shot landed in the left rough and she overshot the green, losing to a par three.

She got even again with a birdie four from 12 feet on the 16th and on the short 17th, knocked in the birdie putt that put her ahead for the first time.

They matched par fours on the 18th hole, each chipping up about two feet from the pin, after approaches that were short of the green.

The 27-year-old teammates on the 1934 Curtis Cup team shot some of the finest golf of the week as Mrs. Syms was extended to the 18th hole for the first time in five matches. Miss Preuss went the distance four times.

Nancy shot 37-36-73, one under women's par for the 6,000-yard No. 2 course of the Pinehurst Country Club against 36-38-74 for Tish.

shifted to outside forces — Freedom Riders replace Abolitionists — and it is thought that the Negro prefers segregation like his father preferred slavery."

Woodward said what Ellison also expressed, that the myths "are used to exclude used to exclude the Negro from the common Southern history and converted into a tribal myth, the exclusive possession of one race.

"Negro Southerners can never eobrace the Southern identity as long as it's a tribal myth based on their own degradation."

Ellison called the "Southern mythology part of the national mythology. It helped the North and South justify certain undemocratic practices.

"If a Northerner looked at the South and saw injustice, he can say 'We had nothing to do with it.' If a Negro complained that white friends did not understand, he can say 'It isn't our problem. It's the Southerners' fault.'

"The Southern myth justified for the nation the lack of equality in the North and difficulties of the Negro to share the benefits of this great nation."

The Oklahoma - born writer went on to note the irony "that the nation which fought to death over disagreements should work so closely together after peace — not so much on collaboration in raising the nation, but in living upon each other with each section exploiting one another."

by the North was not as important, Ellison asserted, as "the more important exploitation by the North and nation of Southern mythology to justify what had happened, to project certain images of itself."

Negro myths are "often just as dehumanizing as the anti-Negro myth," he said. "They would deny human relationships which exist on certain levels."

Reiterating one of Woodward's points, Ellison noted, "Negroes have learned not to lose the hope that the shared experiences of both peoples will be a source of national strength.

— Simmons —

"But the Soviets failed to accept these overtures," Simmons asserted. Stalin's old suspicions about the U. S. were reincarnated, encouraged by the Truman Doctrine of containment, he added.

Simmons then described his 1947 mission to Russia to establish better cultural relations, which was stymied by the Russian mission's temporary refusal to grant him a visa to the Soviet Union.

The mission, sponsored by the State Department and the Rockefeller Foundation, was to suggest exchange of students and professors and to trade bibliographical data, Simmon explained.

He said his one-man mission, in which he first visited several Eastern European countries, was disguised as a study of Slavic languages. "But I could immediately sense its failure," the professor added, "when I was met at the airport by several chunky girls in a beat-up jeep who didn't even know where I was to stay."

Simmons was then given the run-around by Soviet officials until he finally gained an audience with one who completely rejected Simmons' overture. Shortly thereafter he was described in Pravda as an American spy, Simmons related.

The Truman Doctrine, which was announced in April just before my May visit, destroyed much of the good will prevalent up to that time. But the sequel to the story is that 10 years later, in 1957, a group of distinguished U. S. and USSR diplomats planned the first cultural exchange between the countries."

Simmons said the moral of the interchange between the countries is that "despite the difficulties of negotiations, it is wise to continue them, because sooner or later some effect is bound to occur.

"And now neither country would want to change its participation in the exchange program," in which professors, students, artists, and musicians are exchanged.

University Librarian Has Big Job: Keeps Library 24th In Country

A box of 15 books found its way to the circulation desk of Wilson Library. Problem — the books were taken from the library twenty years ago and returned with only an anonymous note.

Most probably, new books have been bought to replace the old ones, and there's no possible way to get the hundreds of dollars owed in fines.

All these problems and activities go on every day behind the shelves and frosted glass doors of Wilson. It takes more than a couple of stamp pads and a few catalogues to run a library of over a million volumes.

Dr. Jerrold Orne, University Librarian, stated, "My tasks include everything from publishing books to giving speeches. My main job is to gain for the University Library a good reputation for its methods of work and services. I also have a financial responsibility."

When asked about obtaining funds for the library, Orne replied, "I just have to find and make friends wherever I can."

To move the University Library to twenty - fourth on a list of 38 libraries with more than a million volumes, Orne finds himself organizing the "Friends of the Library" meetings once a year or traveling to Viet Nam to help develop their library services and resources.

Orne is backed by a staff of 120 full - time members and 130 student assistants whose salary totals up to $724,000 a year.

John H. Gribben, Associate University Librarian, is the man who keeps everything humming while Orne brings back the laurels and the coins.

Besides the more obvious and awe - inspiring tasks of shelving 2,000 books a day and preparing nearly 100,000 new books for use in 1964-65, the library has dozens of small tasks behind the scenes.

The photolab, run by students and staff members and, as Orne says, "a very pretty receptionist," turns out 800,000 reproductions for the library and individuals.

A teletype, located in the basement of the library relays messages from the Research Triangle Libraries to other libraries across the country who wish to borrow material.

To follow this project up, the library operates a truck which picks up mail and carries books to State and Duke every other day.

Orne stated, "Two - thirds of our staff is used to purchase, catalog and prepare books for use. The Bindery collates the books and other materials. Collating entails checking the pages of each publication before it can be bound."

When asked who decides what books will be purchased, Gribben erplied, "We depend mainly on faculty recommendations. The professors are scholars in their field and in turn they are well - qualified to recommend books in their subject."

The library also provides sightly paintings and showcases. The showcases are the responsibility of the library department nearest it, yet student groups are given their use.

Mrs. May Hill, curator of art at Ackland, has been dubbed a library staff member and selects student art to be displayed on the first floor.

All these workings go on everyday, all year long while most of us students just browse in, check out our books, and flop down in a chair. The University Library is a full-time job, but as Dr. Orne says, "It's all these services that keep us one of the tops in the Southeast."

Law Panel Says Southern Justice Making Progress

A four-man panel on Southern justice reached a consensus Thursday at the Carolina Law School that changes and progress are being made but that more federal intervention is necessary and inevitable.

Kenneth L. Penegar, law professor, was moderator of the panel which was the third in a series of programs this year at the law school to educate law students on problems they will face as leaders of tomorrow.

In his opening remakrs, Penegar asked the students and the panel, "What is justice and what is Southern about it?" He added that it is injustice if citizens are arbitrarily excluded from enjoying rights because of artificial barriers such as race and color.

The first panelist to speak was Dr. C. Vann Woodward, history professor at Yale University. He recalled that Justice Hugo Black once said his two greatest concerns were racial justice and the jury system. Woodward said he wondered if the two were in fact reconcilable.

The UNC alumnus said he felt there was a need for federal legislation to correct the problems of the jury system. "We must end a corrupt system that is rigged for the benefit of one group over another Negro novelist Ralph Ellison told the audience of over 100 that the conscience of the white majority has become dclled to justice because of discimination. He added, "One thing the failure of justice has done to the southern Negro is to make justice a more precious ideal.

"The Negro is nonethless forced to depend on the future of justice," Ellison said. The juries still respond to the old patterns, said the Okoahoma native and Tuskeg ee Institute yraduate, but the problem is not that we're moving forward slowly but htat the Negro may lose faith in the possibility of achieving quality through justice.

Ellison concluded by saying the future depends on the law students, the practitioners of tomorrow, and wehther they are willing to break with old incantations and invest in the future of justice.

The editor of the Greensboro Daily News, William D. Snider noted a need for more Negro voters and lawyers, pointing out that North Carolina had only 125 Negro lawyers but a Negro population of 1.5 million. He felt a need also for federal prodding, especially to provide equal education

Snider said he hoped a solution could be found to change the judicial system without destroying it. He noted that one of the inequities in the state's system of justice, the JP cou is being changed.

McNeill Smith, lawyer from Greensboro, said lawyers should know southern history in terms of race relations and should not continue to operate under old myths and prejudices. He cited court cases from the 19th century, including one in 1830 which said Negroes were North Carolina citizens, and said that much of the good work of the past had been largely ignored.

Smith said there was na absolute need for more Negro lawyers and that Negro students should be recruited for the state's law schools. "We are going to see changed in the jury system in terms of broadening its base," Smith said and reminded the audience that the entire legal system would break down if justice came to be known as a sham.

Chapel Hill Chemist Turns Playboy Author

A Chapel Hill chemist and author of scholarly articles for scientific journals has made his debut in fiction writing.

Frank Dobinson, a senior research chemist at Chemstrand, has a 1,200 word story, "The Master Copy," in the May issue of Playboy Magazine. The issue will go on sale here next week.

A native of England, Mr. Dobinson received his Ph.D. from the University of Birmingham in chemistry, came to the United States in 1959 and spent two years as a research fellow at the University of Texas before moving to Chapel Hill. He has been a member of the Chemstrand Research Center staff here since 1961.

His story is the revised version of one he turned in for Manley Wade Wellman's creative writing course at the University several years ago. He received a C-plus grade on the story.

Mr. Dobinson said Monday he was just completing work on a full-length fiction novel, "The Starlings Look Down," which he hopes to get published shortly. Playboy is still considering another of his short fiction stories, he added.

He has had 11 scholarly scientific papers published in such magazines as the "Journal of Organic Chemistry" and the "Journal of Polymer Science."

An article with the unlikely title of "High Temperature Polymers. 11. Wholly Aromatic Polymides Containing Fused and Multiple Ring Systems" will be published by Mr. Dobinson in the next issue of the "Journal of Polymer Science."

UNC Journalism Professor Urges 'Good Taste' In News

ATHENS, Ga. — A UNC journalism professor Kennety Byerly urged Georgia newsmen Thursday night to use "sense and "good taste" as a key to standards of decency in reporting.

"There are grave problems when decidng how much or little we will report of lurid and shocking details in some news stories," Byerly observed.

There will be disagreements among reporters as to what constitutes "sense" and "good taste," he said, "but there is no better guage."

Byerly addressed the Fifth Annual Reporter's Workshop of the Georgia Press Association, meeting on the University of Georgia campus Wednesday through Saturday. A newspaper publisher himself for 17 years, Byerly talked on "Background Information — Basic to the Editorial."

He stressed the importance of "facts" and "daily contact with people" in writing effective editorials. Oftentimes, he said, editors sound off on issues they do not understand or care about simply to avoid being accused of "straddling the fence" or "not taking a stand."

Presidential Profile

Powell: Debator Turned President

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

What is Student Body President Bob Powell really like?

Most students learned during his campaign that he has been a debator for three years and president of the debating team twice, that he has been chairman of the State Affairs Committee and that he has served on the Men's Honor Council.

Robert Stone Powell is a junior from Thomasville who was comparatively unknown by the student body before he announced his candidacy. He won a plurality in the March 22 election, but needed a runoff on March 29 before he won the office.

He says he "enjoyed the door-to-door contact with students during the campaign. I hope to continue personal communications with the student body while president — through Daily Tar Heel stories and residence hall meetings."

Powell considered the campaign a "fascinating experience. It gives the president much better perspective of the people he's representing."

He has been debating for six years — three years in high school — and has been president of Amphoterothen public speaking honorary. Powell says he found his debating experience valuable in the campaign and as president.

Debating is probably the only hobby he has. "I don't have time for hobbies, per se, although in high school I hunted a great deal," Powell asserts.

Being a member of the debating team and chairman of the State Affairs Committee have been his "most interesting experiences" at Chapel Hill. They "gave me a chance to travel as much as 5000 miles a year and develop my confidence as a public speaker," he says.

"Acquiring and intensive knowledge of the topics covered each year in debating was another important advantage of being on the team."

His "most interesting" experiences on the State Affairs Committee were his appearances on radio and television. He learned the techniques of production while preparing scripts for Student Government programs, which have

Professor Sees Law Suit Delay

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

A Duke law professor yesterday predicted that the defendants in the Speaker Ban law suit will try to keep the case out of court.

Professor William Van Alstyne said the state may try to delay until the end of the school year, or as near to that as possible, so that the time the case is heard it will be "moot."

"Since Chancellor (J. Carlyle) Sitterson only denied speaker rights for this semester," Van Alstyne said, "they have been trying to delay until the end of the school year."

In the event that the suit reaches court after spring semester is over, it is possible it could be thrown out of court "on the grounds that the case is moot," he said.

Van Alstyne has been working closely with the plaintiffs in the case, helping to prepare their original brief filed March 31, and also aiding the American Association of University Professors to prepare their "friend of the court" brief, to be submitted as soon as the state makes its answer.

Van Alstyne said the answer will probably come as near to the May 15 deadline as possible, "since it was their intention to delay the case," he said.

The dozen student plaintiffs, along with Frank Wilkinson and Herbert Aptheker, filed suit to try to get the gag law wiped off the books.

Aptheker, a Communist and head of a Marxist studies institute, and Wilkinson, who leads a committee seeking to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee, are both filing as individuals.

A three judge court was appointed last week to hear the case. The panel consists of Judge Clement F. Haynesworth of the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, Judge Edwin M. Stanley of the Federal Middle District North Carolina Court, and Judge Algernon L. Butler of the Eastern North Carolina District.

Defendants in the suit are Sitterson, Consolidated University President William Friday, and the UNC Board of Trustees.

The executive committee of the AAUP Thursday approved plans to support the plaintiffs in the case, and agreed to donate money for court costs. A local money drive is currently under way, at the direction of Dr. Joseph Straley, chairman of the UNC chapter of the AAUP.

Straley said yesterday that the funds collected by the drive are definitely exceeding his expectations.

The American Civil Liberties Union is also supporting the 14 defendants in their attempt to outlaw the Speaker Ban. ACLU spokesmen said an amicus curiae may also be filed by that group soon after the state answers the court.

An attache at the Yugoslavian Embassy in Washington will speak to a faculty group here Wednesday night, and become the first Communist diplomat to speak on campus since the Speaker Ban Law was passed.

Cvijeto Job, head of the department of press information, cultural affairs, science and education at the Yugoslavian Embassy, will discuss "Socialism and Freedoms in Yugoslavia" at the invitation of the UNC chapter of the American Association of University professors.

The lecture by the 39-year-old graduate of the University of Belgrade at 8 p.m. in the Morehead Planetarium faculty lounge is open to the public.

AAUP President Joseph Straley, Professor of Physics, said yesterday that Job was first contacted on March 5, but needed permission from his ambassador before accepting the invitation.

Job's speech, to which all senior faculty members were invited this week, is the third in a series of lectures relating to the Speaker Ban planned by the AAUP. Victor Bryant and Sen. Robert Morgan were the first two speakers.

Straley said the series was planned in November, before the Speaker Ban was amended. "We decided then that the AAUP would devote its program this year to academic freedom."

Job will be the second Communist to appear on campus in a month and the third scheduled for the semester.

Vladamir Alexandrov, a specialist in Leninism and visiting professor at the University of Indiana, lectured at several classes here on March 22 and gave a public speech.

The last previous Communist speaker on campus was Nikolaid Turkatento, acting manager of Tass, the Soviet

Seniors Plan Griping Time For Tuesday

The Senior Class will begin its traditional spring festivities when four of its representatives present their pent up emotions of the last four years to the entire student body at "Parting Shots" Tuesday night.

The griping will start at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall with addresses by Zacki Murphey, George Wainwright, George Butler and Armistead Maupin. They plan to give embarrassingly candid reactions to their years at Carolina.

Maupin said, "I've been waiting four years for this opportunity. I can hardly wait to tell the Political Science instructors, the Students for a Democratic Society, Dean Long, the sweet ladies in the Book Ex and the local chaplains what decent, God - fearing and down - right top notch people they all are."

Other activities of the evening will include the election of permanent class officers and the distribution of tickets for free beer on Wednesday.

Senior Day will take place Wednesday. Senior women have been given sign - out late permission for Wednesday until midnight.

Traditional activities of Senior Day include going around bare - footed and cutting classes.

Draft Dodgers, Hear This: 12 Ways To Beat System

By JACK TATE
Special to the DTH

How to beat the draft?

That's a question even the most patriotic of Carolina Gentlemen would like to be able to answer.

One thing's certain. Most young men do "beat" the draft, though perhaps without consciously trying. Only a small percentage men between 18 and 26 are actually drafted into military service.

And even the total of both the draftees and the volunteers represents considerably less than 50 per cent of those eligible for service.

Percentage - wise, fewer college - educated men are drafted than those in any other group.

William H. McCachren, state director of the Selective Service, said this week: "Not one full-time college student has been drafted in North Carolina because of poor grades."

But now to the specific ways you can avoid the draft.

STAY IN graduate or professional school until after your 26th birthday. You will still be eligible for the draft, but the services don't usually want you after you're 26.

APPLY FOR a "hardship" deferment. You will be exempt from the draft if you can prove that you are the major source of aid or support of someone (generally a relative) and that your being drafted would endanger the health or welfare of the other person. (George Hamilton and Cassius Clay have both applied for hardship deferments.)

CONVINCE YOUR wife or girlfriend that she should become pregnant immediately. This tactic will work even after you've gotten the letter asking you to take the physical. Both legitimate and illegitimate children will qualify you for this III-A deferment and you're considered a father from the moment of conception.

FAIL THE military intelligence test. This is somewhat risky if you have a college degree, but, according to Major Ollie Faison, head of the state Selective Service Manpower division, some college graduates have failed the test. If you fail, you will be subjected to an intensive interview by a psychologist. If you can convince him that you are a mental incompetent, you will receive a 1- Yor IV-F classification.

PROVE THAT you are physically unable to qualify for military service. Extremely poor vision or very flat feet are frequently accepted as proof of inability for military duty.

DECLARE YOURSELF a homosexual. This is somehwat risky too. Some draft boards require proof that you are a homosexual (such as a record of arrests) while others will immediately exempt you from service, figuring that anyone who would even say he is a homosexual would be a poor military risk.

JOIN THE Public Health Service or the Coast and Geodetic Society.

DECLARE YOURSELF a conscientious objector to any kind of military service. If you don't wind up in jail for two years you may still be called for civilian work contributing to the maintenance of the national health, safety or interest.

BECOME A public official and receive Class IV-B deferment.

GET A job in a strategic industry. Engineers and scientists receive most of these deferments. The company you work for must request this type of deferment for you and show that you are essential to their operations.

BECOME A minister of religion or a divinity student.

GET AN agricultural deferment. You must show that your leaving the farm would cause severe burden to be placed on someone such as your parents and also hamper the operations of the farm.

And if you don't qualify for one of these ways to beat the draft, you can always join a reserve component and fulfill your active duty obligation in six months.

He Knows What's Happening

Chief Beaumont— Cigar-Smoking Pal

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Asst. News Editor

Arthur Beaumont not only knows as much about what's happening in the University as the chancellor, he probably knows more about it — only he's too modest to say so.

As part of his job, he has met people ranging from the late President John F. Kennedy to American Communist Herbert Aptheker.

Officially, his title is campus security chief. Unofficially, he is a counselor to students, the local pundit on all subjects and the man with more stories to tell than almost anyone else around here.

In short, Beaumont likes to talk to people — and Saturday afternoon the DTH got him to talk about himself and his job. It's not that it's so difficult to get Beaumont to talk about about himself, but that he is as untypical a policeman as one could imagine.

To begin with Beaumont admits he sometimes works more than 80 hours a week. He is on duty seven days a week and always on call.

Even when he is riding in his official Carolina-blue car, a special radio-telephone hookup puts him in instant contact with any telephone in Chapel Hill.

When he first came to Carolina in 1959, after a long career from fireman to union bartender, he was hired to inspect campus buildings for fire hazards.

Beaumont had just "retired" from his position of lieutenant on the New York City Fire Department and the University, which had been plagued by a series of fires in 1958, was looking for someone with a background in fire prevention.

Beaumont got his job and at the same time inherited a campus police force of nine men. Today there are 15 campus policemen and six special guards working under Beaumont's supervision.

He works closely with the Dean of Men's office and the sight of Beaumont, trailing a cloud of smoke from his ever-present cigar, has signaled the end of many potential panty raids.

Also working as liason man between the University and various law enforcement agencies, Beaumont is often called at 4 a.m. to come to the scene of an accident involving students.

The heavy-set chief says students come to him for everything "from advice to the lovelorn, to what to do in case of arrest."

As another part of his job, Beaumont attends all public functions on the campus. "The friendships and associations you make because of being around at so many of these affairs is a big part of the fringe benefits from this job," he says.

Very popular with most students, Beaumont comments, "I think the feeling that students have that we're not against them makes our job so much easier."

Beaumont gives much of the credit to his wife, because he talks all his problems over with her.

"When I've just had a horrible experience where I couldn't show my emotions," Beaumont says, "I can always go home and talk with her about it."

"We can't always be impersonal, even if we have to make out like we are, just to keep calm."

Many a time Beaumont has gotten the early morning call that means he has to go to another wreck to identify dead or badly mangled students. Then, Beaumont has to notify the students' parents.

Dominating Beaumont's office is a large portrait of his son, who died in 1960. Beaumont often talks of his son, who suffered from hemophelia, remarking, "This wasn't just another father-son relationship. I gave him his first 100 transfusions myself."

Beaumont left home for the sea at the age of 18, worked as a government investigator, worked on the docks and even drove a beer truck for a time.

Just before retiring from the New York Fire Department, Beaumont also worked as a union bar tender.

However, many of the stories that Beaumont could tell cannot be printed. "I've got things here that are almost impossible to describe," Beaumont said as he unlocked the single gray filing cabinet next to his desk.

Beaumont, who claims "there are too many records in this world," says he keeps records only on major incidents and serious accidents. Then, with a smile he pointed to his correspondence file and said, "I keep only the good letters."

One of his biggest problems facing him is the campus parking situation.

"Everybody thinks his problems is the most important" he comments, then shows carefully drawn plans for a five level parking garage. He sums the situation up with a single word. "M-O-N-E-Y."

The normally jovial man can be quite gruff, as when he recently had to bar controversial speakers Frank Wilkinson and Herbert Aptheker from this campus.

"I believe everybody has rights," Beaumont said when he kept Wilkinson from entering Carroll Hall, "but I have to enforce the law."

On hearing a tape recording of the no-nonsense voice ordering Communist Herbert Aptheker off campus Beaumont had remarked, "I almost didn't recognize my own voice."

But no matter how busy he is, Beaumont says, "I never discourage anybody who wants to come by and talk.

"Unless you're a nut, you get scared when you get in a position when you are not sure what to do. Anybody who isn't scared at one time or another is crazy."

Beaumont knows what it's like for a person to be in a position of not being sure what to do. In his own words, in an emergency "You can't wait too long, and you can never afford to make a mistake."

THE CHIEF AND THE BOSS — Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont credits much of his success to his wife, with whom he always talks over his troubles.

Proposed Changes In Women's Rules

The long-talked-about changes in women's rules are expected to be made effective some time this week.

After all the lengthy surveys, studies, recommendations and conferences, the final proposals consist of a series of "deletes," "adds" and "replaces" and four major changes in existing policy.

First: Closing hours for non-freshmen women changed from 11 p.m. Monday through Thursday; 1 a.m. Friday and Saturday; midnight Sunday, To midnight Sunday through Thursday; 1 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

Second: Late permission (2 a.m.) for seniors on the third, sixth, ninth and twelfth Saturday nights of each semester.

Third: Change in present rule which states that women students are not allowed to spend the night in a hotel, motel or boarding house in Chapel Hill, Durham, Raleigh or any other nearby town unless accompanied by parents,

To add, Except on weekends when campus late permission has been granted, special permission for such over-nights may be obtained, provided that the student submits a request to the Residence Administration three days in advance of the anticipated function.

Fourth: Change in policy of no shorts or slacks except for athletic competition to to read. Women students are not to wear shorts or slacks in class, in the library, in administrative buildings, or in University dining facilities. They are requested to use discretion in dress in other areas.

Our reaction to these changes was two-fold, going from disappointment to entertainment.

We couldn't keep back a chuckle when we read "the third, sixth, ninth and twelfth Saturday nights . . .".

If 21-year-old women are going to be permitted to stay out until 2 a.m. only four times a semester, at least they should be allowed to choose their own nights.

Third, sixth, ninth and twelfth. We were waiting to hear someone yell "Bingo!"

We learned that one reason for this uniform pattern of late nights is the financial burden of paying a receptionist one-dollar to work the extra hour.

That's a good point. There are 17 receptionist desks where women students check in and out. Having these desks occupied the extra hour for just four nights will tally a bill of $68 per semester.

Of course, we were told, the matter of greatest financial concern in the proposed changes is the total of four extra hours per week — one hour each night Monday through Thursday. This will cost $68 every week!

We were happy to see the change permitting the wearing of slacks and shorts. But it doesn't make sense to us why, on a 90-degree day, a girl should not be permitted to go into the Pine Room for a drink wearing shorts, or why shorts and slacks should not be permitted in the library.

Our first thought upon reading the proposed changes was that the WRC in suggesting the revisions had allowed the administration to water down its proposals.

We have learned since that this is not the case. The reason a more drastic alteration of women's rules was not attempted — expecially in the area of closing hours — is that most UNC coeds don't want later closing hours.

Many of them feel the rules here are very lenient compared to the restriction under which they lived at junior colleges.

They often express the attitude that later closing hoours would make it more difficult for them in dating, explaining that when the clock approaches the forbidden hour they may simply say, "Oh, I do wish I could stay out longer, but you know these old fashioned rules we have here."

But there are some girls on campus who would like to have later closing hours, girls who are willing to accept the responsibility of making decisions on their own.

For these tirls, we wish closing hours and other rules could be firmly re-worked. Obviously, they are not going to be at this time.

A great deal of work has gone into the planning of the presently proposed changes. They are, at worst, better than the existing regulations. We hope they will be in effect next week at this time.

Stripped Of Strips

Many avid readers of Peanuts and Andy Capp have complained to us recently about our running old cartoons.

Here's the story.

The service through which the cartoon strips are syndicated sends each strip one month in advance. Durhing spring break, when the old hands cleaned out their desks and the new moved in, the cartoons for the month of April were misplaced.

When we returned to rsume publication after Easter we were left not holding the bag. Therefore, we'll have to run sketches which have appeared before until the strips for May begin.

We will try to dig back further and find some old ones that won't be quite as easily recognized.

We apologize to all our readers for the situation and ask them to bear with us. Remember, compared to the total experiences of a day at UNC, reading your favorite comic strip in the DTH is only peanuts.

Educational TV Offers The Only Interesting Fare Here

(Editor's note—this is the first in a two-part series.)

By RICHARD KLEIN

The news that WUNC-TV and its sister station WUNB-TV in Columbia, North Carolina, will soon be linked by microwave is exciting. It is another step towards a finer educational television system in this state, and one that is welcomed.

The television fare this year has been a remarkable disappointment. How such big networks as NBC, ABC and CBS presented to the public the cheap comedy and "miss-adventures" they did is a question to be pondered. Even a more irritating thought is that commercial television intends to repeat this format of programming next year.

Former FCC Chairman Newton Minnow dubbed television "the vast wasteland" a few years ago and some laughed. Now no one is laughing as the wasteland deteriorates. The oasis in the middle of the commercial dribble has been educational television with stations as WUNC and WUNB.

While a certain station will be broadcasting from its network programs such as "Batman," "Long Hot Summer," "Peyton Place" and "The Baron," Chapel Hill's channel four will be showing the Carolina Symposium speakers live and direct, "USA: Artists," "What's New" or "The President's Men." Where is the comparison?

Commercial television, say leading critics, relies on serving the greatest number of people basing their audience on A. C. Neilson ratings—a sample of a few thousand viewers (who possibly are not even viewing) which is supposed to represent millions. Thus instead of showing an important Senate hearing which would likely affect our country's foreign policy, CBS chose only a few weeks ago to re-show an "I Love Lucy" program.

Aware that big problems do exist and answers can often be furnished—or, at least, attempted—WUNC-TV and WUNB-TV have accepted the challenge of trying to stimulate the mind of discriminating viewers. Rather than take the easy road and play down to viewers, these educational stations exerted themselves and put excitement back into the media.

High production costs and "lack of time" have kept local stations in this state from airing their own work using local talent. Instead these stations take another easy path by "riding the network" or running stale movies or old syndicated material.

Heaven knows what the solution to the commercial television dilemma is for the future. It appears that a change for the better in commercial television may never occur because it is economically sound.

So it is to the oasis one must look for refreshment. In WUNC-TV one can see programs with imagination and creativity — where thought is valued and intelligence appreciated. Anything less than what is presented on WUNC-TV is "second-best" at best.

Some of what educational television broadcasts is not altogether polished. Even after two decades of successful existence, television is still somehwat in the experimental stages. All that television can and will do has not yet been explored.

By its new connection with its sister station, WUNC-TV and its eventual network of stations in North Carolina offers tangible evidence of the high calibre of education the entire state can eagerly expect in a few years.

Former Governor Terry Sanford said in an April 8, 1963 address in Washington and hopes of the nation. Education, put in the bleakest terms, is survival. And education, put in its brightest terms, is life and growth, and happiness."

"Mom, it's not that I don't want to see you next weekend . . ."

Letters To The Editor

Coeds Seek Help

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We, the undersigned, would like to bring to the attention of Carolina students and North Carolina citizens what we believe to be a significant injustice to the women students on this campus.

Recently, a large modern, private "dormitory" was built to house women students. The cost of living in this dormitory is in the neighborhood of $495 per semester. Yes, we realize that this includes three meals a day, telephones in every room, and a semi-private bath, but what girl wants to be forced to eat all of her meals at a certain place, or needs the above mentioned luxuries at such an extreme expense?

Perhaps a handful of undergraduate women will be willing to pay this price. However, a freshman or transfer student is going to be surprised when her acceptance notice includes the fact that the only place in which she may live costs $495 per semester

We acknowledge the inevitable growing pains of a university. However, why do the women have to bear the brunt of all these growing pains? Our rent goes up because of the increased cost of new men's residence halls. Women are then shoved into Granville Hall as yet another new men's dormitory is being constructed. Our state legislature provides $1,000 per student for new men's residence halls such as Morrison; yet, this is supposedly not enough for a women's dormitory.

If women's residences are indeed more costly, why then start admitting women students on an "equal" basis with men if they cannot be housed on an equal basis?

These questions need ot be answered and to be brought to the attention of all concerned.

Cool Old Cartoons

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

What's the big idea of trying to pass off old cartoons on us? The recent rash of month-old cartoon strips is somewhat annoying.

When one gets up and has to drag himself to his eight o'clock class, he doesn't particularly like to open the DTH to his only consolation on a dreary morning just to find last month's funnies.

Surely a paper with the stature of that of the Daily Tar Heel can accomplish the most menial of newspaper tasks, namely printing a syndicated daily cartoon strip.

While I'm going to the trouble of being critical, I might as well be constructive. Perhaps one or two new comic strips might add to the DTH now that it has six permanent pages. May I suggest the "Wizard of Id?"

Let me end by saying that the purpose of this letter is not to air a gripe publicly but to perhaps prompt the DTH staff to better work by letting them know that the public is temporarily disappointed in them.

Richard Page

(Editor's note—the head menial of the edit page sadly reports that all the new Peanuts and Andy Capp cartoons were inadvertently thrown out during the recent staff transition. The up-dated cartoons will appear next issue. Doesn't anyone out there care about our editorials?

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Otelia Turns On Scofflaws

By OTELIA CONNOR

Everybody who passes the Village Apartments stops at the rock wall to admire the brilliant array of spring flowers, the loving and dedicated work of Mrs. Laudeman, one of the residents of the apartment. She spends hours every day — digging, fertilizing, planting, watering — creating beauty for others to enjoy.

Yesterday, Mrs. Laudeman was heartbroken because some vandal had been by early in the morning and cut thirteen of the red tulips. She said she felt like leaving Chapel Hill.

I told her I thought it was a crime, the worst thing I ever heard of, and that, although there was no chance of finding out who did it, we could at least turn the spotlight of publicity on the dastardly deed, and that I would do my part to turn on the light.

Which brings to mind other activities that need to be brought to light.

Recently I was having lunch with a woman who lives in an apartment house in another section of town. She said everything was fine except for the people who cleaned their apartments up at night, sometimes one or two a.m., or who keep their music on so loud that you can't sleep. Or students who bring their dates, run up and down the stairs, and are noisy all hours of the night.

I said every apartment house should have rules, regulating the noise. She said they have rules. I said if no one will report the rule - violators there is little chance of improving matters. Not many people will report nuisances, but if they have a manager worth his salt he will be only too glad to let it be known that an apartment house is not a private home, nor is it a club house.

Many people have no business in an apartment house, putting them out would be a happy riddance, while others only need to be reminded, and they are glad to comply.

Ship Tobacco To India? Cooley Must Be Kidding

As every congressman running for re-election knows, one must cater to his constituents' wishes if he wants to return to city of Lyndon Johnson, thick carpets, sexy secretaries, plush committee assignments, and, of course, a heck of a lot of prestige.

The question is: How far does one go to win again?

North Carolina's Rep. Harold Cooley apparently settled the matter very easily when he suggested that tobacco (considered a health hazard in this country) be sent to India "to ease the tension of the starving Indians and relax the nerves so that they can eat the food and assimilate it much better."

Cooley had seemingly discovered that the lungs of the Indians are less prone to cancer than those of the Americans.

Ridiculous?

Of course.

And even Cooley's staff knew it.

Cooley confessed last week that someone on his staff struck the statement from the Congressional Record.

Not very conveniently, however, Rep. H. R. Gross of Iowa repeated Cooley's remarks so that they could get into print after all.

The Tar Heel congressman didn't contradict him.

Cooley, who had asked that the tobacco be sent abroad as "emergency famine relief," called his own statement "facetious."

But he also said — as if apologizing for a serious statement — that U. S. tobacco shipments would enable India to grow food on land it now uses for tobacco and cotton.

Moreover, Cooley himself wasn't the only person apparently detecting snatches of seriousness in the suggestion. Sen. Stephen Young of Ohio explained that the tobacco item had indeed been "tucked away" in the billion - dollar famine relief bill by the representative's "deft touch."

Then Young did the obvious; he called Cooley "a faithful representative of the tobacco interests.

Referring to the tobacco program's being touted as a project to prevent the poor from feeling the effects of starvation, Young said: "This sounds fantastic.

"But," he added, "it's true."

Young predicts the tobacco, far from being a gift to the poor, will actually go to "the extremely rich upper classes who never had it so good."

Who's right, Cooley or Young?

That can't even be asked until we find out whether Cooley has been facetious all the way along; perhaps he really agrees with the Ohio Senator, but has a sense of humor.

Cooley is on the Daily Tar Heel's mailing list, so possibly he can tell us the truth after reading this column.

Are you being funny, Congressman?

Are you merely seeking re-election?

Or are you seeking to be re-elected by trying to be funny?

CHASE CAFETERIA was built in 1965. Institution Magazine, which will present the University an award on May 23, has called Chase "the most beautiful college cafeteria in the United States today."

Cafeteria Wins Award

The University of North Carolina's Chase Cafeteria has been named to receive one of the highest awards in the food service trade.

Beorge Prillaman, director of food service at UNC, said the top award would be made in Chicago next month.

Chase Cafeteria, constructed at a cost of some $3 million in 1965, competed with 200 other college, university and state food service institutions in the nation for the award.

Prillaman will receive the award for the University on Monday, May 23 at Institution Magazine's annual awards program to be held at the Pick-Congress Hotel in Chicago. He identified Institution Magazine as the leading magazine in the food service industry.

Award winners were selected by food service consultants, engineers, architects and decorators meeting in Chicago on April 4, 5 and 6.

Ultra - modern in design with such features as glass walls and marble kitchen floors, Chase Cafeteria has been called "the most beautiful college cafeteria in the United States today."

Chase is located on UNC's south campus and is staffed and equipped to serve up to 4,000 students per meal. Its capacity is expected to reach 5,000 per meal by 1970.

Secret of the cafeteria's high - speed service is the much - debated and often criticized "scramble system." Rather than standing in line cafeteria style, the student "shops" for various food itsms much as in a super market.

THE FRENCH CHEF — NET "Croustades aux Crevettes a la Mantua" Julia Child demonstrates, with this shrimp recipe, what the French do to make things taste so good — one thing, she noted, is "to use every possible bit of everything . . . even the shells lend their special flavor to this dish." Cooked shrimp shells, remove and ureed with butter, give what The French Chef calls that "lovely shrimpy taste. Added to the sieved shrimp peelings, shrimp cooking stock and heavy cream, the shrimp butter and lemon juice provide a "Sauce Mantua." Folded into sauce and served on rice or in "toast cases," this shrimp dish is delicious with fesh asparagus, peas or broccoli, and a full - bodied white wine.

INTERTEL: THE DIFERENCE BETWEEN US — NET This hour-long documentary program contrasts the secondary school education systems of the United States and England—portarying striking disparity between the strict discipline, academic specialization, uniform attire and prescribed manner of behavior in English grammar schools, attended by intellectually elite students; and the open, casual self-expressive and spontaneous teacher - student informality in U. S. secondary schools, where traditional concern has been for education of the masses. Changes in both systems are evident however as England, which previously gave major attention to the talented student, now embarks on measures to increase the quality and quantity of education for all members of English society; and the United States schools begin to raise the quality of education and show concern for more talented studerts. Arguments for and against intellectual segregation of students are presented by two eminent United States and English educators: Dr. George Bereday of Columbia University and Dr. Joseph Lauwerys of the University of London.

the meaning of life. Mr. Nono, who once ran for public office on the Communist ticket in Italy, was at first denied a visitor's visa when he applied to come to the United States for the Boston premiere, but protests by the press and members of the Massachusetts congressional delegation won him admittance. Agitated because his last-minute requests for changes in the Boston production were not granted, Mr. Nono complained in a letter to the Boston Globe that alleged inadequacies in the production resulted from the American capitalistic system, and he was rebutted in print by Michael Steinberg, the Globe's music critic, and by Beverly Sills, one of the singers in the production. This program includes interviews with Mr. Nono and with Mr. Steinberg. Elliot Norton, drama critic of the Boston Record American, provides the introductory commentary.

Please don't zlupf Sprite. It makes plenty of noise all by itself.

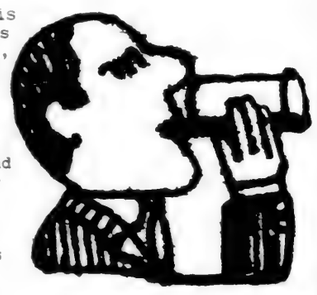
Sprite, you recall, is the soft drink that's so tart and tingling, we just couldn't keep it quiet.

Flip its lid and it really flips. Bubbling, fizzing, gurgling, hissing and carrying on all over the place.

An almost excessively lively drink.

Hence, to zlupf is to err.

What is zlupfing?



Zlupfing is to drinking what smacking one's lips is to eating.

It's the staccato buzz you make when draining the last few deliciously tangy drops of Sprite from the bottle with a straw.

Zzzzzlllupf!

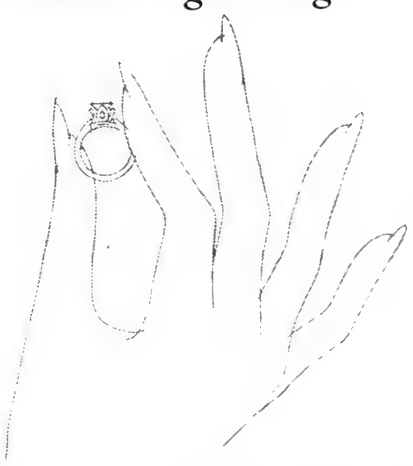
It's completely uncalled for. Frowned upon in polite society. And not appreciated on campus either.

But. If zlupfing Sprite is absolutely essential to your enjoyment; if a good healthy zlupf is your idea of heaven, well...all right.

But have a heart. With a drink as noisy as Sprite, a little zlupf goes a long, long way.

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

ArtCarved settings hold a diamond so delicately, it's almost frightening.



We've even designed a diamond engagement ring to resemble the soft fragile petals of a new spring flower. So the diamond you show off to the world won't only be dazzling. But elegant too. In the new ArtCarved collection, you can choose from slim, soaring, majestic designs. And without being frightened. Because since we guarantee all the diamonds we set, we also guarantee they will stay right there.

Week In Review

Symposium Tops Carolina's Week

It's over.

After five days and nine speakers, the 1966 Carolina Symposium has ended.

Ten top personalities from the fields of religion, economy, literature and comic strips told Carolina students what this "Man, Mind, Myth" business is all about.

Although the titled words—man, mind and myth—weren't overused in the speeches, they provided the nucleus around which the talks revolved.

The symposium was opened by Harvard economist John Kenneth Galbraith. He was followed by Dean Alan Richardson, Nelson Algren, Walter Kaufmann, Daniel J. Boorstein, Morris K. Udall, Al Capp, Tom Wolfe, C. Vann Woodward and Ralph Ellison.

Greek Potential

Dean Long stated in the sedond edition of Greek News and Views that fraternities do have a great potential here.

"A great deal of time and every possible assistance" was offered from the administration as Long praised frat men for their competence shown in the self - regulating responsibility they have taken on.

SL Meet Quiet

Student Party Floor Leader Steve Hockfield outlined some of the proposals to be introduced in Student Legislature this spring in a quiet Thursday night session.

The only business transacted was an announcement of committee appointments and introduction of 14 new bills which were sent to newly- appointed standing committees.

DU's Pledges

Delta Upsilon social fraternity dominated Greek Week awards given Monday night by the IFC by taking the first place trophies for the best pledge class, best Campus Chest carnival booth and the best field day scores.

Powell Taps 2

Student Body President Bob Powell announced his appointments Tuesday of Eric Van Loon as presidential assistant and Bob Travis as presidential assistant for administrative affairs.

Theta Colonizes

Kappa Alpha Theta, the oldest Greek letter sorority, announced officially Wednesday that they will colonize here.

The colony will hold rush interviews the first week of May. Interested girls must sign up at the Dean of Women's Office by April 28.

Theta will become the eighth sorority on this campus. The last sorority to colonize here was Phi Mu in 1964.

Honor Week

Today through Saturday has been designated Honor System Week.

It will feature meetings in fraternities, sororities and residence colleges and a series of articles in The Daily Tar Heel.

Assistant Attorney General Jim Aplin said the residence meetings will feature representatives from both the Men's and Women's Honor Councils. These talks will deal mainly with practieces of the Councils, the rules and their penalties.

Ban Suit

State Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton said yesterday that North Carolina expects to file an answer "in the next several days" to the suit against the Speaker Ban.

He said they discussed the suit which was filed on April 1 at Greensboro's U. S. Middle District Court by 12 students, Frank Wilkinson and Herbert Aptheker, but would not elaborate on what was mentioned at the meeting.

Neither Bruton nor Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson estimated when the answer would be filed. The answer must be filed by May 15, and the Chapel Hill Weekly predicted Wednesday that the "first hearing on the complaint is expected during the week of May 23," according to Herman A. Smith, Clerk of the Court in Greensboro.

A fund drive to finance the suit is exceeding expectations, the local head of the American Association of University Professors said Tuesday.

Dr. Joseph W. Straley declined, however, to place a dollar - value on the drive's success.

"I think that people will put an interpretation on any amount that we quote," Straley said.

Prof Shot At

English Professor Lyman A. Cotten escaped injury when three pistol shots were fired at him Thursday night by an unidentified intruder in his Hooper Lane house.

Cotten said that three dollars were stolen from his wallet and that some money was missing from the wallet several days ago. He said he is also missing a Smith and Wesson pistol, which his family had had for some years.

Bullets found in the house were identified by police as fired by a Smith and Wesson.

Mo Woes

Overdue bills are mounting up for Morrison Residence College because they still do not have an approved constitution.

Dean Long, in commenting on his rejection of a proposed constitution, stated that all constitutions must be exactly like Scott College's approved one so that "there won't be eight different interpretations."

Although all of Long's thoughts on "financial stability" were incorporated into the Morrison version, it was not acceptable because it wasn't a verbatim copy of Scott's.

The only alternative a college has for the time being is to borrow money from the individual residence halls or houses within the college. Until the constitutions are approved by Long, no college funds will be released for paying bills.

Yearly Salary Does Not Cover Senate Expenses

WASHINGTON (AP) — It may come as a surprise of Joe Taxpayer that the cost of senatorial living is so high that many members can't make ends meet on their $30,000 yearly salary.

To Joe, who may not have reached even the $10,000 bracket, this could be a confirmation of his suspicions that his elected representatives are mixed up in a lot of the high living he is pretty sure goes on in Washington.

But Senators — including some who are pretty good at doing the frug — say it isn't so. They contend the money goes for such homey things as entertaining constituents, making numerous trips back to inform the voters and getting away from their burdens for a few days in the sun.

A cross-section check of members — none of whom wanted to be named publicly — turned up indications that a relatively small number get by on what remains of their salaries after state and federal taxes and pension deductions.

The whole matter was brought to public attention by the contention of associates that the expense of public office costs Sen. Thomas J. Dodd, D-Conn. from $15,000 to $20,000 more than his $30,000 salary.

This was advanced in connection with the claim that between $100,000 and $200,000 raised at testimonial dinners for Dodd represented tax-free gifts. The Senate ethics committee has Dodd's situation under investigation.

A New England Republican who has been around a long time said he lives within his $30,000 salary and manages to save about $2,000 a year. But he said he could see where other Senators more attracted to the Washington and home-state social whirls than he could spend $50,000.

"My biggest expense is entertaining constituents at luncheons and inners," he said. "We don't get any expense allowance for that and it certainly mounts up. But I do charge it off on my income tax as a business expense.

"You can live pretty reasonably in Washington if you want to," he said. "I pay $150 a month for my apartment. If I bought a house there I wouldn't have to pay much, if any, more for it than I would in my home state."

A Democrat from the Southwest, who doesn't live within his salary because he doesn't have to, agreed that entertaining the home folk is a big item. He said he has never charge it off his income tax because he doesn't regard it as a legitimate deduction.

A mountain state Democart said $30,000 a year sounds big back home.

"But what I didn't understand was the unreimbursable costs," he said.

He said he has averaged $10-000 a year from making speeches and thus has been able to keep his financial nose above water.

"I never took a nickel of that home," he said. "I put every cent of it in my office accounts here for entertaining, to buy radio - television tapes and for plane tickets."

He added that in one year he had $185 net for personal use out of the $10,000.

A border state Republican, who concedes he doesn't live on his $30,000 salary, said he could if he had to. But he said it wouldn't be difficult for a Senator to spend as much as $50,000 "without even having a liveried butler."

"I pay $400 a month rent for an apartment in Washington," he said. "I could get one for $250 a month if I had to live that way, but I don't."

He said he has never had to spend any of his own money on his campaigns, since he was able to get financial support from fund - raising committees. But he said this isn't necessarily true of all candidates.

A Midwestern Democrat said he has been having so much difficulty financing family living on $30,000 he sold his home in his state and is using the money to finance a son's college education.

This senator said he could see why it might cost Dodd and some of his other colleagues $50,000 a year to get along.

He noted among other things that he makes about 15 and envelopes, he can draw trips a year to his home state but can draw transportation expense for only six.

"My wife recently went home to fill a speaking engagement with a group of women she didn't feel she could refuse," he said. "They were so delighted with her appearance that they gave her $50. So her trip only cost me $150 out of my pocket."

New York Newspapers Expect Strike Today

NEW YORK (AP) — The Journal - American and the World Telegram and Sun published their final separate afternoon editions today, their plans to publish under a merger with the morning Herald Tribune stymied by a labor dispute.

The World Telegram printed an optimistic final editorial entitled "Not Goodby," but there was gloom as reporters left the city rooms, still unsure who would have a job.

Negotiations continued, but all sides agreed the city faces a partial newspaper blackout Monday, for the third time in less than four years. Mayor John V. Lindsay, who failed to get the merger postponed, was keeping in touch.

Ten unions, dissatisfied with the way the merged firm plans to cut 2,000 workers from payrolls totaling 5,700, have set a strike for 4 p.m. tomorrow.

That will give the Journal-American and the Herald Tribune time to print final separate Sunday editions. The following week they planned to be merged as the Sunday World Journal Tribune.

There was little chance that the Morning Tribune or the new evening World Journal will appear Monday. Even with a weekend settlement, preparatory work is too long delayed already.

The New York publishers called a meeting for noon Sunday to decide whether their members would continue publishing if a strike is called.

Mauled Viet Cong Escape Allied Trap

SAIGON (AP) — A Communist regiment mauled by U. S. Marines and Vietnamese troops through a 48-hour battle in the Quang Ngai sector slipped from the allied trap today and escapted into central highland jungles. Most lived to fight another day.

A U. S. spokesman's announcement Friday that the troops and supporting planes and artillery had killed 257 of the Red enemy was scaled down on a recheck to 220. Allied losses again were termed light.

Ebbing of the spring's heaviest ground battle coincided with the rise of a threat to the precarious political peace that Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military regime obtained by promising the Buddhist hierarchy to hold an election this summer to restore civilian rule.

Roman Catholic refugees and the Saigon Student Union called for pro-government street demonstrations here Sunday. That could stir up a violent reaction from the Buddhists, quiet lately even in such dissident hotbeds as Hue and Da Nang.

U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge has called the election, due to be held in three to five months, an untrod path for the Vietnamese. He said in a taped CBS television interview Friday the political turmoil has affected the military effort against the Communists and set back the drive for economic reconstruction.

"But I believe the time lost can be regained," he added.

Regained for the aerial war were 18,000 bombs which a defense department spokesman in Washington said were collected from six allies that receive U. S. military aid. Without naming these nations, he said the United States bought back or otherwise reacquired the bombs this year.

U. S. air sorties against the Viet Cong have fallen below the earlier daily average of 450-500 and American sources here have attributed this to a shortage of bombs and other ordnance. Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara has denied such a shortage, calling the reports "baloney."

Two U. S. planes — a twin-jet RF101 Voodoo reconnaissance craft and an F105 Thunderchief fighter - bomber — were lost in extensive operations over North Viet Nam Friday. Both pilots were listed as missing.

Conventional ground fire was reported to have accounted for the planes, felling the Voodoo northeast of Hanoi and the Thunderchief about 40 miles northwest of that North Vietnamese capital.

A spokesman said pilots spotted five of North Viet Nam's Soviet - built surface to air missiles in flight, but evaded all of Them. Capt. James. R. Mitchell, 36, of Ogden, Utah, saw three. He said two whizzed aloft without exploding and the other went off about 350 feet above his Thunderchief.

Peking broadcast a declaration that, in operations over North Viet Nam Saturday, six U. S. planes were shot down. There was no substantiation here.

There is always a lag in Saigon — ranging from about 12 to 36 hours — in official reports concerning air operations north of the border.

Briefing officers said, U. S.

Briefing officers said U. S. three railroad bridges, damaged a highway bridge and blasted four military storage buildings along the Red River valley railway line between Hanoi and Red China Friday.

U. S. Navy pilots from the carriers Enterprise and Kitty Hawk were reported to have sunk nine cargo junks, blasted the Dong AP military establishment 24 miles south of Vinh and cut several highway and railway routes in the Vinh area.

For the second day in a row, B52 jet bombers from Guam attacked a suspected Viet Cong concentration 70 miles northwest of Saigon near the frontier of Cambodia.

Within Saigon there was another terrorist attack. Five Viet Cong struck at a police substation with submachine guns and grenades. They wounded 11 policemen and two civilians, then escaped.

North of town, Korean soldiers guarding a highway bridge at Lai Thieu killed two Viet Cong in driving off an attack by about 25. A spokesman said the Koreans suffered no casualties.

Peking broadcast a report that North Vietnamese gunners sank two allied commando ships off the northern coast of Quang Binh province at 3 a.m. Saturday. There was no confirmation here. Quang Binh is a long, lean border province. The site of the action, according to the Communist story, would be about 80 miles north of the border.

Though the allied victory in the Quang Ngai sector battle was not so conclusive as it might have been, the Communists lost more than 100 weapons at a time when air strikes at the Ho Chi Minh trail and Navy surveillance at sea are putting a crimp in Red supply lines. The seized weapons included a score of 57mm recoilless guns.

Officers said the Red regiment was made up of an amalgamation of elements of the Viet Cong's hard-core 1st regiment plus men from North Viet Nam's 21st, both of which were battered by U. S. Marines last month in operations Utah and Texas.

Air and artillery attacks were reported to have accounted for most of the enemy dead in the latest drive, Operation Hot Springs. This was launched Thursday in the hills 10 miles northwest of Quang Ngai city after the Red staging area was pointed out to allied officers by a Viet Cong defector.

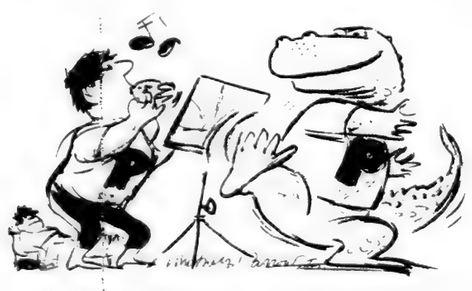
ROOMMATES REVISITED

This morning's mail brought a letter from a student at a prominent Western university (Princeton). "Dear Sir," he writes. "In a recent column you said it was possible to get along with your roommate if you try hard enough. Well, I'd like to see anyone get along with my roommate! Mervis Trunz (for that is his name) practices the ocarina all night long, keeps an alligator, wears knee-cymbals, and collects airplane tires. I have tried everything I can with Mervis Trunz, but nothing works. I am desperate. (signed) Desperate.'

Have you, dear Desperate, really tried everything? Have you, for example, tried a measure so simple, so obvious, that it is easy to overlook? I mean, of course, have you offered to share your Personna® Super Stainless Steel Blades with Mervis Trunz?

To have a friend, dear Desperate, you must be a friend. And what could be more friendly than sharing the bounty of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades? Who, upon enjoying the luxury of Personna, the nickless, scrapeless, tugless, hackless, scratchless, matchless comfort of Personna, the ease and breeze, the power and glory, the truth and beauty of Personna—who, I say, after such jollies could harden his heart against his neighbor? Nobody, that's who—not even Mervis Trunz—especially not today with the new Personna Super Blade bringing us new highs in speed, comfort, and durability. And here is still a further bonus: Personna is available both in Double Edge style and Injector style.



No, dear Desperate, your problem with Mervis Trunz is far from insoluble. In fact, as roommate problems go, it is pretty small potatoes. Compare it, for example, to the classic case of Basil Metabolism and E. Pluribus Ewbank.

Basil and E. Pluribus, roommates at a prominent Eastern university (Oregon) were at an impassable impasse. Basil could study only late at night, and E. Pluribus could not stay awake past nine p.m. If Basil kept the lights on, the room was too bright for E. Pluribus to sleep. If E. Pluribus turned the lights off, the room was too dark for Basil to study. What to do?

Well sir! these two intelligent American kids found an answer. They got a miner's cap for Basil! Thus, he had enough light to study by, and still the room was dark enough for E. Pluribus to sleep.

It must be admitted, however, that this ingenious solution had some unexpected sequelae. Basil got so enchanted with his miner's cap that he switched his major from 18th Century poetry to mining and metallurgy. Shortly after graduation, he had what appeared to be a great stroke of luck: while out prospecting, he discovered what is without question the world's largest feldspar mine. This might have made Basil very rich except that nobody, alas, has yet discovered a use for feldspar. Today Basil, a broken man, squeezes out a meagre living as a stalagmite in Ausable Chasm.

Nor has E. Pluribus fared conspicuously better. Once Basil got the miner's cap, E. Pluribus was able to catch up on his long-lost sleep. He woke after nine days, refreshed and vigorous—more vigorous, alas, than he realized. It was the afternoon of the Dean's tea. E. Pluribus stood in line with his classmates, waiting to shake the Dean's hand. At last his turn came, and E. Pluribus, full of strength and health, gave the Dean a firm handshake—so firm, indeed, that all five of the Dean's knuckles were permanently fused.

The Dean sued for a million dollars and, of course, won. Today E. Pluribus, a broken man, is paying off his debt by walking the Dean's cat every afternoon for ten cents an hour.

We, the makers of Personna Blades and the sponsors of this column, will not attempt to expertize about roommates. But we will tell you about a great shaving-mate to Personna —Burma Shave®! It soaks rings around any other lather; it comes in regular and menthol.

UNC Lacrosse Team Drops Tough Battle To Virginia

By JEFF MacNELLY
DTH Sports Writer

Coach Cony Steele's lacrosse team fell yesterday in a hard-fought battle with the Cavaliers of Virginia, 8-5. The game was marred by sloppy play on the part of both squads with the Tar Heels coming out on the short end of a lot of bad breaks.

Goalie Harvey Stanley played his usual outstanding game, blocking 18 Virginia shots. Scoring for the Tar Heels was spread out between Dan Howe, Sandy Reider, Bud Adams, Bob Morrison and Loring Swasey.

The Laxmen got off to a fast start when midfielder Dan Howe took the ball in and scored in the first minute of play. The Cavaliers bounced back quickly, however, as Barrow tallied a minute later on a rebound from a Stanley save.

Adams' goal gave the Tar Heels the lead at 3:45, and again the pressing Cavaliers evened it up, seconds later, tying the score at two apiece at the end of the first quarter.

The two teams traded goals again in the second frame with Morrison scoring seconds after the Virginia tally. The tie was broken late in the period, putting the frustrated Tar Heels back 4-3 at halftime.

The third quarter saw the determined stickmen tie the score twice on hits by Reider and Swasey. The Cavaliers owned the ballgame in the last quarter as the Virginia attack peppered a sagging Carolina defense for three scores.

The Tar Heel defense was strong and tough throughout most of the contest despite a few mistakes, but fell apart in the lop-sided fourth period. Most of the Tar Heel problems came on offense.

Obviously a little shaky after the loss of All-America attackman Jeff Parker, the attack was slow to get the ball moving and plays refused to materialize against the fairly strong Virginian defense. Costly turn-overs could be blamed on several crucial bad passes and a lot of ground ball problems.

The loss was a tough one for Carolina, which has yet to defeat the perenially tough Cavaliers.

West Plays Best Baseball

As a basketball conference, the ACC is tops. As a football league, it is close to the bottom. How does the Atlantic Coast Conference compare with the rest of the country in the caliber of baseball played? While talking to Tar Heel Baseball Coach Walter Rabb the other day, I asked him how he would rank the baseball played around here.

Rabb pointed to the West Coast as the section with the best college baseball in the nation. I don't think anyone can quarrel with that answer. Southern Cal, Stanford, and even such schools as California Poly at Pomona are perennial powers on the diamond. If you stretch the definition of West Coast to include Arizona (after all, it borders on California), the claim for western superemacy becomes even stronger. Arizona western supremacy becomes even stronger. Arizona and Ariozna State are always tough. Last year's top choice in the free-agent draft was Rick Monday of Arizona, who signed with Kansas City for a reported $104,000.

Closer to home, Rabb indicated that ACC baseball compared favorably to that played in the Southeastern and Southern Conferences. "NCAA playoffs indicate we are almost on a par with the SEC and a little above the Southern," the Tar Heel coach commented. He said the top teams in the ACC are probably about as good as the tops in the SEC, although they are not so deep. Rabb pointed out that occasionally an exceptional ball club can come from any league.

Right now the top team in the ACC, with a 5-1 record, is our own Carolina squad. Ever wonder what Rabb has to build with in the way of athletic grants? "We have two or three full grants," the coach said, "and we give a lot of partial grants. They're adequate to keep the program competitive against the ACC."

Rabb said that the baseball budget was sufficient for the current program—"We have pdenty of good equipment" — but isn't large enough to make Carolina a national power. Like many other schools, UNC makes good use of athletes from other sports on the baseball team. Bob Hume, Danny Talbott and Charlie Carr are football players who certainly come in handy on the baseball field.

Rabb emphasized that he wasn't complaining about the current scholarship situation. "It's not entirely desirable that we have a complete grant-in-aid squad," he said. "We want every boy on campus to feel that he has a chance to show what he can do." Rabb added that a number of boys playing regularly aren't getting financial aid to play baseball.

Carolina may not be able to match some of the big baseball schools when it comes to recruiting power, but that doesn't mean the Tar Heels don't have a chance to win the NCAA title — if they get through the ACC. On a game-to-game basis, baseball is the least formful of all sports. In other words, anybody can beat anybody in one or two games. Even the Mets and the Athletics win about 60 games a year. With the NCAA's double-elimination tournament, the hot team, not necessarily the best team, will win.

A couple of years ago, I saw Ole Miss play; and the Rebels had a real fine club with plenty of pitching and power. Champions of the SEC and highly rated, they went to the NCAA World Series and proceeded to drop two straight. They were cold at the wrong time. If Carolina gets to the NCAA finals, the Tar Heels will have about as good a chance as anyone. It all depends on who's hot.

Heels Nudge UVA By 3-2

We're Still Tops In ACC As Late Cav Rally Fails

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Virginia almost did it again.

After coming from behind to defeat Carolina in football and once in basketball, the Cavaliers almost did it again.

But the Tar Heels struggled through a tense ninth inning to win, 3-2, and keep their hold on first place in the ACC.

Carolina had scored a pair of runs in the third and one in the fourth before Virginia plated two in the seventh.

Then, with starter and winner Beattie Leonard (3-3) trying to make his good pitching job a complete one, the Cavs started an ill-fated rally in the ninth.

Cleanup hitter Art Halstead drilled a single to left leading off the ninth, and Coach Walter Rabb immediately called in right - hander Danny Walker to replace Leonard.

Gene Arnette, Walker's first opponent, forced Halstead at second, but outran the McLaughlin - Thomas - Talbott relay to avert the double play.

Then Stew Evans got under a Walker pitch and lifted it deep to left. Bob Hume chased the ball to the screen, moved laterally towards the foul line, and reached up to pull the ball in. Arnette scurried back to first, and the crowd lined around the field on the right field bank and in the stands let off a little tension.

But first baseman Terry Gowin, who had doubled home UVA's first run in the seventh, looped a single to right just out of the reach of second - baseman Charlie Thomas. Arnette sped to third, and a short, squat figure emerged from the Virginia dugout.

It was pinch batter Jeff Gordon. He swung mightily at Walker's first pitch, watched a couple, and then lofted a lazy pop to Bob Bonczek in short right field to end the game.

Two-Out Spurts

Carolina wasted two outs in the third inning before scoring its first two runs, and then did the same thing in the fourth before pushing across what proved to be the winning run.

Shaw's Big Double

Virginia starter and loser Keith Liskey got Hume and Mike McLaughlin to start the third, but then Danny Talbott ripped a single past diving UVA shortstop Bill Curtis.

Bonczek then shot a base hit to the right of second base, and the Tar Heels were in business.

Catcher John Shaw followed with a slicing double down the left field line which plated Talbott and Bonczek for a 2-0 lead.

Leonard Helps Himself

With two down in the fourth, pitcher Beattie Leonard poled a one - hop drive against the left - center field fence. Bob Hume promptly cracked a single to right to score courtesy runner Larry Mills, but Hume was cut down trying to make second on the throw-in.

Right fielder Bob Bonczek made the biggest play of the game in the second inning when he threw out a Virginia runner at third base who was trying to move from first to third on a single.

Expansion Heads Agenda For ACC Spring Meeting

GREENSBORO (AP) — Four major issues are on the agenda for the spring meeting of the Atlantic Coast Conference May 5-6, including Clemson's proposal that Virginia Tech be admitted to the circuit July 1.

Virginia Tech's admission as the conference's ninth member actually was before the conference session in December but the matter never officially came to the floor. A new proposal by Clemson apparently will bring the matter to a vote.

At the same time, North Carolina State has recommended that a study committee consider whether the conference should be expanded, "and if so, to what number."

The committee would be empowered to "make a study of institutions to whom invitations to membership should be extended and to recommend the order of priority to such institutions."

The second important item on Commissioner Jim Weaver's agenda concerns limitations in the number of football and basketball scholarship. The ACC, effective July 1, will limit grants to 35 incoming football and five basketball players. The present 140 total would be eliminated.

Wake Forest, however, has asked the conference to reconsider the 140 total. It has joined with Maryland in asking a limit of 35 for incoming football and 20 in basketball. These limits would include scholarships of any kind—academic as well as athletic.

A third matter on the agenda deals with football scheduling. A proposal by the conference committee on constitation and by-laws seeks to have the schools arrange the six-game conference schedudl "prior to making contractural arrangements with any teams outside the conference."

The fourth major item, also placed by the bylaws committee, would have all requirements—such as the 800 college entrance board point minimum and the NCAA's 1.6 grades point ratio-apply for participation in intercollegiate athletics, regardless of whether the athlete has a grant. The committee proposed that this become effective immediately and include all sports.

Booters Make Final 23; Will Be Watched

Two members of the UNC varsity soccer team, Jackie Writer and Jim Hammer, were put on an alternate list for the 1968 U. S. Olympic soccer squad.

Hammer and Writer were among 70 players who tried out for the team. The Tar Heel pair survived the first day cut which left only 23 men. The second day sliced the squad to 15 and Writer and Hammer were among those to go.

UNC coach Marvin Allen said that the boys were put on the alternate list and will be watched carefully during the next collegiate soccer season.

Of Girls And Mythology

By Carol Gallant

One area of myth the Symposium did not cover — possibly because there are few experts in the field—is the myth concerning American women, specifically the Southern woman.

Having lived only 21 years, I am far from qualified to write the definite article on the role of the woman in society. There are some interesting ideas to be reckoned with in this area, however, and having made it through college without a ring or a teaching degree, I am forced to consider them.

Some years ago an article appeared in Look which was concerned with the wasting of America's greatest natural resource — women. Wholeheartedly agreeing that women do not develop themselves to their fullest potential and that the loss is not only theirs but the country's, I set out to achieve that marvelous appellation "career woman."

Having been already exposed somewhat to the connotations of said name, I am forced to concede that America may be wasting its greatest natural resource, but the American man and the woman, care little for changing the situation. The roles have been defined and it is much too difficult to change them.

True, women become judges, lawyers, executives, sheriffs but this is still considered a novelty. Since the female species is not (admit it fellows) inately less intelligent than the male, some interesting question are raised. Why do women who have the opportunity and the ability to become successful in their chosen field of study, turn to marriage at an early age (About one day after graduation)?

The answer here is perhaps rather obvious.

A woman is a woman first, a success in business or whatever, second. Her major role, and the most challenging role, is to become a good wife and mother. Far be it from me to be against God, country, or motherhood. I'm a woman myself and subject to the usual "Oh, isn't that a darling baby" seizures.

However, and this is the important point, what I can be against is the woman relagating herself (I use this term because in this situation it is applicable) to a kitchen, P.T.A. meetings, socks with holes in them, "Love of Life" at noon and bridge parties, not because of a desire to fill her role in society as a wife and mother, but because marriage is the thing to do.

Herein lies a myth that is so widely accepted that even to conceive of it as a myth may be sacrilege. A woman does not have to choose between becoming a woman or an "individual."

An American female can be as active in world affairs, in the business world as her male counterpart without losing her femininity or her ability to be a good wife and mother. The idea that seems to have taken hold is that it must be one or the other.

Some men may nod in agreement, cluck appreciately at my perception and these are the same men that will treat me as a green freak if they should meet me at the ripe old age of 24 in a Press Row, a business office or a Senate Chamber instead of a supermarket. "Well, she can be like that. I want a wife that wants to stay home and take care of the kids. That's a woman's place."

am trying to make is there is more than one place. American women are versatile and their intelligence enables them to decide what talents to use where and when.

There is a pressure, subtle to be sure, but still a pressure, to get a woman married off and safely tucked away. It is ridiculous to me, and it is the right of girls who do not see it this way (and there are many) to laugh in my face, for a girl of 21 or 22, with a college degree, no draft to worry about, no real obligations, to decide to settle down immediately to something she'll be doing the rest of her life anyway.

Love is a beautiful thing. If a girl has discovered THE ONE it is perhaps ridiculous to postpone marriage. Share the young years. But, if marriage and the object of one's affection is only that, an object, something is rotten in the state of the American woman's mind.

She should not feel cold fear at being pushed from the ivy - covered walls, engagedless, but anticipation. She does not. Why? Because the woman's role has been defined for her, not by her, since she made her first mud pie. It's time to start making those pies. If she doesn't she is obviously "different."

The Southern Woman

I spoke earlier of the myth of the Southern woman because I feel that in this section the myth is more firmly entrenched and more widely accepted. "The flower of Southern womanhood" is a joke as far as most people are concerned, but they live as if it were a reality. The stereotyped "Magnolia blossom," sweet, innocent, naive, above all dependent, is as old as "Gone With the Wind" and has suffered twenty times as many reruns. People laugh at this also.

Laugh, but consider how widely accepted girls from liberal institutions in the North would be on this campus. Their mode of dress is different, their attitudes different, their thinking different and brother you'd better treat them as an equal because they've got the brains and words to prove they are. Dependent? Like a 7-month-old wild-cat.

I'm not saying that all Northern girls are independent and destined to play an important role in society, and that all southern women are sheltered and destined to never thinking of anything larger than the institution of marriage. There is basis for the stereotypes in both cases.

Few people would label any college girl sweet and naive, but one has only to look at the differing rules for women at institutions in the North and South, to see a reflection of a "Gone With The Wind" attitude.

"Eleven o'clock closing hours?! Are you kidding me? No apartments? What are they protecting you from? Don't they think you can take care of yourselves?"

Nope, and there is not really too much to do about it without changing the whole Southern attitude towards just about everything. The nice thing about Southern myths is that they are so neatly interwoven, that you can't destroy one without destroying them all, and who would dare do this? Who is to say they are all bad anyway?

The marvelous thing about Carolina is that it is so liberal and we frequently remind ourselves of this. But in two years time I have met few men who would really like to see the same rules for men and women, or few women for that matter. We are obviously not ready to "liberate" southern women and they obviously don't want to be liberated from their mythical pedastals. The Southern woman is safe, warm, and secure. This makes her feel feminine and protected. This makes him feel strong and masculine.

How much more of a challenge to live in the "cold, cruel world," to compete, strive, and at the same time remain a woman, feminine and mysterious. How much more of a challenge to a man to be a man to such a woman.

CLASS IN THE GRASS—And why not? If the weather's right and the prof is willing what's to stop outdoor learning? Jean Guilliou and his French 22 class certainly have nothing against the idea.

'In The Spring, A Young Man's Fancy Turns To...'

By SOPHIE PARKER
Special to the DTH

Does a Carolina Gentleman's fancy really turn to engagement and marriage in the spring?

Yes! Chapel Hill Jewelry stores say sale of engagement rings increases as the weather turns warmer.

"March, April and May are the months when diamond rings are really in demand," said Mrs. Richmond Sloan of Wentworth and Sloan Jewelers.

"Of course there are more weddings planned for June than any other time of the year."

Mrs. Charles Hopkins of Charles Hopkins Jewelers agreed that purchases of diamond rings increase in the spring and before Christmas and Valentine's Day.

"It used to be that most purchases of diamond rings were during the months of April, May and June . . . now it's year - round," said Mrs. T. L. Kemp of T. L. Kemp Jewelry.

Most popular styles are the 4 - prong and 6 - prong tiffany settings according to Mrs. Kemp.

"Increasingly popular are the emerald and marquis cuts."

Modern style settings are as popular as the traditional tiffany setting at Wentworth and Sloan's.

Many boys still follow the traditional custom of purchasing the ring alone, said Mrs. Kemp.

Another Communist scholar, Dr. Hanus Popusek, a behavoral scientist from Prague, Czechoslavakia and visiting professor at the University of Denver, will speak at psychology classes here on May 9 and 10.

Straley told the DTH that the appearances of the three Communists are not restricted by the Speaker Ban's new regulations. Speakers invited by faculty members do not require the approval of Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson.

Sitterson was sent an invitation to hear Job, as a professor of history, but has made no comment on Straley's invitation to Job.

Sitterson told the DTH yesterday that he had not enough information on hand to make an effective comment, but added, "If the group considers him an appropriate figure to invite, then I have no objection."

Job was born in Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, in 1926 and studied law and sociology at the University of Belgrade. He joined the Yugoslavian Communist Party in 1944.

been broadcast around the state.

"I also enjoyed the insights I had into the power structure of North Carolina — the trustees and legislators — in trying to strengthen UNC's position on issues from the budget to academic freedom," Powell says.

Speaking about the Speaker Ban issue, the member of Chi Psi and Order of the Grail is very optimistic about the court's decision being in our favor. We wouldn't have gone into it if we didn't think so."

Powell, former executive director of the Carolina Forum, spoke before a Committee for Free Inquiry rally before the campaign and is one of the 12 student plaintiffs for the Speaker Ban suit.

As far as his plans for the coming year, Powell has been interviewing for the past week applicants for Student Government committee chairmanships.

Aside from other projects mentioned in his platform, he says, "We are moving ahead on the International Students Center, which was frozen last year. It wasn't part of my platform, but I would like to see the house established."

Powell's theme during the campaign was, "We're concerned," so the reporter asked if he was concerned about certain issues on campus.

In regard to alleged charges of racial discrimination of the hiring of professors at Chapel Hill, he says he knows of "no policy of discrimination That is clearly illegal."

The policy of the athletic department in recruiting ath- "should be looked into," he asserts.

"If in fact there is a policy of discrimination, we're passing up a lot of good talent. Many fine Negro athletes from the state have gone elsewhere. Schools like Wake Forest and Maryland have begun to recruit Negro athletes with success."

He's "concerned with excellence in teaching" and plans to follow through with the proposed Long - Range Studies Department, which will review curricula, student mental health and the overall cultural development of the campus.

Symposium Hailed As 'Big Success'

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Carolina Symposium Chairman George Butler called last week's Symposium program a "distinct success."

The senior from Montego Bay, Jamaica, pointed out three criteria for evaluating its success, which were well fulfilled.

The amount of attention given it throughout the state and country, the first criterion, was evidenced by the coverage of John Kenneth Galbraith's speech on national television and even on the front page of the Springfield (Mass.) Herald.

Butler was very satisified, secondly, by the "number of people who attended the Symposium," and, thirdly, by the "great amount the Symposium stimulated University life."

Butler said he was very pleased with the quality of speakers for the program. "Not all the speakers stuck to the subject," he added, "but it's difficult to expect them to stay within the confines of the topic."

The speakers were sent copies of the program, he said. "If you restrict speakers to say what you want them to say, they won't come. We had to depend largely on their consciences, but Al Capp doesn't have a conscience!"

Speaking of the Symposium's massive staff, Butler said, "The Symposium attracts the brightest, most worldly students on campus to it staff.

However they weren't selected simply because of their high averages, but for their other talents.

"The individual initiative shown by them was remarkable. It would be impossible to single out even a few who should be commended."

The Inter Collegiate Seminar segment of the Symposium was a "resounding success," according to Butler. Some of the 41 students from other schools stayed over for an extra day or so, he added.

One problem Butler saw in the program was budgetary. "Student Government didn't give as much as we wanted. Lyons Gray did a great job in attracting outside funds from the state. We were able to collect the largest amount of money ever contributed by these sources.

"A problem is created, though, in that the Symposium is now more dependent on organizations and businesses outside Student Government for funds."

Butler related several anedotes about the speakers, including historian Daniel

Bulletin

RALEIGH—The law firm of Joyner and Howison of Raleigh was retained by Governor Dan K. Moore yesterday afternoon to prepare a defense in student suit against the Communist speaker ban law.

The governor, as chairman of the Consolidated University Board of Trustees, is one of the defendants named by the 12 students and two controversial speakers in the suit filed March 31 in Federal District Court in Greensboro.

Col. W. T. Joyner of the law firm was a member of the special nine member Britt commission which studied the gag law and recommended its amendment last fall.

The case is expected to come before the three judge court in Greensboro before the end of this month, now that the counsel for the defense has been named.

PARTING SHOTS — Maturity will obviously be the keynote of the Parting Shots session for the graduating seniors tonight at 7:30 in Memorial Hall. Showing their poise by demonstrating grown-up methods in tree climbing, seniors George Butler, top, Armistead Maupin, middle, and Bernard Baldwin, bottom, are caught by gun-totin' Zackie Murphy. By the way, all students, mature or not, are invited to attend tonight.

Gripe Group Hits Senior Grievances

Hot air will fill the room at Memorial Hall tonight as seniors take their "Farewell Stand" and vent their gripes against all varieties of UNC institutions — studying, Dean Long, parking places, Otelia, red envelopes, etc.

The frightful festivities will get underway at 7:30 and everyone is invited. Leading the gripe group will be George Butler, Armistead Maupin, Bernard Baldwin, and Zacki Murphy. It is rumored that Zacki will have a presentation uniquely her own.

In preparation for this evening's events, several statements were issued to the DTH:

Armistead Maupin: "By tradition, the "Parting Shots" assembly is an occiaion of gratitude and good will. This is a very depressing tradition. Something should be done about it immediately. Gratitude and good will are a direct violation of my rights as a student."

Bernard Baldwin: "After being a member of the Zeta Psi fraternity here at Carolina for four years, I feel that I have received the most liberal education possible despite the efforts of Dean Long to prevent it."

George Butler: "I foresee intense significance in the fact that the class of '66 is graduating on the morning of 6-6-66. Amongst other things I am sure we will be spending the rest of our lives attempting to determine whether we graduated on the 6th day of the 6th month or in the sixth month on the sixth day of 1966. Only those with a sixth sense will be able to tell us."

Derby Today Will Feature Coeds Battle

The twenty - second annual Sigma Chi Derby will be held this afternoon in Kenan Stadium.

This year's event will feature competition between the seven campus sororities in six big events.

Traditionally called "The Battle of the Coeds," the day's activities will begin with a parade leaving the Planetarium parking lot at 2 p.m.

The parade will wind by South Building and should arrive at Kenan Stadium at 2:30 for the competition.

The first event is the "Grand National." It is a relay involving five girls from each sorority. The next event will be a limbo contest.

Then the "Hit the Geek" contest will begin. A geek is a fraternity boy who the girls attempt to hit with chocolate pie.

Then there will be two mystery events. In the past, this has included such events as milking cows and egg breaking contests.

The last event is the "Miss Modern Venus" contest. Viewers wil chhoose the winner from two representatives of each sorority. The representatives are usually dressed in either swim suits or short shorts.

Trophies will be awarded to the winner of each event and to the over-all winner. The overall winner is chosen on the basis of 5 points for a win, 3 for placing and 1 for showing. Law year, Kappa Kappa Gamma won.

Door prizes will be awarded. There is no admission charge.

The Sigma Chi Derby was begun in the early 1930's at the University of California and is now held at over 100 Sigma Chi chapter in the United States.

It began here in 1944.

Honor System Week Tries To Inform, Stem Offenses

By TAYLOER BRANCH
Special to the DTH

The purpose of Honor System Week, April 24-30, is twofold.

First, the speakers will attempt to impart to the student body a thorough knowledge of the honor system as it is today. They will appear in informal meetings in the campus residence hall, fraternities and sororities.

The second objective of the speakers is to acquaint the students with the target areas of Honor System reform, which are numerous. The codes and courts have evolved over a period of some years into a workable system. There are, however, many who feel that the process of evolution must be prodded in several fields, and greatly accelerated in others.

A detailed explanation of the functional processes of the judicial set-up is beyond the limits of this article. I leave it to the week's speakers, but there are a few points which I consider vital and worthy of emphasis here:

1. The most frequent penalty for an Honor Code violation is one semester's suspension. The prevalence of extenuating circumstances causes many deviations from this trend when lying is the offense, but it is fairly consistent to cheating and stealing.

There is a disturbing ignorance of this fact reflected on quizzes during orientation, and it is an object of great concern when a student receives a penalty completely out of the range of his expectation.

2. The Honor Council is quite judicious and fair in seeing that the rights of the defendant are protected. As far as humanly possible, the accused is considered innocent until proven guilty. Moreover, council for or against a defendant are excluded from voting in his trial.

3. Drunkenness is considered as neither cause for further indictment nor license for leniency when related to an offense. Blatant public drunkenness, however, is listed as a Campus Code violation in itself.

4. The Honor Council does not have the right to expel a student from school permanently. It may suspend him indefinitely — a penalty effective until the Honor Council or Faculty Review Board accepts a petition for readmittance.

Many of the proposed judicial reforms are not subject to searing theoretical controversies, but are simply measures to expedite the trial process. Such changes as mechanical means of recording trials, better training of the Attorney General's staff, and adequate separation of the campus and honor codes need to be effected immediately.

The deeper elements of Honor System reform need to be considered more carefully. A partial list of the ideas discussed thus far includes the following: the applicability of the system during vacations, the second half of the Honor Code, the penalty of suspension, the location of disciplinary authority, the degree of student autonomy, the oblication of students to the University, and means to make the system more effective.

In subsequent articles Dean Long, Jim Aplin, and I will outline the issues involved in several of these areas. I hope that constructive student response will be stimulated. Please remember that the Honor System will be neither static nor ineffective unless the student body allows it, and that partial solutions are usually worthless. The matter definitely deserves much thought.

Student Party Elects Hobgood As Party Exec

Sandy Hobgood, a junior from Greensboro, was unanimously elected chairman of the Student Party Sunday night.

Other officers elected were Myles Eastwood, policy vice-chairman; Hurley Thompson, administrative vice-chairman; and Jed Dietz, Jim Little and Ann Brownless, to the advisory board.

Ann Belcher was re-elected secretary; Stu Rosen was unanimously elected treasurer; and Joe Auten was selected as sergeant - at - arms.

Hobgood announced in his speech that he would form a board of visitors to increase membership in the party, a "Powder Puff Advisory Board" of coeds to find party appeals to women on campus and a party historian to compile a history of the SP.

Hobgood, a second - term legislator from Joyner, asserted that "the line which divides SP-UP ideology is far less distinct than when I became a party member some two years ago.

"No longer are we clearly the party of opportunity; no longer are we clearly the party of an open forum; no longer are we clearly the party of action."

He urged the party to improve its image and campaign actively to recruit more freshmen and women members.

"We shall encourage more attention to the party's role as an investigatory body and an initiator of action from Student Government," he declared.

There is no entry fee but the regulations stipulate that prices are set by the student and 20 per cent of the price goes to Smith treasury. The other 80 per cent is clear profit for the student.

Entries may be made in any media: oils, charcoal, watercolor, etc. artistically composed photographs no smaller ttan 8 by 10 may also be entered. Each work entered must be framed, stripped or matted (white matting is usuaily more successful in presentation).

Last week's Campus Traffic Safety Committee meeting was devoted to a discussion of the motorcycle problem on campus, according to Asst. Dean of Men Bob Kepner.

Kepner would not release the topic for tomorrow's meeting of the committee.

He said that the present situation indicates that automobile parking policies for next year will be the same as this year's.

Jubilee Location Should Be Changed

Oh, my aching back!

This was a not infrequently-heard comment from UNC students who sat on the up hill slope of Polk Place watching last year's Jubilee performers on the stage just behind South Building.

Present plans call for this year's festivities to be held in the same location.

If this is done, it could well keep a good Jubilee from being a great one.

We think it would be much more sensible to have the entertainers at the opposite end of the quadrangle, in front of the library.

Here's why:

— It is a complicated, if not impossible, task to manipulate the human body into a comfortable position sitting on the ground when one's feet is higher than his head.

— It is difficult to see the stage when one is sitting on a lower level than everyone between himself and the stage.

— The afternoon sun beams down onto the quad from above South Building, making it uncomfortable for persons to look in that direction to see the show.

Graham Memorial officials' main objection to reversing the situation of the entertainers is four fold:

First, they say it is more convenient for the showmen to dress for performances if the stage is at the upper end of the quad. Last year a trailer was placed behind the stage for this purpose.

Second, they point out that construction of the stage has already begun at the upper end, and it would cost around $350 to move the operation now.

Third, they are concerned abut the noise factor which would disturb students who might be studying in the library if the show is moved.

Fourth, they contend that the increased number of trees at the south end of the quad would impair the vision of spectators.

As for the dressing room, it seems that it would be just as easy to place a trailer at the lower end of Polk Place as it was to put one behind South Building.

And as for the $350, that seems a rather insignificant sum when we consider that this is the one big campus-wide entertainment weekend of the whole year.

If the funds cannot be raised, we suggest a small admission charge for the first night's show. If 5,000 students attend, a fee of seven-cents would cover the bill. We feel sure most students would be willing to shoulder this financial burden.

Now concerning the noise around the library, we might first ask, who uses the library during Jubilee? But we would also like to point out that with the stage at the upper end of the quad, all the sound is aimed directly toward the library.

Whereas, if the microphones were facing away from the library, it seems that most of the sound should be carried away.

Finally, we are amused that the arguments of too many trees should pop up. When plans were first announced to move Jubilee from the lawn of GM to Polk Place, one of the loudest-voiced objections was that the setting would not be as pretty because there are no trees behind South Building.

If students didn't object to watching the show through the trees of McCorkle place, we doubt they would mind the light forest of Polk Place.

We hope this matter will be given due concern and that every attempt will be made to move the Jubilee stage to this more comfortable, more attractive and more practical location.

Don't Miss It

Man, Mind and Myth left Memorial Hall last week.

But you can be sure that man's mind has seldom produced better myth than the uproarious barbs that will fly through the auditorium tonight when the Class of '66 presents its "Parting Shots" at 7:30.

Satiric columnist Armistead Maupin heads the bill of four senior men — including Bernard Baldwin, Tom White and George Butler — who have been plotting for weeks in an attempt to find something to rival what has been termed a "particularly unique performance" which will be presented by Zacki Murphey.

If you have a yearning to hear everybody from Dean C. O. Cathey to the manager of one of the local pubs be taken apart by a four-year accumulation of Sarcastic Acid, we suggest you stop by Memorial tonight.

They tell us everybody's invited.

Was Eminent Diety

God Dies In Atlanta: An Obituary

(Editor's note — Below is part of an article that appeared in the Methodist youth magazine Motive and which has been reprinted elsehwere in several papers.)

ATLANTA, Ga. — God, creator of the universe, principal diety of the world's Jews, ultimate reality of Christians, and most eminent of all divinities died late yesterday during major surgery undertaken to correct a massive diminishing influence. His exact age is not known, but close friends estimate that it greatly exceded that of all other extant beings.

The cause of death could not be immediately determined, but the diety's surgeon, Thomas J. Altizer, 38, of Emory University in Atlanta, indicated possible cardiac insufficiency. Assisting Dr. Altizer in the unsuccessful surgery were Dr. Paul Van Buren of Temple University, Philadelphia; Dr. William Hamilton of Colgate - Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.; and Dr. Gabriel Vanhanian of Syracuse University, Syracuse, N.Y.

Word of the death, long rumored, was disclosed officially to reporters at five minutes before midnight after a full day of mounting anxiety and the comings and goings of ecclesiastical dignitaries.

In Johnson City, Tex., President Johnson was described by aides as "profoundly upset." He at once directed all flags should be at half - staff until after the funeral.

The First Lady and the two presidential daughters Luci and Lynda were understood to have wept openly. Both houses of Congress met in Wahington at noon today and promptly adjourned after passing a joint resolution expressing "grief and great respect for the departed leader." Sen. Wayne Morse, Democrat of Oregon, objected on the grounds that the resolution violated the principle of separation of Church and state. But he was overruled by Vice President Hubert Humphrey who remarked that "this is not a time for partisan politics."

Reaction from the world's great and from the man in the street was uniformly incredulous. "At least he is out of his misery," commented one housewife in an Elimira, N. Y., supermarket. "I can't believe it," said the Right Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Protest Episcopal Bishop of New York.

In Paris, President de Gaulle in a 30 - second appearance on national television proclaimed "God is dead! Long live the republic! Long live France!" News of the death was included in a one - sentence statement, without comment, on the third page of Izvestia, official organ of the Soviet government. The passing of God has not been disclosed to the 800 million Chinese who live behind the bamboo curtain.

Public reaction in this country perhaps was summed up by an elderly retired streetcar conductor in Passaic, N. J., who said: "I never have met him, of course. Never even saw him. But from what I heard I guess he was a real nice fellow. Tops." From Independence, Mo., former President Harry S. Truman, who received the news in his Kansas City barber shop, said: "I am always sorry to hear somebody is dead. It's a damn shame."

In Gettysburg, Pa., former President Dwight D. Eisenhower released through a military aide the following statement: "Mrs. Eisenhower joins me in heartfelt sympathy to the family and many friends of the late God. He was, I always felt, a force for moral good in the universe. Those of us who were privileged to know him admired the probity of his character, the breadth of his compassion, the depth of his intellect. Generous almost to a fault, his many acts of kindness never will be foregotten. It was a very great loss indeed. He will be missed.

Dr. Altizer, God's surgeon, in an exclusive interview with the Times, stated this morning that the death was "not unexpected." "He had been ailing for some time," Dr. Altizer said, "and lived much longer than most of us thought possible." He noted that the death of God, had, in fact, been prematurely announced in the last century by the famed German surgeon, Nietzche.

Neitzche who was insane the last 10 years of his life, may have confused "certain symtoms of morbidity in the aged patient with actual death, a mistake an busy surgeon will make occasionally." Dr Altizer suggested "God was an excellen patient, compliant, cheerful, alert. Ever comfort modern science could provide wa made available to him. He did not suffer He just, as it were, slipped out of grasp

"Just Practicing for Jubilee!"

Local TV Programs Are Bad News

Editor's note — This is the second in a two - part series.)

By RICHARD KLEIN

For some years now one of the top 50 television markets —as recorded in the annual Television Factbook — has been cheated of a major network affiliate. Chapel Hill - Raleigh - Durham have received few programs from the National Broadcasting Company, including most educational and news programs, since WRAL-TV in Raleigh switched its affiliation to the American Broadcasting Company several years ago.

A remedy in the near future is not seen. Once Raleigh had a UHF (ultra high frequency) station which enabled this area to view all three networks and enjoy the benefits of Chapel Hill's educational channel four. But since channel 28 signed off, NBC has been lost in the shuffle.

Even when NBC filmed the recent visit of Controversial Herbert Aptheker on the UNC campus, people in the Research Triangle were unable to view the report which was shown on the Huntley Brinkley news program.

Ironically most people in this area are able to receive well two CBS stations (WTVD and WFMY-TV) and two ABC stations (WRAL-TV and WGHP-TV), but no NBC affiliate. The closest ones are in Winston - salem and Washington, N. C.

WRAL-TV in Raleigh, owned by the Capitol Broadcasting Company, had long provoked many people with its ultra - conservative views. The station opened itself to much more criticism — even from other North Carolina stations — when it decided to shift from NBC to ABC. The switch was primarily for financial reasons, a top executive at WRAL-TV said. ABC was extremely anxious to blanket North Carolina and, in a short while after a small fortune was spent, the network was able to get three new affiliates (Raleigh, New Bern and High Point).

Durham's WTVD allows NBC to play a poor second-fiddle to its primary BS programs.

Some groups have talked off and on about trying to put channel 28 back on the air as the new NBC affiliate (it was CBS before), but not much has happened in the way of action. One of the most mentioned names as a prospective owner of the new station is former - Governor Terry Sanford.

Lacking also in this market which contains more than 560,000 homes are stations affiliated with two of the national radio networks.

On the other hand, this market is one of the few in the state that has an educational television station; one that is affiliated with National Educational Television.

A Residence College Gets Its Pin: Candid Descriptions And Praise

Kudos are in order today to the men of the Lambda Mu Nu chapter of Mighty Mom Residence College. After several months of waiting, their pins have finally arrived. Having been privileged enough to view these exquisite pieces of jewelry, it is evident that they are well worth the long wait.

They are definitely worth every bit of the 79 cents the men of Labmda Mu Nu paid for them. Those men who put down their quarter deposit can pick up their pins any morning between five and seven on Intramural Field four until next Tuesday.

The pins are a sight to behold, and fair maidens from California to Carolina will be honored to wear them. The pin itself is three - sided, with each side representing one of the three attributes every MM should strive for — humility, servility, and virility.

Each pin is manufactured from the finest tin known to man, cut from the bottom of Blue Ribbon cans, and is set with forty-five simulated rhinestones. The Lambda Mu Nu chapter guard is also made of the same high - quality tin, but is set with the pick of the finest ersatz pearls. To keep costs down, the chain connecting the pin and the guard is made of interwoven tea leaves.

However, the beauty of the pin is not its only attribute. The front of the pin itself slides back to reveal a full - color picture, complete with autograph, of Otis Redding. If the 32nd rhinestone is pressed, a fine stream of a mixture of Tabasco saude and vinegar is shot forth. This will prove expecially useful to the Men of MM for the liquid will repel any would-be attacker.

The 43rd rhinestone slides back to reveal a miniature combination stilletto and dog whistle. The guard is equally as useful. If the upper half of the Mu portion is removed, a full - color cheesecake picture of Better Davis becomes visible. The lower half of the Lambda portion is actually a two - way radio, useful to call Bat Dean to your aid. From this description, it is not hard to see why the boys of Mighty Mom were more than willing to pay 79 cents for these little gems.

Lady Regent Resigns Over Md. Gag Law Opposition

BALTIMORE, Md. (CPS) — A 33-year veteran of the Board of Regents of the University of Maryland has resigned her post in protest of the board's policy regarding Communist speakers on the Maryland Campus.

Mrs. John L. Whitehurst said in a letter to Maryland Governor J. Millard Tawes that she was quitting because the board had gone on record as opposing a speaker ban law that was then pending before the state legislature.

The bill was never reported out of committee before Maryland's Legislature adjourned two weeks ago. Had it passed, the bill would have required the governing bodies of each state school to "announce and apply a firm rule prohibiting any Communist sympathizer from speaking or participating in any program" on their campus.

Six large veterans groups in Maryland immediately went on record supporting Mrs. Whitehurst, the only woman ever to serve on the Maryland regents. The groups released a statement "to focus attention on the deplorable lack of understanding displayed by the board of regents." The statement said "it is certainly regretable that more members of the regents have not attained your (Mrs. Whitehurst's) stature and they will stand by while the insidious Red propagandists undermine our educational system."

Signing the policy statement for their groups were the commanders of the state's American Legion, Catholic War Veterans Disabled American Veterans, Jewish War Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Veterans of World War I.

The original legislature resolution was also prompted by these groups, Maryland Jewish War Veteran Commander Meyer Sokolow said. He said the groups would continue to push for a speaker ban and "we'll be right back there (the legislature) next time."

The events that led to Mrs. Whitehurst's resignation began on March 25 when the speaker ban question was discussed at a regents meeting. The bill pending before the legislature was condemned by the regents, the lone dissenter of the action being Mrs. Whitehurst.

Pruett Awarded Research Grant

Dr. James W. Pruett, librarian of the UNC Music Library, has been awarded a research grant for work at The Newberry Library in Chicago.

The grant was made by the library itself, which is a privately - endowed one designed to aid research, and will be used during the summer when Dr. Pruett goes to Chicago.

His project is an historical and stylistic study of the Requiem Mass setting since 1600 and will involve both printed sources and manuscripts.

No other book like this now exists.

Dr. Pruett joined the UNC faculty in 1961. His B. A., M.A. and Ph.D. are all from here and he is a member of the American Musicological Society.

Visiting Russian Studies Professor Explains Communist Cultural Views

By JOAN PAGE

There is a pendulum in the Soviet Union that swings periodically between the left and right with regard to government controls over writers, reports an American authority on Russian literature.

"There is evidence of a conservative - liberal split in cultural matters among top Soviet Communist Party officials," says Prof. Ernest J. Simmons of Wesleyan University, who is responsible for development of Rusian area studies in the United States.

While the Communist Party is fundamentally and ideologically identified with conservatives, some party members have liberal attitudes and others favor strict suppression. The Party, he explains, tries to maintain a balance of controls between liberals and conservatives.

Simmons is spending the week in Chapel Hill, lecturing and meeting with faculty and students at UNC and Duke. His visit is sponsored by the Cooperative Program in the Humanities. He formerly taught at Harvard, Cornell and Columbia and has written books on many of Russia's leading authors.

Simmons has visited the Soviet Union numerous times since 1928, most recently at the invitation of the Soviet Academy of Sciences last fall. He was in Moscow at the time of the arrest of Russian writers Sinyavsky and Daniel last September. The Soviet press, he points out, did not mention the incident until the last of November.

The writers' publicized trial and recent sentencing to labor camps for publishing slanderous comments against the Soviet government and socialism Simmons sees as a definite swing to the right in controls.

"Sinyavsky and Daniel were picked as an example to warn liberal writers of the government theory that it is possible for a critic of the regime to become unpatriotic, turn into a traitor, and maybe even become an enemy agent," says Simons.

These two authors were selected for public trial and punishment, he believes because they were virtually unknown in the Soviet Union, there was no great public sentiment for them, contents of their books were scarcely known and they had published their material under pseudonyms.

As another sign of shift towards conservatism, Simmons points to the Soviet press' recent insistence that the country's economic policy, namely the new five - year plan launched last fall, be incorporated and reflected in art.

While there is no revolt among liberal writers and intellectuals in the Soviet Union, they continue, as in the days of the Czar, to be spokesmen for the inarticulate opposition or "muted masses". They are the people making demands for some degree of free expression.

"They don't have a forum. The press and all publications are controlled." Simmons observes. "These liberals are patriotic and loyal to the regime, but express their views in channels open to them."

The swing toward the left in Soviet literature began with Etalin's death and was stimulated by Khrushchev's public denouncement of Stalin, the professor recalls. Liberal writers took this denouncement as a green light to present Soviet life as it existed and to criticize evils of Stalinism.

"Stalin's death created hope for a humanized communism —a system that would allow a certain degree of civil rights, freedom of expression and movement, and a larger measure of democratic procedures," says Simmons.

He cites three major trends in the liberalization movement in Soviet literature since Stalin's death. One is an emphasis on new talent and "the real truth" in literature, as opposed to propagandized material on life in the Soviet Union.

Secondly, there is keen interest in early Soviet writers, reflected in a revival of works of authors squelched during the Stalin era. Thirdly, there is cultivation and wide publication of Soviet personal memoirs. Customs and behavior patterns of the past are being described for the first time.

In addition, Soviet writers are probing problems in their society the same as American writers do. Negative heros, alienated citizens and the seamy side of Soviet life are appearing in print.

The government has allowed liberalization in cultural affairs at times because the Party places great store in good art and literature. It learned from the Stalin era that restraints lead to sterility in art and that conservatives have vested interests in moderation produced by controls.

Simmons recalls several "crack - downs" on the liberalization movement in art since Stalin's death. The repression in Poland in 1957 led to certain restrictions. And in 1962-63, Khrushchev publicly attacked an abstract art exhibit.

Careful observation, Simmons concludes, reveals that periods between the pendulum swing from left to right are getting shorter. For example, the government followed up the Sinyavsky - Daniel trial with an abstract art exhibit.

"Because many Western communists and editors criticized the trial, and 40 Soviet intellectuals and writers signed a petition against it, the government decided to throw this art exhibit as a bone to the liberals," Simmons says.

While the pendulum swing in controls is by no means the ideal of free expression, Simmons feels it indicates slow, steady progress toward improvement of a system of absolute controls under Stalin.

Humphrey Says US Must Win Viet Nam War

NEW YORK (AP) — Vice President Hubert Humphrey said yesterday the United States must show the Communists that "the price of aggression in Viet Nam is too high."

"In the infected finger of Asia we must see that the success of this aggression is prevented," he said. "Success leads to further aggression. Not only is Viet Nam at stake here, but peace in Asia—and for all we know, the world."

He said if America is to lead the world it must "see it through" because "We are being watched by friend and foe to see if we can take it."

Humphrey addressed the annual meeting of the associated press at the Waldorf-Astoria after a business session at which seven vacanies were filed on the board of directors.

Referring to critics of American policy in Viet Nam, the vice president said:

"Many people say we should not be there. Well, we are there. I'm not going to argue about that, because that's ancient history. We have intervened by request, by treaty, and by commitment."

As the vice president addressed the news executives, about 10 pickets marched outside the Park Avenue address to the hotel, chanting "Stop the war in Viet Nam." One carried a sign which read: "H. H. Humphrey — Johnson's War Salesman." They were identified as members of Youth Against War and Fascism.

Humphrey said "I've heard we ought not to be there because the French couldn't win. Well, we're not the French, with all due respect to that fine nation. We have no empire to save."

Some people have called it a civil war — "and they ought to know better," said Humphrey. "The war is being waged by the National Liberation Front (Viet Cong). That's the only honest word in it. It's a front. It's a front for Hanoi."

He said the internal turmoil within South Viet Nam today is proof that American intervention has turned the tide of battle. "The struggle for power is the best evidence that we are beating the enemy," he said. Humphrey added:

"It seems to be free currency in the United States that if there was a free election in South Viet Nam the Communists would win. Well, I say, let them try it.

"I ask that North Viet Nam also conduct a free and open electon. Let's see if the communists would wn there."

Humphrey said that American firmness in the past had paid off in peace. The fact that crises in Berlin, Greece, Cuba and Korea did not lead to world war "I think is in large part due to the fact that we had the courage to make hte decision."

The vice president said that in Viet Nam the United States is fighting "the classic power tactics of Communism." But, he said, the wider war in Asia is the ttrugle of the peasants against "mullienium of poverty, disease and despair."

"We must not lose the peace in either struggle," he said. ". . . If we are not to deny the principles in which we belive, we must stay and see it through."

United States Ends Mott Inquiry With Protest Note

MOSCOW (AP) — With an angry protest, the United States brought to an end yesterday its attempts to get more information on the death of Newcomb Mott on a Soveit prison train. A number of signs pointed to the possibility that he was slain by Russian fellow prisoners.

Mott, 27, an American tourist, died Jan. 20 en route to a labor camp to serve an 18-month sentence for illegally entering the Soviet Union.

A U. S. note delivered here protested a Soveit refusal to provide adequate information on the death. The note suggested that this left a suspicion that he was not a suicide.

The Russians said he showed "signs of abnormal behavior" and cut his throat with a razor blade.

But, it was reliably reported, there were no cuts or other marks on his hands of the kind that a razor — even a single - edge one, although a double - edge blade was indicated — would leave.

The gash across Mott's neck was larger than a man would normally be able to inflict on himself, even a 6-foot-5 man like Mott.

Sources knowledgeable in such matters said the 60 or so other cuts on Mott's arms and body were of a kind that a berserk man might inflict on himself. The body lacked bruises which might have resulted from a fight.

But the cuts were also the kind that might have been caused in an attack by a number of prisoners. The throat gash as quite possibly cuased by some weapon other than a razor blade, these informants said.

A number of Soviet sources with personal experience of prison life during the Stalin era said they thought the most likely explanation of the death was murder by prisoners.

Although political prisoners have been the most publicizied kind in the Soviet Union, there is also a very tough prisoner element of hardened professional criminals.

The Soviet sources suggested that Mott might have been killed in an argument or simply for the numerous personal possessions which he was allowed as an exception to normal Soviet prison rules.

His death came 4-1-2 months after his arerest but within a few days of his first exposure to Russian prisoners. He was earlier held in solitary confinement in Murmansk jial.

The Russiands said he was traveling in a private compartment of the railway prison car. They refused to disclose the chief guard's report or in any way give a complete description of events before, their report said, the guards "Noticed blood on M. Mott's body."

He had earlier been shouting, the report said. He "placed on the shelf a picture postcard of the Madonna."

This struck Westerners here as strange.

Mott had no known religious affiliation. The Madonna picture was not known to American officials to have been in his possession and was not included in his property which the Russians gave the embassy after death.

Nothing else in Mott's conduct as known here fitted the description which the Russian gave of a man who would go berserk.

Throughout the three -day trail in Murmansk Mott appeared mostly calm, except for a tendency to treat the proceedings a bit lightly. He was more concerned about the reaction of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Mott of Sheffield, Mass., who attended the trial, than his own personal problem.

Mott did not look to be a despondent, moody sort. He was learning to speak Russian and looking forward to his release when last seen by Amercians — as he entered a Soviet prison van on Nov. 14.

Doctor Says Heart Pump Should Not Be Patented

WASHINGTON (AP) — A doctor who helped develop the heart pump and put it into use for the first time on a human patient says the device will never be patented, but should be available for everyone.

Dr. Michael E. Debakey discussed this aspect with a House appropriations subcommittee on March 25 before he performed the pioneer six-hour operation last Thursday on 65-year-old Marcel DeRudder in Houston, Tex.

DeBakey explained the reason for not wanting to patent the pump in urging the subcommittee to provide more funds for the National Heart Institute's program for further refining the artificial heart.

"We do not get patents in the medical area . . .," he said in testimony made public tonight. "From our standpoint the only thing a patent would do would be to prevent someone from using it. We do not want that."

Members of the subcommittee suggested that the artifial heart is "a piece of hardware" and there is nothing to prevent someone else from filing a patent application on it.

"They tried to do this with my dacron - graft," DeBakey replied, referring to an artificial artery he developed some years ago, "but I had the evidence to prove . . . that we had prior use.

"The company that makes this (artery) for use, and makes it available to everyone, had their lawyers come down, and I gave them all the evidence, and they blocked the patent right away. We can do that with this heart."

DeBakey told the subcommittee that in order to push the program of refining the artificial heart as rapidly as possbile "the heart institute should have in the neighborhood of $20 to $25 million specifically for this purpose, at a minimum."

He said the present allotment is $5 million, $6 million, $7 million or something like that, and it is completely inadequate."

One of the first problems to be solved after it is demonstrated that the artificial heart can be successfully used in human beings, DeBakey said, is reducing the size of the machinery so that a patient would walk about conviently while using it. It now is about the size of a tennis ball and is attached on the outside of the patient's body.

"All of this is feasible," DeBakey said. "Engineers tell us they could go to work on this right now if we wanted them to."

High Court Accepts New Obscenity Case

WASHINGTON AP) — The Supreme Court set the stage yesterday for another bout with the touchy problem of legal obscenity. And it approved unanimously a temporary plan for reapportionment of the Hawaii senate.

The tribunal agreed to step again into the obscenity thicket by deciding whether a bookseller must know the contents of the publication before he can be convicted.

Three Justices, Hugo L. Black, William O. Douglas and Potter Stewart, wanted to go further and decide whether the material in the two cases it agreed to hear fits its obscenity standards. This could have caused the court to reevaluate the standards themselves, but the effort failed because the vote of four Justices was required.

The booksellers who won their day in court were William L. Austin, a Kentucky bookstore operator who was fined $250 for selling two allegedly obscene magazines, and Robert Redrup, a New York City newsstand clerk who got a suspended sentence for selling two assertedly obscene books to a policeman.

Both Austin and Redrup said they knew nothing of the contents of the publications. The main point for the high court to decide now is whether these men could be punished anyhow.

Austin's appeal challenges the right of a state to make the sale of any publication, even if found to be obscene, conclusive evidence that the seller know that it was legally obscene.

Likewise, Redrup's appeal questioned whether there can be an obscenity conviction without proof that a bookseller anew or believed that the material violated state law.

The Court will hear the two cases in its next term opening Oct. 3.

The Hawaii decision approved for the 1966 election a senate reapportionment scheme based upon the number of registered voters in various districts rather than upon total population.

The Constitution, said Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. in announcing the 8-0 ruling, "Does not require the states to use total population figures derived from the federal census as the standard by which . . . substantial population equivalency is to be measured."

Though this was the first time the high court found a registered - voters plan met its "one - man, one - vote" standards, Brennan took pains to make sure the ruling is not understood to have broad sweep.

"We are not to be understood as deciding," he said, "that the validity of the registered voters basis as the measure has been established for all time for circumstances, in Hawaii or elsewhere."

The Hawaii plan also raised the question whether legislators may represent large multimember districts — that is, a district with several legislators — or whether they must be selected from smaller single - member districts.

Once before, in approving a Georgia plan, the Court ruled that multimember districts can meet constitutional requirements.

Again today, in approving multimember senate districts for the island of Oahu, Brennan said such districts "constitute an invidious discrimination" only if it can be shown that they serve to minimize or cancel out the voting strength of racial or political elements.

A three - judge U. S. District Court in Honolulu had disapproved the way the multimember districts were formed and rejected the plan. It set the stage for reapportionment through a constitutional convention.

In reversing the district court, Brennan said it had put "significant restraints" on the legislature. State legislatures must have an adequate opportunity to reapportion, he said.

Separate opinions concuring in the Court's action were filed by Justices John M. Harlan and Stewart. Justice Abe Fortas did not take part in consideration of the case or the decision. He gave no explanation.

In other action yesterday, the Supreme Court was asked to rule unconstitutional the taking of a blood sample over the objection of a person suspected of drunk-driving.

Its ruling could have a wide effect on one of the most common modern police weapons in the battle against highway slaughter.

Arguing for Armando Schmerber, convicted of drunken driving in Los Angeles in 1964, attorney Thomas M. McGurrin told the Court:

"Invasion of the body and the taking of its fluids over the objection of the person violates due process, unreasonable search and seizure and self incrimination provisions of the constitution."

Eight of the nine Justices sharply questioned Edwin Davenport, attorney for Los Angeles county, as he defended the taking of the blood sample from Schmerber after he had announced his objection.

Schmerber was hospitalized at the time, his auto having smashed into a tree.

"Taking a blood sample by approved medical methods does not violate due process," Davenport argued. "This is a reasonable taking of evidence. There is no brutal force, nothing that would shock community standards."

McGurrin argued that "If this court holds there is no violation unless the defendant put up strong resistance, I'll have to tell my client, 'You're not entitled to due process under our constitution unless you fight for the right and possibly shed blood.'"

Under questioning by the Court, Davenport conceded that when suspected drunks offer substantial physical resistance, "we do not take blood tests." But he added that the taking of a sample or even the holding of an arm, is not unreasonable force.

Special Assistant Valenti Leaves White House Staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jack Valenti, a special assistant to President Johnsonn is leaving the White House staff in the near future.

In announcing this today, press secretary Bill D. Moyers said Valenti's resignation will become effective when Johnson accepts it.

Valenti resigned to become president and chief executive officer of the Motion Picture Producers Association of America. The board of directors of the association elected him to the post at a meeting today in New York.

Valenti declined to say what his new salary will be. He did say it would be more than his $30,000 White House pay.

This is the second resignation of a presidential assistant to be announced formally today.

Earlier the White House confirmed reports that George E. Reedy is leaving in the near future to enter private industry.

Reedy served as presidentila press secretary until last July when he resigned to undergo surgery to correct a foot ailment. He since had returned to the White House staff to work principally on labor - management problems.

Reedy resigned his $30.000 a year post to become vice president for planning of the Struthers Wells Corp of New York and President of a subsidiary of the firm in Washington.

The departure of Valenti and Reedy will leave Moyers as the only only $30,000 - a - year special assistant. Moyers joined Johnson's staff immediately after he assumed office Nov. 22, 1963, when President John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

Valenti, 44, is a former Houston advertising executive. He married Mary Margaret Wiley, Johnson's private secretary, July 1, 1962. They have a daughter, Courtenay Lynda, 2 1-2 years old.

Wolfpack Tests Tar Heels

Walker Scheduled Pitcher For First-Place Carolina

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

The UNC Tar Heels, firmly entrenched atop the ACC standings, continue the task of beating back the challengers today when they meet the fourth-place N. C. State Wolfpack here at 3 p.m.

Danny Walker (3-1) will get the call for Carolina if he is sufficiently recovered from a pulled muscle. Tar Heel Coach Walter Rabb said yesterday he would go with Bud Cahoon (1-1) if Walker's leg is still bothering him.

Walker tested the injured leg in the ninth inning of the Virginia game when he relieved starter Beattie Leonard. Danny retired the Cavaliers, but it was obvious that his injury had not completely healed.

Cahoon started against Maryland Friday, but was rocked for three runs in the first inning and was relieved by George McRae in the second. In his last previous start, Cahoon lost a 1-0 duel to South Carolina.

Walker hurt his leg running bases in the Duke game on April 19. Rabb said the injury was a pulled ductor muscle, a muscle on the inside of the thigh. "It takes a long time to heal," said the Carolina Coach.

If Walker is recovered, Rabb said he plans to pitch the ace righthander today and then against Clemson Saturday at Clemson. Cahoon would go against South Carolina Friday. Should Cahoon pitch today, however, Rabb would have to alter his plans. He will then go with Beattie Leonard against South Carolina and Walker or Cahoon Saturday.

Except for Walker, the Tar Heels are in good shape physically. Danny Talbott appears to be over his back trouble. He blasted four hits in the weekend series to raise his season average to .427.

Carolina stomped State, 8-2, in Raleigh earlier in the season; but Rabb isn't over-confident about today's contest. "We got eight runs over there, but didn't get them until late in the game," he pointed out. "State has a ball club that is apparently getting better all the time." Rabb added. "The State sophs are starting to hit the ball."

He mentioned Tommy Bradford, who homered against Maryland Saturday, as one of the Pack's top hitters.

The rest of the league did a little cooperating with Carolina over the weekend. Duke, tied for the conference cellar with Virginia, and Wake Forest, only one notch above, contributed important victories to the Tar Heel cause.

The Blue Devils clubbed South Carolina, 7-2, and Wake Forest edged Clemson, 6-5, in Saturday games. The losses were the third for the Tigers and the fourth for the Gamecocks. Carolina now has a two-game edge in the loss column over both Clemson and State.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Tar Heel Week Of Decision

This is the week that was. Next week at this time, Tar Heel baseball fans will look back at these next five days either as the period when Carolina took a lease on the ACC pennant or as the black days when flag hopes were severely jolted, if not completely blasted.

Beginning today, Coach Walter Rabb's boys face, in order, the Nos. 4, 3 and 2 teams in the conference, namely N. C. State, South Carolina and Clemson. If the Tar Heels can repeat their performances in the first games with these opponents, they will be in pretty good shape. In those earlier games, UNC beat State, 8-2, and Clemson, 6-1, and dropped a 1-0 squeaker to South Carolina. A duplication of that series would bring the Tar Heels back here with a 7-2 conference record and a two-game edge over the field in the loss column. A three-game sweep, of course, would really put daylight between Carolina and the rest of the league.

It's still a little early to think seriously about the ACC title, but such thoughts are hard to avoid. Today's game marks the halfway point in Carolina's conference schedule. If the Tar Heels win, they will have a 6-1 league mark. Ten wins seems likely to be enough to take the ACC crown, and 11 will almost certainly do it. (Eleven victories would clinch a tie, even if Clemson or State won all their remaining games.) In short, if Carolina can keep going at anything like the current pace, things look pretty good.

Three out of three is the goal, but two out of three— say, a win over State here today and a split in South Carolina — would be enough to keep the Tar Heels securely on top of the league.

They Showed A Lot

Carolina showed in the weekend series with Maryland and Virginia that it can win ballgames in different ways — an important asset for a champion. Against the Terps, the Tar Heels found themselves three runs down before they ever came to bat. Bud Cohoon just didn't have his stuff. If Carolina was ever going to quit, here was an excellent opportunity.

The Tar Heels didn't quit, though. They came back with four runs in the bottom of the second, topped by a storybook two-out, three-and-two three-run homer by Mike McLaughlin. Once they got the momentum, the Tar Heels never looked back, winning 8-3.

George McRae went about as far as relief pitchers go, pitching two-hit ball for eight innings to get the win. McRae is a handy guy to have around when the starters falter. He showed Friday that he can go the distance, but Coach Rabb has wisely decided to keep him in the bullpen. Three starters are all a college team needs, and Carolina has three good ones in Danny Walker, Beattie Leonard and Cohoon. McRae is more valuable to the team as a reliever than as a fourth starter.

After winning by coming from behind Friday, the Tar Heels switched the script and took the lead early against Virginia, then staved off a late Cavalier rally. Again Carolina showed something, in this instance, a refusal to rattle when the other team seems to be gaining momentum. The Heels can protect a lead as well as overcome one.

Leonard's pitching particularly impressed me in this game. The southpaw has a smooth motion; and while he doesn't appear to be throwing hard, the ball gets up there quickly enough. (He fanned six Cavaliers.) Rabb tested Walker's injured leg by bringing in the star righthander to relieve Leonard when the leadoff hitter singled for UVA in the ninth. Danny got the job done, but his leg was visibly bothering him. If the pulled muscle doesn't come around soon, the Tar Heels' title chances will be substantially reduced.

If Walker recovers completely, Carolina has the pitching to win the championship. The hitting looks good enough, too. Danny Talbott has snapped out of his slump and takes a tidy .427 average into today's game. While the whole UNC team can't match Clemson for fancy averages, nobody on the Tar Heels is an easy out. Everyone on the squad has delivered key hits in one game or another. This depth keeps the pressure on the opposing pitchers.

Good pitching and solid hitting are all that a team needs. Carolina has both. They have something else, too — the league lead. All the Heels have to do is keep winning.

Surtees, Parkes In Ferrari Drive To Italian Victory

MONZA, ITALY (AP) — Britons John Surtees and Mike Parkes drove an Italian Ferrair prototype to victory yesterday in the 620 mile Monza auto race.

A Ford sports car driven by American Masten Gregory of Kansas City and Briton John Whitmore was second, one lap behind.

Another American team composed of Ski Scott of DEven, Pa., and Peter Revensen of New York pulled out on the 32nd lap of the 100 - lap race. They had the second best time in the trials.

The outcome of the race, third event counting toward the International Sports and Sports Prototype trophies and the World Grand Tourism Manufacturers Championship, marked the triumphant return of Surtees to the track after his serious racing accident in Canada last year.

Surtees and Parkes won over 40 other entries from ten nations. Only 27 cars finished. The race was hampered by the heavy rain.

The winning four - liter Ferrari covered the 6.2-mile course 100 times in 6 hours, 5 minutes, 11.6 seconds for an average of 102.882 miles per hour.

The second place Ford was a 4736-CC model.

Third was another Ford 4736-CC sports car, driven by Belgian Willy Mariesse and Swiss Herbert Mueller. It was two laps behind.

Fourth was the Porsche-Carrerra two liter prototype of German Gerhard Mitter and Austrian Hans Hermann, also two laps behind.

Fifth was the Porsche Carrera two - liter prototype of Joseph Siffert of Switzerland and Charles Vegele of Germany, five laps behind.

Fifth, sixth and seventh are SAE (544.40), Delta Upsilon (532.90) and Pi Kappa Phi (529.05), all one place higher than last time. Eighth is St. A, which dropped from fifth, with 515.50. Ninth is TEP, which rose from 14th, at 494.90, and tenth is Sig Ep with 489.90.

Mangum racked up 160 points in basketball and 54 in table tennis to take a huge lead over second place Everett. Mangum has 726.90 points and Everett 610.60 points. Aycock remains in third place with a total of 551.05.

UVa. No-Hitter A Long Shot

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

A long shot came home Friday for Virginia left-hander Ned Turnbull as the 6-7, 200-pound senior pitched a no-hitter over N. C. State in Raleigh.

The tall hurler retired the first 21 men to face him before giving up a leadoff walk in the eighth. That runner was erased on a double play, and the only other Wolfpack baserunner reached on an error in the ninth.

In tossing his first collegiate no-hitter, Turnbull struck out 12 and walked just one.

The "long shot" is connected with the fact that the hitless gem was only Turnbull's third win of the year against four losses. However, the lefty's earned run average is down around the 2.00 mark, and he flashed brilliance earlier this season in losing a three - hitter at South Carolina.

* * *

Another top pitching performance was turned in Friday by South Carolina lefty Bob Bryant, who blanked Wake Forest 4-0 for his fourth win against no losses. Threatening to be called the top pitcher in the ACC, Bryant lowered his ERA to 0.44 for 45 innings. He also socked a home run in the Deac tilt.

Jubilee Group Rises To Fame

The Bitter End Singers, who inaugurate this year's Jubilee, have had a rapid rise in popularity since Fred Weintraug, owner of the Bitter End Coffee House, brought them together.

The two girls and three boys in the group appear in Polk Place Friday night.

They opened at The Bitter End, Aug. 24, 1965, and their star has been rising ever since. The group came into its own during a six month tour of the United States, playing capacity concerts at colleges and such night clubs as The Embers in Indianapolis and The Tidelands in Houston.

The Bitter End Singers were recently invited to the White House by President Johnson to appear before congressional members in the Rose Garden. They so captivated the audience that they were invited members of Congress.

After their second appearance Mrs. Johnson felt that they would be the right group to take with her on her special whistle stop tour of depressed areas.

Their television appearances have skyrocketed them into national popularity having appeared on The Steve Lawrence Special, Show Street, The Today Show and Shindig. They are scheduled to appear this season on practically every important variety show on the air.

The Bitter End Singers have come to represent a new dimension in entertainment, for in their concerts they perform individual comedy as well as group singing. The new sound, which has become known as theirs, has begun to make an important impact on the musical field. It is interesting to note that through the use of electrical instruments they are able to reproduce during their stage concerts the same kind of excellence as on records.

The Bitter End Singer's music ranges from hard hitting rock songs such as "Hard Times," "The Joker," and Dixieland tunes such as "Mississippi Mud" and "Basin Street Blues" and folk standards such as "Crawdad," "Good Night, Irene," and "Walk Right In."

Variety said their show combined "Lots of animaton and high theatrical sight values with strong vocal arrangements." Their first album "Discover the Bitter End Singers" will soon be followed by "Through Our Eyes," both on the Mercury label.

He said interviews for committee members would not be held until next week.

He listed these committees which do not have chairmen yet:

Also, State Affairs Committee, Discount Commission, Consolidated University Student Council, VIGAH (Volunteers In Giving A Hand), Audit Board.

Also, Communications Committee, Honor System Commission, Student Mental Health Committee and Committee on Cultural Development on Campus.

Powell sent a list of 15 appointments to Student Legislature last Thursday. There chairmanships, however, were not included in that list.

-Symposium-

Borostin's staying up to watch the Academy Award presentations on television. "He seemed to retard it as crucial," Butler said, "and was pulling for "Cat Ballou" all the way."

Cartoonist Al Capp was offered a bottle of liquor, he added, to which Capp replied jokingly, "Never tell anyone I never touch a drop!'"

Butler praised the publicity campaign directed by Chris Wright and said he was "completely indebted to The Daily Tar Heel for its fine coverage." He also noted that Holiday Magazine, which is presenting a 10-page story in its August issue on Chapel Hill, will include some mention of the Symposium.

Reader's Digest also covered the program, Butler added.

A meeting will be held Wednesday night, he said, to select the interim cheirman for the next Symposium, which will be held in 1968. The chairman will work with faculty to draw up the program during the next year.

Butler suggested that the next Symposium staff start earlier than he in inviting speakers for the program. It takes about one and one-half years to complete the speaking program, he pointed out.

Dormitory Prize To Ellen Allen

Goofed Again!

Yes, you're right, Granville Towers doesn't offer room, board, food, and luxury for only $110. The DTH did, however, misquote the manager to that effect. The truth is that it costs about $110 more to live in Granville Towers than it would cost to live in a dormitory that serves meals.

N. Viet MIG 21 Downed By U.S.

SAIGON (AP) — High-flying American jet pilots sent a MIG21 crashing in flames over North Viet Nam only 35 miles from Red China's frontier yesterday, a U. S. spokesman announced. It was the war's first kill of the vaunted fighter, the best Communist jet in Asia.

Peking's New China News Agency broadcast a declaration that North Viet Nam's air force shot down two U. S. jets and damaged several others. It said nothing about the MIG21.

Proximity of the action to the frontier, like two other clashes since last Saturday, led to speculation that MIG21S were taking off from Chinese bases. U. S. officials said they did not know where they came from or the nationality of the pilots.

Washington's information is that Red China has planes of this type. She is believed to be producing her own, perhaps copying a few she may have gotten before the Moscow - Peking ideological dispute led the Russians to cut off aid to China in 1960.

However, Deputy Defense Secretary Cyrus R. Vance said Sunday North Viet Nam is believed to have about 15 MIG-21s. He said these could have come "either from the Soviet Union or from Communist China." These presumably are based at the Phuc Yen military airport in Hanoi, which has been immune from U. S. attack.

The American spokesman announced Sidewinder missiles fired by a U. S. Air Force F4C Phantom blasted the Red warplane in a brief, swirling dogfight between two Phantoms and two MIGs 65 miles north - northeast of Hanoi. He said the pilot is believed to have parachuted.

While the areial combat stepped up its pace, ground fighting in South Viet Nam between Cong dwindled to minor skirmishes.

Within Saigon, terrorists staged four separate incidents. They hurled grenades at U.S. military personnel and at a billet for South Korean soldiers, injuring five Americans and seven Vietnamese.

The latest MIG kill brought to eight the number of Soviet - deisnged fighters shot down by American fliers in the Viet Nam conflict since last June 17. All the others were older, slower MIG 17s.

MIGs had scored first, however. They downed two U. S. Air Force F105 Thunderchiefs during an American raid April 4, 1965, on a bridge at Thanh Hoa, 80 miles south of Hanoi. Five days later a Phantom failed to return from a dogfight in the area of China's Hainan Island.

Yugoslav Talks At Planetarium This Evening

Yugoslavian diplomat Cvijeto Job, the second Communist to speak publicly on campus since the Speaker Ban Law was passed, will lecture at 8 tonight in the Morehead Planetarium faculty lounge.

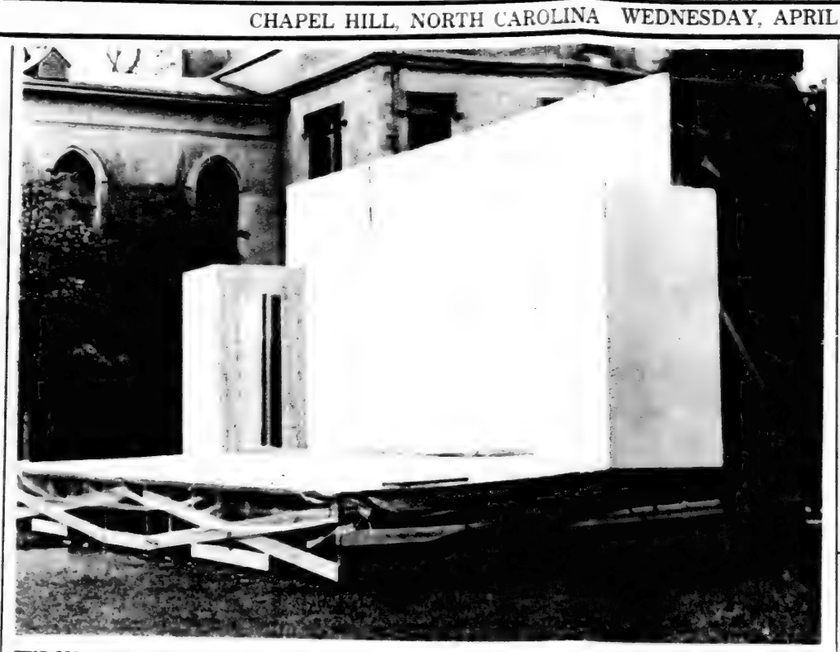
His talk, on "Socialism and Freedoms in Yugoslavia," is open to the public, and is sponsored by the Chapel Hill chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

The speech does not require approval by Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson since the invitation was extended by a faculty rather than student group.

Job is head of the department of press information, cultural affairs, science and education at the Yugoslavian Embassy in Washington. Born in Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia in 1962, he studied law and sociology at the University of Belgrade. He joined the Yugoslavian Communist Party in 1944.

He fought with the National Liberation Army of Yugoslavia during World War Two and joined the foreign service in 1949. Job has served at posts in Oslo, London and Washington and has attended various United Nations conferences and the Belgrade Conference of Non-Aligned Countries in 1961.

Job's speech will be the third in a lecture series related to the Speaker Ban planned by the AAUP. UNC Trustee Victor Bryant of Durham addressed the group in January, and State Sen. Robert Morgan of Lillington spoke in February.



IT'S NOT GOING TO MOVE—but it will, nevertheless, furnish stomping grounds for a whole slew of entertainers this Jubilee Weekend. The stand was erected a couple of days ago and will serve as a rather large reminder of the coming festivities.

NC State Gets 'No' Answers

Leonard Farris, chairman of the University Young Democratic Club, said Tuesday Hall notified him he would be unable to accept the invitation.

Friday, Sitterson Meet Attorneys In Ban Case

Consolidated University President William Friday and Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson met yesterday morning with the Raleigh law firm of Joyner and Howison, which was employed on Monday by Governor Dan Moore to prepare the defense for the Speaker Ban suit.

Also attending the conference, to discuss the defendants' answer to the suit, were Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton; Deputy Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody; George Ragsdale, legal counsel to the governor; and Andrew Vanore, member of the Attorney General's staff.

Friday told the DTH that the decision to employ the law firm was made by the governor. "My role is simply to provide information for the defense."

Gov. Moore could not be reached for comment, but his press secretary, Jerry Elliot, announced the governor would answer questions about the Speaker Ban case at his press conference this afternoon.

Bruton called it "unusal in many cases to employ a private law firm. I don't know why this law firm was employed. Ask the governor."

Col. W. T. Joyner, senior attorney in the law firm said, "I can't say why a private firm was used." The former member of the nine-man Britt Speaker Ban study commission added, "I have no idea when the answer to the suit will be made.

Bruton told the DTH on on Monday that the answer may be filed later this week.

Site Move For High Rise Hall Requested

By PETE IVEY
UNC News Bureau Director

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson yesterday instructed planners of the James K. Polk Residence Hall to seek a new site to locate the 1,000-man dormitory.

Previously, it had been announced that the structure would be built behind Kenan Stadium.

Chancellor Sitterson rejected the site adjacent to Kenan Stadium unless and until all other possible locations have been fully explored.

He said there will also be a re-appraisal of the height and room size of the Polk building. It had previously been announced that Polk Hall was planned to be 21 stories high. The height and capacity of the building will be reviewed in relation to the site to be selected, the Chancellor said.

Chancellor Sitterson said he is especially concerned with the size of rooms. Original plans for the residence hall had rooms 140 square feet in size, to accommodate two men in each room. Sitterson directed planners to explore every possibility for increasing the size of the two-man rooms.

The University's Chancellor stated that his action reflects his conviction that:

1. It is the responsibility of the University to provide necessary housing for students.
2. There is an obigation to provide the best facilities possible within the limitations imposed by the state ceiling on cost of construction ($3,000 per occupant regardles of the source of funds.) An increase in this figure now seems most desirable.
3. The location of the building adjacent to Kenan Stadium would detract from the natural beauty of the surroundings, and all other possible locations must be considered instead.

The federal government has loaned $3,000,000 to build the structure. Chancellor sitterson's action in ordering a new look at plans does not affect this allocation.

GMAB Nixes Jubilee Move

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The Graham Memorial Activities Board yesterday turned down a proposal to move Jubilee to the library end of Polk Place by a 4-2 vote.

GMAB member Dave Knesel, who made the proposal, said he felt the south end of Polk Place would have been better "because of the downhill slope and shade" of the trees at that end.

Knesel made the proposal citing an editorial in Tuesday's DTH which called for the move. The editorial argued that moving the stage would cost "only $350," which comes to about one and one-sixth cents per person attending Jubilee.

Knesel's resolution cited the "public relations beating" that GMAB took during Jubilee last year and said "we're in for another this year because of today's editorial in the Daily Tar Heel."

GMAB decided against the move because it felt more people could be accommodated at the north end of Polk Place, where the stage is now already built.

During the meeting Knesel argued that putting the stage on the sidewalk in front of Wilson Library would create "a natural amphitheater," hill scope where we are now." umbrellas and "checked it

"I paced it out and there's a lot of room to spare," Knesel told the board.

He was asked, "But can you really see down there?"

"Yes," Knesel said. "There are two balconies, so to speak." He referred to a slight dip in the slope towards South Building where a sidewalk crosses the quadrangle.

"It is closer to parking spaces," Knesel continued, "and it's easier to block off because of the chains all around that end.

Morrison Gets Delayed Funds

It took several months of work and two elections, but Morrison College is finally going to get the funds appropriated to it in last fall's elections.

Monday a small percentage of Morrison residents voted for the second time on the financial clause of their constitution. The first vote was vetoed by Dean of Men William Long because it was "not word for word like Scott College's."

The constitution was approved this time by a 191 to 18 vote margin.

Morrison Governor John Ellis said he expects to deliver the new constitution to Long today. He stated that the funds should be released immediately after Long approves the clause.

Bills have been standing unpaid since January because of Long's ruling.

The first constitution provided essentially the same financial stability and security of Scott College's constitution, but Long refused to approve it because he did not weant "eight different interpretations" of the financial responsibilities of colleges.

Ellis, commenting on the delay over wording said, "It was really an uncessary waste of time." He said that Long approved their first version before it was voted on, but rejected it later.

Student Government Given To All By UNC Trustees, Administration

By JIM APLIN
Special to the DTH

There has been much talk about judicial reform this year. Earlier in the fall an Ad Hoc Committee, composed of the most well-informed student leaders, submitted to the faculty an elaborate proposal for re-organization of the judiciary and a re - definition of student conduct rules. This proposal was studied by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline and certain recommendations were made to the judicial leaders concerning it.

These recommendations were not all that we had hoped for, and many students have expressed their disappointment at the faculty's view on judicial reform. However, before we can discuss the alleged controvery we must recognize several basic facts of life.

First, there is no such thing as "student autonomy." We are not an isolated community, and we cannot expect to be treated as such. Our student government is a "gift" from the trustees and the administration, not an inalienable right.

Second, we exercise the power we do have in student government only because we have shown that we have the responsibility to exercise it correctly. As soon as we show a lack of responsibility, this power can be taken from us.

Third, "responsibility" is a term to be defined by the administration. We may feel that we are acting responsibly while they may not agree. They have, however, the power to enforce their definition of what responsibility is. And this is the crux of the matter.

The administration and the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline do not feel that some of our proposed judicial reforms are responsible reforms. In other words, there is a divergence in moral standards and philosophy between the students and the administration in the area of the campus code, women's rules, etc. Now, our position may be correct, and we think it is, but we cannot enforce our own standards of conduct without the consent of the administration and faculty. If we do, they will merely take the power of enforcement from our hands, and we will have lost whatever bargaining advantage we had.

Fourth, we do have a bargaining advantage in that our student courts save the administration a great deal of time and money. Enforcing dormitory, fraternity, sorority, classroom, and general - conduct rules is an immense job. The administration cannot take our accomplishments lightly.

Fifth, the administration is in many cases in agreement with us, even on campus code rules. But they have their backs to the wall. The trustees, the state legislature, the influential people in North Carolina — these groups really have the final word. They hold the purse strings. So the administration's position is not an easy one, no matter how you look at it.

GI Influx Expected To Hit Carolina Year After Next

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Charles Bernard, Director of Admissions, said that UNC will not be affected very much this fall by applications of servicemen returning to school under the G. I. Bill, but will probably feel the pressures on enrollment by the fall of '67.

The recent passage of the G. I. Bill will help pay for the continued education of any serviceman who wishes to return to school. The plan provides for one month of schooling for every month spent in military service since 1955.

"The returning G.I.'s who were previously UNC students and are eligible for re-admission will naturally be admitted first," Bernard said. "This policy exists for any Carolina student who has left school for any reason and is eligible for re-admittance."

The Department of Admissions is requesting any returning servicemen from out of state to apply at institutions in his own state before applying at Carolina. This policy is being followed because of the great number of returning servicemen who are permanent residents of North Carolina.

All returning servicemen who will come under the G. I. Bill must qualify for admittance like any other student.

Arthur Branch, UNC Business Manager, said that he feels certain that the G. I.'s who will be applying as freshmen will receive some special consideration for their service to the country.

"UNC did more for G. I.'s after Word War II than any other institution in the state," Branch said. "I am sure that the University will continue to aid the G. I.'s in every possible way."

The Chancellor and his advisors will formulate a policy concerning the housing for the G. I.'s. The University is asking the next session of the General Assembly for authorization to build 300 new housing units for married students. This proposal was made before the passage of the new G. I. Bill.

If these new units are built they will help to relieve some of the expected overcrowding that will result from the servicemen who are married and have children.

The new Hinton James Residence Hall scheduled to open in the fall of '67 and the Polk Residence Hall scheduled to be ready for occupancy the fall of '68 will help take care of the increased number of single students expected to take advantage of the G. I. Bill.

Dead Fish, Limbo, A Pig? You're Kidding!

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH Asst. News Editor

Why were a hundred people chasing a pig in Kenan Stadium yesterday? When is a beauty contest like a small-scale riot?

Ask the people who attended the Sigma Chi Derby yesterday — they may be able to tell you or then again they may not.

And if this sounds like a rather unorthodox way to begin a newspaper report, we can only say that it was a rather unorthodox event.

Have you ever tried to explain to someone why girls with some raw eggs tied to their heads were fighting a duel with some dead fish?

Well, that was just one of the events in the unusual competition that took place in Kenan Stadium yesterday. Other events included a limbo competion, and hm,. . . well . . .race.

Now about those questions:

The reason the people were chasing the pig is that during a pig catching contest the pig got away, and that during the "Miss Modern Venus" competition, the spectators couldn't have cared less about who won, they just wanted to look at the girls.

Does that explain everything? It doesn't?

Then forget it.

We'll never be able to explain it to you.

A Change In Plans

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson's decision to have the plans for the construction of James K .Polk Residence Hall reconsidered is a wise one.

Of the several reasons Sitterson listed for initiating the study of these plans, we feel the proposed location to be the greatest problem.

Kenan Stadium is one of the most beautiful college football arenas in the country.

It is unique.

But what would it be two years from now if proposed plans were carried out?

Back in 1916 Emerson Field (deceased) was erected to house baseball and football games. Those were the days when 5,000 people was considered a great turnout for a pigskin tussle.

In 1927 the Tar Heels met Virginia in brand new Kenan Stadium, built with a $350,000 grant from William Rand Kenan.

The selection of a spot for this stadium was a task of considerable thought. It was decided to build the arena at "The Meeting of the Waters."

This plot—then the lovers' lane for UNC students and Chapel Hill townspeople—was so called because of the brooks that met in the valley where the stadium sits now. (The water flows under the football field today encased in a concrete pipe.)

One of the primary reasons for choosing this location was its rustic setting. Nothing could be seen around the stadium for about 300 yards but trees.

We talked with one alumnus who remarked that in 1940, "We thought walking out to Kenan Stadium was about as far as you could go on the campus. It was an impressive sight, the stadium just sitting out there like an oasis in a desert."

Since the initial planting of the turf a great deal of brick and concrete has been expended in the south campus area—Parker, Teague, Avery, Morrison, Ehringhaus, Craige, Bell Tower, and additions to Memorial Hospital.

But all these building programs have been careful to leave an attractive boundary of trees around the stadium.

If a settlement of 21-story dormitories were to spring up across the road from PTA—just a stone's throw from the stadium—the novel beauty of viewing a football game in such a natural setting would be exchanged for something comparable to having a gridiron battle on Times Square.

In his statement yesterday the acting chancellor rejected the site adjacent to Kenan "unless and until all other possible locations have been fully explored." We see no reason why this exploration should not yield a more appropriate location.

The University owns a great deal of property in the south campus direction, beyond Ehringhaus and Craige. It is worth noting that this uncrowded land offers plenty of space for student parking, a problem that would be of prime consideration if the dorm were built across from PTA.

Some objection has been voiced to the idea of 21-story structure anywhere on the campus. We think such a building would be perfectly in order in the south campus area, complementing the modern look of Ehringhaus, Craige, Morrison and Chase. Here, we could benefit from the advantages of such a modern design without detracting from the beauty of the old campus between Franklin St. and Wilson Library.

There was some puzzlement yesterday afternoon as to how the plans for the dorm and its location could have been announced if the project were still in the "discussion" stages—that is, why did Sitterson's statement speak of "further study" of the plans if they had been finalized enough to be released to the press.

We hope we can help clear this up.

When initial planning for the construction was launched, Sitterson, as vice chancellor, was not in contact with the planning board. In fact, he said, "I didn't know about the plans until I read the story in the paper."

The misunderstanding seems to have stemmed from the fact that the Buildings and Grounds Committee had approved a "high rise" construction of some kind, but had not specified the actual height or location.

The University Planning Department, then, proceded with the project under the impression that the powers that be were aware of, and in agreement with, their intentions.

Unfortunately, the break in communications had to be repaired via the state press and The Daily Tar Heel. Thus, it put the Chancellor in an awkward position in ordering a reconsideration of the plans.

Now that everyone, hopefully, knows what everyone else is doing, we hope there will be a more smooth and organized procedure.

If such a break in communications continued, we might end up having a women's residence hall plotted in the middle of big fraternity court. We shudder to think of those mad frat men.

On A Writer With A Cause: Viet Nam

(Author's note — The Viet Nam war has been the target of many supposedly intellectual protests. This column shows what often happens when a writer subordinates art in favor of a cause.)

The called it art, and maybe it was; but to the uninitiated the play seemed nothing but a collection of meaningless, incoherent dialogues whose passionate confusion reminded non-believers of Ku Klux Klan ravings. Even the author confessed that "many people are puzzled by this play."

When "Serjeant Musgrave's Dance" was performed on Washington's Arena Stage, the audience clapped, but only out of a polite respect for that which they couldn't understand.

Featuring a collection of "peacenik" deserters from an English army, the play was ballyhooed as a protest against England's colonial wars as well as one against wars in general.

Yet the author, John Arden, appeared honest enough to show the weakness of most peace fanatics: A total inability to understand that some wars are at least partially justified and that blatant emotionalism, while causing wars, can also frustrate attempts to stop them by alienating decent, respectable, rational people from the peace movement.

This week, however, Arden proved he was just as prone to this fault as Serjeant (the play uses archaic English spelling) Musgrave.

Arden proclaimed in a New York Times advertisement: "By unhappy coincidence rather than by any prophetic powers of mine, the play turns out to be directly relevant to the Viet Nam situation, which presents Americans with many of the same problems that Englishmen had to face in connection with Cyprus in 1959."

Referring to Viet Nam as well as Britain's colonial wars, he said, "If Sjt. Musgrave fails in his attempt to bring the war to an end, it is not because I believe such an attempt to be objectively impossible. Indeed I believe it is not only possible but mandatory for citizens of a democracy to use their voices in this cause.

"The play shows the difficulties involved. They are very great. I myself, alone, do not pretend to be able to solve them. Wars are made by democracies in the name of peace. This I find more sickening than the acts of unashamed aggressors."

Translated, all this simply means: America's the villain in Viet Nam, and it's everybody's duty (particularly the author's) to do something about it.

Arden gives no solid evidence to support such a conclusion; he merely offers his readers an emotion-ridden generalization of errors.

First — Who says the United States is the aggressor? Countless reports indicate that the Viet Nam struggle, far from being a civil war, involves the intervention of outside forces that were present before the U. S. buildup (which was initiated in the first place only because of the Communist aggressors' presence in South Viet Nam).

Second — What is so sickening about a democracy participating in a war, especially if it is not responsible for the conflict?

Near Arden's advertisement in the Times, one sees a message from other intellectuals—among them, Werner P. Frederich, a comparative literature specialist here at UNC. The message: ruthless persecution of authors continues in the Soviet Union, despite Stalin's death.

Would Arden consider the USSR an environment suitable for artistis achievement? Certainly not — and were he consistent, he might object to similar situations in North Viet Nam.

But what to do about these unfortunate circumstances?

In the case of the Soviet Union, the suppression of artistic freedom is not enough to justify an armed invasion. Nevertheless, Arden can be grateful that, through NATO and other military means, Communist totalitarianism was kept out of Western Europe; luckily, Western Europe did not have to go to war, but if it had, a prominent reason would have been the Soviet Union's restrictions against freedom of expression.

As for Viet Nam, the United States intervened there (at the request of a legitimate government) because war was necessary to further intellectual freedom and other liberties. Saigon's present government has a much better chance of providing a free environment than does Hanoi (Ask the Viet Cong guerrillas, Hanoi's friends in South Viet Nam, why they are fighting, and they will say they fight for restrictive ideology rather than for an opportunity to avoid one.).

Third — Why does Arden suggest, however indirectly, that he is a better author because of his championing a cause?

Speaking last week in Graham Memorial, Negro novelist Ralph Ellison said that literature should not be hopelessly subordinated to social and political movements—that the movements come and go, but that great writing persists and need not boost an idea.

Fourth — Why does Arden declare near the end of the advertisement, "One man shouting 'no' (against war) gets nowhere—millions, whispering it with diffidence and even with timidity, can make a noise like a tornado?"

Millions may later join him in demanding the end of the Viet Nam war; but the battles will still be fought as long as other millions realize that the struggle against communism is necessary for lonely men like Arden to retain the privilege of unsuccessfully shouting "no."

Fifth — It is possible that the advertisement was placed in the Times, not because of a genuine feeling against the war, but because of a desire to attract the patronage of "Vietnik" theater-goers. Having attended "Serjeant Musgrave's Dance" in Washington, I can say that few informed people would go see Arden's boring bunk unless they did it for a cause.

"Clear up at Jubilee time? Man, that's two days and 10,000 raindrops from now!"

An Apology

By JOHN GREENBACKER

In the wake of my recent attack on their method on initiation, about ten members of the Order of the Beanbirds and their friends paid me a nocturnal visit Saturday.

They didn't come to chirp, but they squawked pretty loudly about what I had written. By the time the little post mortem was over, we had reached some sort of accord, and I was greatly relieved that they came to talk and not to lynch.

This fact alone proved that their essential point was correct. The Beanbirds are not a bad organization or a group of persons like a bad reputation like the Minotaurs.

In spite of all their foolishness, the Beanbirds are a basically good lot. It's just that even the Women's Society of Christian Service looks like an army of mad muggers if you've only had three hours of sleep.

Ladies and gentlemen of the Beanbirds, I truly didn't mean to be nasty as I seemed. But please, please, try to cool next semester's performance. I know I'll go bats if we have a repeat.

Also, call off the goon squad. Those fellows were the only people I was not about to argue with at 3 a.m. Sunday morning.

Gallant Controversial; Beaumont Booed

Carol Is Crazy

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In reference to Miss Gallant's article "Of Girls and Mythology": She intimates that Northern girls wouldn't be well-received on this campus because their mode of dress, attitudes, and thinking are different and because they've got brains and words to prove it. She left out that they are good-looking, have attractive figures, know how to walk, talk, and be independent of "Mama" and "Daddy." My dear Miss Gallant, those are women.

She goes on to state that Southern myths are nice because they're all dependent on others, and what grit would want to pop that little dream-world bubble they live in. Miss Gallant further says that she has met few men who "would really like" the same rules for women as for men at Carolina. My only retort is: What kind of "men" do you date, Miss Gallant?

It's true southern girls don't want to be liberated from their mythical pedastals, but they aren't safe, warm, and secure; they're dumb, cold, and inferior. But as long as they have frosted hair, a family tree (even if the roots are rotting), get drunk on Saturday nights and make it to church Sunday morning looking like nice, innocent WASPs, and say, "Hey, how yoo," they'll get along well in Ahoskie or Hickory. It's when they cross the N. C. border going north that their little world gets a little too big for them.

I always thought the Carolina girls were not attractive as a whole, but it wasn't until this Easter when I was convinced that the girls around here are downright Ugly. I can't believe how so many homely (not to be confused with comely) women attend this university. Men, we've got more than our fair share of the bad news.

One parting word: the Southern girl has her myth, but her brother, the southern gentleman, has his little story. It's called . . . a fairy tale.

(My apologies to my Southern friends.)

Hooray For Carol

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I would like to add a very loud, resounding, and unequivocal "Hooray" to Miss Gallant's feature article "Of Girls and Mythology." This paternalization dealt to women students at the University of North Carolina through a blatantly Victorian double standard has for two years left me so furious that any potentially eloquent protest was reduced to frustrated sputterings.

Women in our society and particularly in such southern institutions as I now find myself are regarded as sub-human (not even a para-being) and relegated to the position of "God's afterthought."

Oh yes, the establishment will let us into the colleges, but only so we will be able to understand our husbands when they want to talk to us and so that we can perpetuate the middle class child. But speak of graduate school and fulfillment in a career and the gaping mouth under the blank eyes says, "What in hell for?"

I, for one (and I've ascertained there are only a few of us), do not like being clamped down upon for two years by inflexible rules which are a great deal more than ludicrous and ridiculous and are regarded by the housemothers and graduate counselors as the postscripts of the tablets purportedly given to Moses.

Well, friends and neighbors, raise your dependent daughters if you will but don't express dismay when you see them passive and indecisive, moving from parents to housemother to husband in one grand impervious deeply-run groove with no perception, no ability to see out.

Then this ole merry-go-round will continue with the women only getting to ride on the world tourist class.

College Dropout Has Study And Emotional Problems

By DEMONT ROSEMAN

The college dropout more than likely is a student with a mixture of study and emotional problems.

He endures these problems for some time. Then, at the time he drops out, he is frantic in his desire to leave.

But above all else, he dreads and fears what his parents will think and he isn't sure how to cope with it.

This general description of college students who discontinue their education before graduation was derived from a reserach project conducted here at UNC.

A report of the study by Dr. John R. Curtis and Dr. Thomas E. Curtis has been published in the Journal of the American College Health Association.

Dr. John Curtis, formerly a resident in psychiatry at UNC, is now chief of the Men's Addiction Service at the U. S. Public Health Service Hospital in Lexington, Ky., and in July will become acting director of the psychiatric section of the University of Kentucky Student Health Service. Dr. Thomas Curtis is associate professor of psychiatry at UNC.

"From the findings in our study," the authors explained, "it is apparent that students drop out of college for many reasons."

Nevertheless, dropouts do have distinguishing characteristics.

They participate less in such things as athletics and hobbies.

They are rather uncertain about their goals in college and often are disappointed about their college choice.

And, the researchers reported, "The dropout students appeared to be less prepared for college work both academically and emotionally."

The psychiatrists developed an opinion from their study that the college dropout isn't necessarily a failure of either students, other individuals or colleges.

"Dropping out," they stated, "may be a useful and valuable experience for students.

"Some who have dropped out and returned to academic work far superior to that done prior to leaving.

"The possibility is raised that dropping out may help some of these students become more mature."

It was found that many dropouts are anxious to return to school. The psychiatrists felt, however, that if dropping out is to be beneficial the student shouldn't return for at least a year.

Questionnaires from nearly 1,200 UNC students were used to determine that the overall dropout rate in a one-year period was less than one student in five (18.5 per cent).

The highest dropout rate was found, quite surprisingly, among the graduate students.

Freshmen, not surprisingly, had the highest dropout rate among the undergraduates.

Most dropouts were in their first two years of college.

"Perhaps, for some students, dropping out of school is an appropriate and even necessary process toward the development of a more mature student."

A Matter Of Opinion

By John H. Jennrich

We spent a day last week at the U. S. Army's John F. Kennedy Center for Special Warfare, Ft. Bragg, N. C. This is the training ground for the Special Forces and other groups in counterinsurgency and psychological warfare.

The modern facilities include classrooms for 600, an auditorium for approximately 500, a library with 10,000 bound volumes and another 10,000 pamphlets, and offices for the Special Warfare staff.

This is headquarters for direction of and training for the counterinsurgency and psychological operations of the war in Viet Nam.

At the entrance to the building there is a bronze plaque with a quote from John Kennedy: "We shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and success of liberty."

Once inside, we met a group of officers who were to give us the facts about special warfare. They ranged in rank from captain to colonel and they all seemed well versed in the strategy of Mao Tse Tung. We were told that the Communists are subverting genuine social revolutions and that the United States does not necessarily favor the status quo in Viet Nam. On the contrary, we desire to see change and our actions are guided only by the needs of the nation and the will of the people.

We were told that the United States is not opposed to insurgency (defined as a popular movement) per se, but we are opposed to "subversive insurgencies" which are those "inspired" or "exploited" by the Communists.

Three are, the brass told us, three functional programs of counterinsurgency. The first is counterguerrilla operations, or warfare against the Communists "in the boonies." The second is "population resources control," defined by the Army as the severance of connections between the people and the guerrillas. A perfect example of this is the old strategic hamlet approach. Unfortunately, many of the Vietnamese mistakenly considered the fenced-in hamlets as prisons. We called it providing security for the people but somehow our message didn't get across.

The third program is "environmental improvement." What this means is a complete overhaul of the socio-economic structure which, the Army admits, is somewhat difficult. But the idea is to prevent insurgency by removing its causes. The Army never said, but we suppose it would be proper to assume that what they meant was the prevention of subversive insurgency. We trust they have some method of determining the legitimacy of popular discontent or social reform before they "improve" it.

"Psychological operations," as nearly as we could find out, is propaganda. We were told that technologically speaking, the United States could reach every Vietnamese in Viet Nam. We were told this is important because it is the firm belief of the allied American and South Vietnamese governments that the entire population should know the reasons for government actions. The reasoning, of course, is presented in very simple, dichotomous terms. In other words, the dirty Reds are responsible for everything bad and we are responsible for everything good. This is a fine approach, as long as the Vietnamese are a homogeneous mass with low intelligence. But they're probably not. Hopefully our modern Army has more sophisticated methods for more sophisticated sections of the population. Nevertheless, we concede the effectiveness for the masses of the simple, black-and-white message—if the message can actually be received and understood by the Vietnamese.

But another problem which the Army admitted having is the lack of feedback in its mass communication attempts. In other words, they may not be getting the message across to the Vietnamese even though they broadcast all day long and drop millions of pamphlets. The crux of the matter is that they just don't know whether there is any real communication of ideas. The Army hesitantly agreed that transmission figures, such as broadcast or loud speaker hours or numbers of leaflets dropped in the jungles, have little value except for congressional committees.

The special warfare people seemed to base much of their thinking on the French experiences in Indo - China and Algeria and the British xprince in Malaya. But the French were a failure in Indo-China, Algeria is considerably different from Viet Nam and the British — unlike the Americans in Viet Nam — completely controlled Malaya.

Even though the Army agreed that communication was of primary importance in Viet Nam, they admitted they had no rigidly controlled studies of its effectiveness. We got the feeling that with the end of each officer's one year tour there would be a loss of whatever understanding he had intuitively gained from his personal experience. There seemed to be little provision for continuity and improvement of communications.

All of this leads us to believe that the special warfare school is not as effective as it might be. It seems to be a continual trial-and-error method which rarely results in meaningful conclusions.

A solution — or at least the possibility of a more rigidly controlled approach — to the problem may be in sight. This summer the Department of Defense is conducting a study of the communications problems in Viet Nam. For manpower they are drawing from the ranks of mass communications researchers in a number of universities. They would be wise also to look for experts in private industry where there is a great deal of time — and money — being put into the more technical aspects of communicating ideas.

We sympathize with the problems the Army is encountering. Our criticism is not of their objectives but of their methods. We hope they and the Defense Department will soon find better ones.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

SCIENCE AND NATURE — "The Ductility of Metals — Why Auto Fenders Bend" Professor Lawrance Slifkin, well-known "solid state" physicist at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, discusses forces which hold matter together — demonstrating some properties of metals in illustration of why some metals are soft and others, hard. James Wadsworth of the University at Chapel Hill is host-moderator for this series of programs on science — presenting weekly a guest expert in the natural or physical sciences.

THE RADICAL AMERICANS — NET "Who Teaches Them?" Cameras visit Rampart College in Larkspur, Colorado; Harding College, Searcy, Arkansas; The Free University of New York; a New Left School in Palo Alto, California; and others to provide a view of the schools in this country — both on the radical right and on the radical left. Posing the questions: Why do they offer these forms of indoctrination to students? What do they teach — and why do they feel it is essential to teach this?, the program presents interviews with Robert LeFevre, Dean of Rampart College; Dr. Clifton Ganus, President of Harding College; Dr. George Benson, Head of National Education Program; Allen Krebs, head of the Free University of New York; and Ed Richer, describing his frustrations in an attempt to found a Free University in the conservative southern town of Gainesville, Fla.

BLACK GOLD, PART I — This is the first of two programs produced on-location in Mt. Gilead, a small Ohio community where oil was discovered about five yeas ago. Documenting the changes in the little town since land speculators, prospectors and oil rig workers arrived and oil rigs were marching down main street, the program depicts the explosion in temperment of Mt. Gilead, resulting from the "oil boom," as life-long friends became bitter enemies overnight because some bought oil —and others did not. This program is part os a series of Readers' Digest Award-winners, made available to educational television stations.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS WITH FITZPATRICK — NET "The New Deal" Newsman Raymond P. Brandt joins political cartoonist Daniel Fitzpatrick and series host Joseph Passonneau to review the years of the New Deal, drawing on newsreel clips, personal reminiscences and Fitzpatrick's cartoons for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, published during that era. Reflecting on the urgency and excitement of the period in question, the three men discuss the character of the New Deal administrators and originators and the enduring effect Roosevelt had on the Presidency and on the nation.

State Dept. Affirms No Sanctuary Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — With air war over North Viet Nam expanding dramatically, the United States affirmed yesterday a policy of "no sanctuary" for any Comunist planes which fight in Viet Nam and seek safe haven in Red China.

The underscoring of policy amounted to a new warning to the Chinese Communists to consider the consequences of letting their territory become involved.

The North Vietnamese air war has been underoing creeping escalation for about ten days. It took a dramatic turn yesterday when a U. S. fighter shot down a MIG21 in the latest of a series of dogfights.

State Deprtment press officer Robert J. McCloskey was asked whether the Soviet-designed MIG had come into North Viet Nam from Chinese bases. He replied: "We have no information that would lead to such a conclusion."

As to whether plans could engage in combat in Viet Nam from bases in Red China and enjoy sanctuary from attack because of the international border, McCloskey declared:

"There is no sanctuary."

The escalation of the air war in recent days appears to have raised the risk of Red Chinese intervention — partly because North Viet Nam's force of MIG fighters is very small —about 15 MIG 21S — and partly because planes from Chinese bases piloted by Chinese could for a time at least move in and out of the battle readily and perhaps without exact identification.

U. S. oficials said in the past that this country would never allow again the kind of sanctuary which forces operating from China enjoyed in the Korean war 15 years ago. The U. S. did not attack across the Korean - Chinese boundary.

In an interview last July Secretary of State Dean Rusk said North Viet Nam could not be given sanctuary for its base of operations against South Viet Nam. He then made it clear he also applied the principle to Red China.

"The idea of the sanctuary is dead," Rusk said, "as far as this (North Vietnamese) situation is concerned, and that is something all of the others who may be supporting Hanoi must take fully into account."

Asked specifically about Red China, Rusk said the policy includes everybody "who elects to get into this war."

Dispatches from Saigon told of the destruction of the MIG 21 by a U. S. air-to-air Sidewinder missile in the latest episode in the areial step - up which began about 10 days ago.

Asked specifically about Red China, Rusk said the policy makers are watching the situation closely. Some feel it is too early to know definitely whether the North Vietnamese air force has definitely joined battle or whether the combat incidents of the last few days represent a tactical exploration, a feeling out of U. S. reaction, with basic decisions on the future of North Viet Nam's defense strategy yet to be made

One possible explanation for the commitment of MIG 21S to the battle is that North Viet Nam is reacting to close approaches by U. S. bombers to the Hanoi - Haiphong area.

In any case, what seems significant to long - range development of the conflit in North Viet Nam is that the North Vietnamese have a very limited number of planes for aerial combat and may well look to Communist China for active support in this sphere of the war.

When the first clash between U. S. supersonic jets and MIG 21S occurred last Saturday a U. S. spokesman in Saigon was asked whether the MIGs could have come from Red Chinese bases. He said, "We do not know where they came from."

In government quarters here the belief is that they came from North Vietnamese bases and were flown by North Vietnamese pilots. At the same time there is sharp awareness that an expanding war in the air could quickly raise the risk of Red Chinese interxvention on a hit - and - run strategy.

U. S. reports up to the shooting down of the communist fighter today have put the North Vietnamese supply of MIG 12S at about 15 and the force of older MIG15S MIG 17S at 50.

Usual American combat practice calls for knocking out bases from which enemy aircraft attacks originate.

DeRudder Dies Despite Operation

HOUSTON (AP) — Marcel DeRudder, 65, died today of a ruptured left lung after having lived nearly five days with a partial artificial heart.

The exact cause of the rupture was not determined but an autopsy report said DeRudder's heart, damaged by 25 years of illness, had begun healing by the time death came unexpectedly at 3:04 a.m. EST.

Mrs. Edna DeRudder, the widow, returned to her Westville, Ill., home with the body.

DeRudder never regained consciousness and the autopsy disclosed this was caused by a blood clot in a major brain artery. The long illness of the former coal miner had included numerous blood clot situations.

An artificial heart pump, technically known as a mechanical leftventricular bypass, was implanted in DeRudder's chest last Thursday during a six-hour operation performed by Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, world famous heart surgeon.

At an afternoon news conference, DeBakey said there was no relation between the complication which caused death and the heart pump.

"I am deeply grieved that we were unable to bring the patient through successfully," DeBakey told newsmen. "He developed complications over which we had no control."

The surgeon, who appeared worn and tired from his five-day vigil, said, "The pump did what we thought it would do. There was no evidence of any injury to the blood." Death would have resulted had the pump not been used, he said, adding that DeRudden was a "very high surgical risk."

DeBakey said the pump would be used in future cases such as DeRudder presented. "We would hope to use it in all cases of this type," he said.

Almost sleepless during his five days at DeRudder's bedside, the surgeon emphasized that the lung rupture had nothing to do with the pump.

Two tubes carrying blood to and from the pump actually were implanted but the artificial pump itself remined outside the chest so it could be removed later without major surgery.

The plastic pump was designed to take over part of the work of the left ventricle, the chamber that does most of the heart's pumping. DeBakey had planned to use the pump a week to 10 days in hopes it would give the damaged ventricle sufficient time to heal.

Consumer Lobbyists Meet In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — A rare breed of lobbyists — men and women speaking for consumers — deployed in strength on Capitol Hill yesterday, plugging for "Truth in Lending" and "Truth in Packaging" legislation.

Before buttonholing congressmen, they met in a downtown hotel in the "Consumers Assembly, 1966." Delegates to this assembly came from consumer organizations, women's clubs, labor unions and others.

Wistfully but in a never-say-die spirit, Sen. Paul H. Douglas, D-Ill., told them that something along the lines of his "Truth in Lending" bill is sure to pass some day, though it has been "buried for years in a sub-sus-basement" in Congress.

Mainly this bill would compel a lender, or installment plan seller, to tell the consumer the true annual rate of interest, based on the unpaid balance.

For example, Douglas mentioned the case of a woman who paid 168 per cent interest on a $200 bed. Homicides have resulted from the desperation born of unconscionable credit burdens, he said.

Arrayed against his bill, he said, are auto dealers, personal finance companies, department stores, mail order houses, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

But Douglas said:

"I can't believe American industry or retail sales have to be founded on a lack of truth, which in some cases amounts to deception."

Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., said there's hope this session for packaging legislation, designed to help the housewife through "confusion in the supermarket." The regulatory bill he sponsors is aimed at hard-to-read fractional weight and measures, odd-size packages, slack fills and cents-off sales.

Jerry Cohen, counsel for a Senate antitrust and monopoly subcommittee, told the consumers' lobbyists it's hard to dramatize the need for packaging legislation.

He told a story of a speaker at a consumers' gathering who was denouncing a baby food manufacturer who had taken a quarter of an ounce out of his jars. A man in the audience broke in:

"What's the fuss about a quarter of an ounce? My baby dribbles more than that."

But a woman economist in the audience came to the speaker's rescue, saying:

"The baby is being deprived of 15 pounds of food a year. Moreover, the dribble factor remains constant."

Indonesians Demonstrate Against Soviet Center And Chinese Consulate

JAKARTA (AP) — Indonesians moved against both the Russians and Red Chinese yesterday, blockading the Soviet cultural center in Jakarta and seizing China's consulate in Surabaya.

About 30 youths from KAMI, the University students' action front, surrounded the cultural center in Jakarta to keep Indonesians from seeing a Lenin exhibit. Sunday they had threatened to sack the center.

Indonesians of Chinese descent seized the Red Chinese consulate in Surabaya, a city in East Java, Antara News Agency reported. They were demonstrating their hostility to Red China, which has been denouncing the new Indonesian regime.

Students said they would not attack the center but would instead bar all Indonesians from entering it. Their action was part of the anti-Communist drive under way throughout Indonesia.

Trouble began Monday afternoon when a 15-man student delegation presented an ultimatum to the cultural center. The students said the movies and displays on Lenin must be stopped within 12 hours. If not, "The people will crush you" they said.

The students sent in a delegation Tuesday to demand again that the Lenin display be closed, but the Soviet cultural official refused. This was the first action in Indonesia against the Soviet Union, which lavished arms on the old regime.

"We will respect the diplomatic immunity of the culturral center," said a student, "but we cannot guarantee the safety of any Indonesian employes working in the building.

Auto Industry Endorses Federal Safety Standards For Manufacture Of Cars

WASHINGTON (AP) — The automobile industry bowed today to critics inside and out of Congress and called for "a creative partnership" with government to develop mandatory federal safety standards for all new cars.

Endorsing for the most part a bill recommended by the Johnson Administraion, automotive spokesman John S. Bugas urged it be improved "so that it provides effective and forceful governmental machinery for setting vehicle safety setandards without delay."

Bugas, vice president of Ford Motor Co., was flanked by executives of the three other auto manufacturers as he outlined the revised industry position to the House Commerce Committee in a jammed hearing room.

"Even where the principal U. S. manufacturers cooperate to formulate and observe a satisfactory voluntary standard for a major safety characteristic of appropriated concern to the Secretary (of Commerce), we believe the Secretary should establish this voluntary standard as a legally binding federal standard," Bugas said.

Just three weeks ago today, he told the Senate Commerce Committee "We can do this by voluntary acton, with you looking over our shoulders."

After he testified today, Bugas told newsmen that the industry's "modification of views" resulted from objections expressed to this viewpoint.

"Some of the objections appear to have validity," he said, adding, "We have made a very serious effort to meet the objections and we think we have."

Rep. Harley O. Staggers, the white - thatched West Virginia Democrat who recently assumed the committee chairmanship, told a reporter the industry backdown was "inevitable" in light of reaction to its earlier position.

In opening the hearing, Staggers said, "Everybody knows the blame for accidents is widespread. What we want to do is to cut down on accidents, not put the blame on anybody."

After three congressmen had presented appeals for action on auto safety, Bugas read part of an summarized the rest of a 64-page statement outlining the industry's position.
